Also, petition of Smith & Holden, of New York, relative to Senate bill 2269, to establish a uniform barrel for all fruits, etc.; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. O'LEARY: Petitions of Gustav Holzhauer, of Middle Village, N. Y., and Francis J. Heil, of Ramblerville, Long Island, N. Y., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of the Philadelphia Bourse, favoring the postponement to the next session of Congress of all bills for the regulation of business; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of 52 citizens of Jamestown; 300 citizens of Pawtucket; the Hope Congregational Church, of Providence; the Rhode Island Baptist State Convention, Providence; and sundry citizens of Providence, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Rhode Island, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Providence (R. I.) Typographical Union, favoring Bartlett-Bacon anti-injunction bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REED: Petitions of 800 citizens of Concord, 21 citizens of Brentwood Corner, 100 citizens of Penacock, 50 citizens of Seabrook, 36 citizens of Wolfeboro Falls, 150 citizens of Laconia, 120 citizens of Franklin, 130 citizens of Somersworth, 200 citizens of Rochester, 60 citizens of Gilford, 50 citizens of Manchester, 31 citizens of Fremont, and 20 citizens of Glencliff, all in the State of New Hampshire, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin: Petition of 6,930 citizens of the sixth congressional district of Wisconsin, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCULLY: Petitions of 160 citizens of Stelton, 40 citizens of Tuckerton, 40 citizens of New Brunswick, 93 citizens of Asbury Park, 110 citizens of Point Pleasant, 38 citizens of Bayhead, and sundry citizens of Monmouth and Ocean Counties, all in the State of New Jersey, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SLOAN: Petition of John Stohl, of Stromsburg, Nebr., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Mrs. S. W. Avery, Mrs. S. M. Cole, Mrs. J. O. De Land, and Mrs. Mary M. Robbins, of Fairmont; Mrs. A. Grace Hamer, of Scottsbluff; J. M. Chapman, W. A. Greenslit, Frank B. Ludden, H. A. Tobey, Mrs. H. A. Tobey, Elizabeth Coleman, Mrs. Ellen Klinger, and J. C. Coleman, of Surprise; and Mrs. R. I. Cross, of Geneva, all in the State of Nebraska, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STAFFORD: Petition of 23,638 citizens of the fourth congressional district of Wisconsin, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of E. T. Hughes, secretary of Duluth Typographical Union, No. 136, and others, urging favorable consideration and passage of the bills H. R. 1873 and S. 927, the Bartlett-Bacon anti-injunction bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of Pennington County, Minn., favoring passage of House bill 12928, retaining section 6, to amend the postal and civil-service laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petitions of 40 citizens of Angus, Minn., and 25 citizens of Euclid, Minn., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of J. N. Huddleson and others, of Pennington County, Minn., against House bill 7826, to provide for closing barber shops in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TEN EYCK (by request): Resolutions adopted by the South Presbyterian Church, of Albany, N. Y., representing 255 members, and by the Baraca Class, representing 18 young men, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), resolutions adopted by the St. Luke's Methodist Episcopal Church, of Albany, N. Y., representing 375 members, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), resolutions adopted by the First Reformed Sunday School of Albany, N. Y., representing 169 members, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), resolutions from the official board of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, of Albany, N. Y., representing 780 members, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VOLLMER: Petition of Albert Hermann, W. W. Schlichting, Louis Eggert, A. B. Parkhurst, and 78 other citizens of Iowa, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WALLIN: Petitions of various churches in the thirtieth New York congressional district, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of Harry Spilka, of Alger, Ohio, protesting against the adoption of House joint resolution 168, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of David Hosler and 42 other citizens of Findlay, Ohio, protesting against the adoption of House joint resolution 168, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WINGO: Petitions of sundry citizens of Sebastian County, Ark., and officers of Local 55 of Bartenders of Arkansas, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOODRUFF: Petition of various voters of Alpena, Arenac, Ogemaw, and Bay Counties, all in the State of Michigan, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, April 19, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Clerk read the following communication:

APRIL 18, 1914.

Hon. SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House.

I hereby designate Mr. DOREMUS, of Michigan, to preside on Sunday, April 19, at the ceremonies in honor of the late Senator CHANDLER, of Michigan.

CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

Mr. DOREMUS assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we meet here on this peaceful Sabbath day under the dome of our great Capitol in memory of one of Michigan's illustrious sons, whose statue has been presented to the Nation. Long may his memory live, and longer yet his deeds inspire those who shall come after us to patriotism and loyalty to the principles of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness for all men, of all climes, of all times, that the flag of our Union may be upheld in peace or in war now and forever in the spirit of righteousness, truth, and justice, and Thine be the praise, in His name. Amen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

STATUE OF ZACHARIAH CHANDLER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 436.

Resolved, That exercises appropriate for the reception and acceptance from the State of Michigan of the statue of Zachariah Chandler, erected in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, be made the special order for Sunday, April 19, 1914.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves the adoption of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 36.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the governor, and through him to the people of Michigan, for the statue of ZACHARIAH CHANDLER, whose name is so honorably identified with the history of that State, and of the United States.

Resolved, That this work of art is accepted in the name of the Nation and assigned a place in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, already set aside by act of Congress for statues of eminent citizens, and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, these statues commemorate in stone and bronze the qualities that have made men great in the flesh.

What were the qualities of Zachariah Chandler that single him out from the long roll of Michigan's distinguished dead?

It is not because he was a United States Senator and a successful business man that his statue is here.

Statues are not erected to public office nor to business success. Nobody stops to inquire how much of an estate Cæsar or Shakespeare left.

A public place is only an opportunity. In it a small man looks smaller, just as a small statue on a big pedestal looks smaller by contrast.

Chandler died a rich Senator; but if that summed up Chandler, no statue would be erected to him.

If you pick out a man in an assembly of distinguished men and ask who he is, you are given a name, and the name tells you who he is, because the name carries with it a reputation—that is, the name stands for something.

The name Zach Chandler stands for honesty, sincerity, resolution, courage, convictions, and fighting patriotism.

And it stands for something more than these qualities; it stands for the thing we call personality.

There are eminent men in public life who keep their emotions in cold storage and arrive at conclusions by a process of cold reasoning accelerated by expediency.

Chandler's intellect was fired by the intensity of his convictions.

Chandler was sincere. It is hard to beat an accomplished, unscrupulous, versatile, and experienced hypocrite; but Chandler had in him a fierce, uncompromising intolerance for shams that made hypocrisy shrivel up.

I have a theory that if a man carries around with him the internal consciousness of being a sham, he will eventually cave in.

Chandler was sound to the core and stood the test of every emergency and of every responsibility.

Chandler was not a genius. He was a common man in an uncommon degree.

Congress goes on forever, and now and then grinds out some reputations, few of which survive; but Chandler stands out against the background of years as one of a group of men of a critical time uncompromisingly devoted to the Union and to freedom.

THE PURITAN STRAIN.

Zachariah Chandler was born at Bedford, N. H., December 10, 1813, of a line of Puritan ancestors.

Maurice Low, in his book, The American People, says:

> The Bible was the Constitution of the Puritan. * * * Whether he worked or played, whether he sat in meeting house or in the general court, whether he tilled his fields, or snatched up his musket at the sound of an Indian alarm, wherever he went or whatever he did, he took his creed with him, for it was the criterion of right living, the benison of Divine grace.

Of the founders of New England Lowell says:

> Faith in God, faith in man, faith in work—this is the short formula in which we may sum up the teachings of the founders of New England, a creed simple enough for this life and the next.

From these people, into the fiber of whose being was woven the Puritan strain—from these people of sinewy frames, iron wills, keen eyes, steady hands and bold hearts; from these people, nurtured by a rough and stubborn soil, fronted by "a stern and rock-bound coast," came Zachariah Chandler, afterwards known as the great war Senator of Michigan.

He worked on a farm summers and went to district school winters.

He had two winters of academic instruction, taught school one term, worked in the store of Kendrick & Foster, of Nashua, N. H., in 1833, and in the fall of that year moved to Detroit and went into the dry goods business.

He was then 20 years old, tall, gaunt, awkward and wiry, of plain manners, plain speech, and great energy.

He worked hard, slept in the store, and lived on $300 a year.

His business expanded from a local retail trade to a State-wide wholesale trade and as his business widened he commenced and continued the custom of visiting his customers throughout the State once a year.

In this way he gained an intimate knowledge of the resources of the State and a wide acquaintance with the people, which contributed to his success in business and in politics.

MICHIGAN TERRITORY.

Men are affected by their environment—by the stage on which they play their parts.

The year Chandler came to Detroit it was announced that a stage line would be established by which travelers could go from Detroit to Chicago in five days. We run through now in about six hours.

Michigan Territory, as defined by Congress in 1834, comprehended what is now Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, the east half of South Dakota, and the east two-thirds of North Dakota.

By the census of 1830 the civilized population of this vast domain was less than 33,000.

Then there were only 23 miles of railroad in the United States, and there was not a gas-light, electric-light, telegraph, telephone, or corporate combination in the world.

The Niles Register reported in 1834 that the arrivals in Detroit had reached 960 in one day and that "the streets were full of wagons, loading and departing for the West."

Statues are milestones, which tell us how far and in what direction we have traveled.

The formative period of our political history runs approximately from the Articles of Confederation down to 1820. The rise and fall of the Whig Party covers the years from 1820 to 1856, and the period of Civil War and reconstruction runs from 1856 to 1876.

COMPROMISE AND THE END OF COMPROMISE.

Events do not spring up accidentally. History has its premises and its conclusions.

The Missouri compromise of 1820 forever prohibited slavery north of 36 degrees and 30 minutes north latitude in all the Louisiana Territory.

In 1844 Texas became a State, and in all the discussion of Clay's omnibus bill of 1850 there was no suggestion that its compromises were intended to supersede or in any way to change the Missouri compromise line.

The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, gave us Texas, California, and New Mexico, which then included Arizona, and the Rio Grande became part of our southwestern boundary.

In 1849 no policy had been agreed upon concerning slavery in our Territories, and a smoldering excitement possessed the public mind.

The Free Soil spirit was growing stronger in the North, pro-slavery aggressiveness was growing stronger in the South, and the controversy had been inflamed by the finding of gold in California in 1848.

It was under these conditions that Mr. Clay offered his three compromise measures.

The first was the so-called "omnibus bill," which provided for the admission of California as a State, the organization of Utah and New Mexico as Territories without any restriction as to slavery, the adjustment of the Texas boundary line, and the payment of $10,000,000 to Texas for her claims on a part of New Mexico; the second was a fugitive-slave law; and the third prohibited the slave trade in the District of Columbia.

After these compromises, notwithstanding the irritation of the fugitive-slave law, and notwithstanding the appearance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," a quiet settled upon the people like a lull before a storm.

In his message of December 5, 1853, Franklin Pierce congratulated the country on the "restored sense of repose in the public mind," and within a month Stephen A. Douglas, chairman of the Senate Committee on the Territories, with the approval of the President, reported a bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska, which was recommitted and reappeared as a bill to organize two Territories—Kansas and Nebraska.

It provided that all laws of the United States should be extended to the proposed Territories, except the compromise section of "the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri;" which, being inconsistent with the principles of the Clay compromise measures, was declared inoperative and void.

It declared that "the true intent and meaning of the bill" was not to legislate slavery into or exclude it from any State or Territory, but to leave the people free to form and regulate their own domestic institutions in their own way, subject to the Constitution of the United States; and finally it provided that the fugitive-slave law should extend to the Territories.

This bill removed what Sumner called "the landmarks of freedom."

In the white heat of intense feeling the people began to divide on the issue of slavery, and the fight for the soil of Kansas and Nebraska hurried the Nation on to civil war.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND CHANDLER.

The Kansas-Nebraska bill became a law May 31, 1854, and 36 days afterwards the Republican Party came into being "under the Oaks" at Jackson, Mich., as the incarnation of an aroused national conscience.

Chandler was among the leading spirits of that meeting.

He had been elected mayor of Detroit in 1851, and had been nominated and defeated for governor of Michigan in 1852. Like Saul, the son of Kish, the spirit of prophecy had come upon him, and he had turned from his own business to the business of his country.

In the campaign of 1854 Democratic newspapers called him in derision "the traveling agent of the new Abolition Party."

The days from fifty-four to fifty-six were radical, robust, resolute days in Michigan, and Chandler was everywhere in the midst of the fight.

The term of Lewis Cass as Senator from Michigan expired March 4, 1857, and Chandler was elected to succeed him.

The Senate met in special session March 4. Senators took the oath of office in groups of four, and Chandler was sworn in with Jefferson Davis.

Twenty-two years afterwards, while the wounds of war were not yet healed, while yet the fierce antagonisms of warring sections were not yet cooled, aroused by fulsome eulogies of Davis in the Senate, Chandler recalled that first oath of office and in one of the most impressive speeches of his lifetime, charged that "with treason in his heart and perjury on his lips" Jefferson Davis "took the oath to sustain the Government that he meant to overthrow."

Chandler entered the Senate with an intense hatred of slavery and without an ounce of compromise in him.

He entered the Senate at a time when the followers of John C. Calhoun saw that the only alternative was extermination of slavery or secession.

His first prepared address was on the Le Compton constitution.

In 1857 the Dred Scott decision further fed the antislavery flame, and a year later the whole country was listening with intense interest for news from the prairies of Illinois, where the Lincoln-Douglas debates were day after day reducing the issues involved in a conflict of ideas within "a house divided against itself" to clearly defined terms beyond the power of peaceful arbitration.

THE QUESTION.

Chandler led the fight for Lincoln in Michigan in 1860, and Michigan gave Lincoln a majority of more than 23,000 over Douglas.

Forty-eight hours after Lincoln was elected President the Legislature of South Carolina called a State convention which voted South Carolina out of the Union, and the newspapers of South Carolina began to publish news from the rest of the country under the head of "Foreign intelligence."

As our Republic had widened westward under the Constitution as it was before the arbitrament of war had been framed into constitutional amendments, it had become more and more apparent that no arbitrary line of latitude could permanently define the frontier between right and wrong within an undivided nation.

No doctrine of the rights of States, no Missouri compromise, no Clay compromise, no Dred Scott decision could quiet in the minds of men the eternal, daily question of human rights.

The spirit that inspired that question was in the air. It sat down at every council board. It entered into and took possession of men, and took unto itself such names as Phillips, Lovejoy, Garrison, and John Brown. It would not down.

It teased men till they invented sophisms to refute it. It set families at variance. It set pulpits at variance. It lighted the camp fires of armies, whose contentions shook the continent.

It mowed men down with "the level hail of death."

It added to the vocabulary of war such names as Donelson, Shiloh, Gettysburg, and the Wilderness.

Long before it had sought out a lonely frontier cabin and presided at the birth of Abraham Lincoln. It made him its instrument; and five days after Appomattox his spirit, liberated by the hand of an assassin from its thrall of tremendous responsibility, took its flight in the golden dawn of a new day, and his fame passed into immortality.

WAR AND THE LAST CHAPTER.

Chandler was a member of the Committee on the Conduct of the War and was one of Lincoln's friends and advisers when he was "carrying the Constitution through the wilderness of fear" without precedent or parallel to govern or direct him.

When the whirlwinds of passion were turned loose and the clouds that lowered over the Republic were red with the flames of war he never thought of compromise.

Compromise had no place in his temperament. He never admitted the possibility of defeat. He denounced every suggestion of peace except the peace of an undivided Nation swept clean of slavery.

He visited the sick and the wounded in the hospitals, and no soldier in trouble ever applied to him in vain.

Chandler was at the meridian of his mental powers when Lincoln died and the war ended. He lived 14 years after that in the constant service of his country.

He helped to pass the reconstruction acts. He voted "guilty" on the impeachment of Johnson.

He believed in protection to American labor and American industry and voted for the Morrill tariff of 1861.

He believed in the dignity of labor and defended it.

He stood for sound money and national honesty and considered the public debt a sacred obligation.

He voted to redeem our paper money and pay our bonds in gold.

He voted for the resumption of specie payments against a powerful public sentiment for inflation, saying, "We need one thing besides more money, and that is better money."

He was defeated in 1875, succeeded by Christiancy, and appointed Secretary of the Interior.

The Interior Department had fallen into disrepute as sheltering fraud, corruption, and incompetency. Chandler brought to bear the resources of a trained business experience and cleaned it out.

Nature keeps books and makes her marks on human faces. Chandler's face was a face of resolution.

He was a leader of men. He was without cant and without hypocrisy. He had no patience with the cheap and sterile kind of politics which is willing to ignore the truth to gain political advantage.

He went straight to the point without equivocation.

His vocabulary knew no refinement of casuistry.

As an orator he was plain, direct, blunt, powerful.

He was not the kind of statesman, too common now, to whom noise and headlines mean distinction.

He was big in every way. He had his faults, but the prowlers and the scavengers, the searchers of the garbage heaps of history for soiled and tainted scraps with which to discredit the dead, have never dragged to light an unwholesome thing about Chandler.

He died at Chicago the night of October 31, 1879, in the midst of a hot campaign.

He came to the Senate of a Nation with slavery embedded in its Constitution and he left it a Nation of free workers.

He came to the Senate of a Nation divided by sectional interests; he left it a united Nation.

He came to the Senate of a Nation which doubted the strength of its own Constitution; he left it with a Constitution established as the fundamental law of an indestructible Union symbolized by one flag, whose stripes are red with the blood of patriots shed that its stars might shine together. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, in 1864 the old hall of the House of Representatives was opened for the reception of the statues of two citizens of each State "illustrious for their historic renown or for distinguished civic or military services." Since then 43 great Americans have been selected for remembrance, and every time I go through Statuary Hall and look at the heroic figures of Lewis Cass and Zachariah Chandler I am more proud than ever that I am a citizen of Michigan. Among the millions of her people, living and dead, these two tremendous characters stand preeminent.

Cass was enough older than Chandler so that he was governor of the Territory of Michigan the year Chandler was born in New Hampshire. Cass went to Michigan in the days of the Indians, whose flint arrow heads the farmers around Detroit still pick from the furrows in the fall and spring plowing. His masterful dealings with those woodland warriors, in connection with Gov. Clark, of the Missouri Territory, ended the record of Indian supremacy.

Like Chandler after him, Cass was long a Senator of the United States; like him also a Cabinet officer; and in 1844 came within six votes of receiving a majority of the Democratic national convention for the presidential nomination, which finally went to James K. Polk. Cass was succeeded in the United States Senate by the most illustrious figure in the political history of Michigan, whose statue we proudly accept to-day and to whose career we may now give a brief glance.

The record of this day's proceedings will fully set forth the many steps of Chandler's progress and the incidents of his life, beginning on a New England farm, where comfort rewarded cheerful toil; where there were no slavish repinings against the cold snow of winter or the hardness of the soil, but a winning battle with ax and plow that wrested from the rocky New Hampshire hills a plenty of warmth and food and shelter and money in the bank.

And then the sturdy boy, with a thousand dollars in his pocket, went West to the Territory that was so soon to knock successfully for the opening door of statehood.

When young Chandler landed in Detroit, in 1833, the fur trader had scarcely departed. On the long river-front street the white palings of the picket fences still stood in front of the half doors of the old French habitants. The general store which was opened by the pink-cheeked young giant was a trade innovation. And so he started on his prosperous way, first as retailer, then as a wholesaler with a State-wide list of customers, and every customer a friend. In hard times he gave longer credits than any rival would or could, and afterwards boasted that he never lost a dollar by it. As he said near the end of his life, in a public speech:

I think I know the people of Michigan as well as any man in it, and I know they are honest people.

His steady commercial success was the more remarkable, because in the early part of his career the State of Michigan, then the home of the "wildcat" bank, passed through a cyclone of financial disaster which left its mark on nearly every man who had anything to lose. In the Greenback craze of 1876 and 1878 Chandler recalled with telling effect in some of the most effective political speeches ever delivered in the State the memory of those times.

Detroit was one of the principal termini of the "underground railroad" for the landing of escaping slaves into Canada, and Chandler's New England sympathies made him an active supporter of that cause. The Republican Party was born in 1854 under the oaks at Jackson, and Chandler was there. For the next 25 years, until his death, no name on the bright pages of our party's great history shed more continuous luster than that of Zachariah Chandler.

On March 4, 1857, Mr. Chandler took his seat in the Senate, where, with an intermission of four years—during part of which he was Grant's Secretary of the Interior and chairman of the Republican national committee—he remained until the day of his death.

Those who heard Chandler's public speaking will never forget it. He had a tall, commanding figure, a resonant voice. Abraham Lincoln himself could not surpass him in clearness of expression, and he had a power of statement that was remarkable. In his first speech in the Senate he said:

The old women of the north who have been in the habit of crying out "the Union is in danger" have passed off the stage. They are dead. Their places will never be supplied; but in their stead we have a race of men who are devoted to this Union and devoted to it as Jefferson and the fathers made it and bequeathed it to us. Every aggression has been submitted to by the race who have gone off the stage. They are ready to compromise any principle, anything. The men of the present day are a different race. They will compromise nothing. They are Union-loving men; they love all portions of the Union; they will sacrifice anything but principle to save it. They will, however, make no sacrifice of principle. Never; never! No more compromises will ever be submitted to to save the Union. If it is worth saving, it will be saved. The only way that we shall save it and make it permanent as the everlasting hills will be by restoring it to the original foundations upon which the fathers placed it. I trust in God civil war will never come; but if it should come, upon their heads, and theirs alone, will rest the responsibility for every drop of blood that may flow.

The idea foreshadowed in this brief extract was the guiding thought in Mr. Chandler's mind through all the years that followed. Cato was no more fixed in his idea that Carthage must be destroyed than Chandler was rock-bedded in the determination that the Union must be preserved. In 1862 in a Senate speech he denounced Gen. McClellan for inefficiency, and it was probably this speech which resulted in Grant's transfer. Chandler made the motion that created the Senate Committee on the Conduct of the War. He was long the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and the St. Clair Flats Canal, the first great improvement of the navigation of the Great Lakes, is as truly a monument to him for his help to the water transportation of this country as are the jetties of the Mississippi a monument to Eads.

But it was his overwhelming love of country, his unbounded Americanism, that made him great and that has finally placed him on yonder pedestal to stand there as long as this Government endures. There was a wideness to his patriotism like the wideness of the sea. His pride in the State of Michigan was pride in it as a part of the United States of America. He was a bitter partisan, as bitter in his defiance of the foes of national unity as a frontiersman defending his family against an Indian attack. The last speech he ever made in the Senate was so characteristic that, as a part of these proceedings and as a reminder of the spirit of those times, I quote it entire. It was on a bill relating to Mexican War pensions. There is as much war history in it as in any equal number of words ever uttered. He said:

Mr. President, 22 years ago to-morrow, in the old Hall of the Senate, now occupied by the Supreme Court of the United States, I, in company with Mr. Jefferson Davis, stood up and swore before Almighty God that I would support the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Jefferson Davis came from the Cabinet of Franklin Pierce into the Senate of the United States and took the oath with me to be faithful to this Government. During four years I sat in this body with Mr. Jefferson Davis and saw the preparations going on from day to day for the overthrow of this Government. With treason in his heart and perjury upon his lips he took the oath to sustain the Government that he meant to overthrow.

Sir, there was method in that madness. He, in cooperation with other men from his section and in the Cabinet of Mr. Buchanan, made careful preparation for the event that was to follow. Your armies were scattered all over this broad land, where they could not be used in an emergency; your fleets were scattered wherever the winds blew and water was found to float them, where they could not be used to put down rebellion; your Treasury was depleted until your bonds, bearing 6 per cent, principal and interest payable in coin, were sold for 88 cents on the dollar for current expenses, and no buyers. Preparations were carefully made. Your arms were sold under an apparently innocent clause in an Army bill providing that the Secretary of War might, at his discretion, sell such arms as he deemed it for the interest of the Government to sell.

Sir, 18 years ago last month I sat in these Halls and listened to Jefferson Davis delivering his farewell address, informing us what our constitutional duties to this Government were, and then he left and entered into the rebellion to overthrow the Government that he had sworn to support. I remained here, sir, during the whole of that terrible rebellion. I saw our brave soldiers by thousands and hundreds of thousands, aye, I might say, millions, pass through to the theater of war, and I saw their shattered ranks return; I saw steamboat after steamboat and railroad train after railroad train arrive with the maimed and the wounded; I was with my friend from Rhode Island, Mr. Burnside, when he commanded the Army of the Potomac, and saw piles of legs and arms that made humanity shudder; I saw the widow and the orphan in their homes, and heard the weeping and wailing of those who had lost their dearest and their best. Mr. President, I little thought at that time that I should live to hear in the Senate of the United States eulogies upon Jefferson Davis, living—a living rebel eulogized on the floor of the Senate of the United States. Sir, I am amazed to hear it; and I can tell the gentlemen on the other side that they little know the spirit of the North when they come here at this day and with bravado on their lips utter eulogies upon a man whom every man, woman, and child in the North believes to have been a double-dyed traitor to his Government.

In the fall of 1879 there was a State campaign in Ohio, in which Senator Chandler took an active part. He made a speech at Sandusky on Thursday before the election, and then took a flying trip to Chicago, where on Saturday night, October 31, he delivered an address in closing the local campaign there—an address which contained one passage that was prophetic, though he could not know that it was his dying declaration. In full vigor and with a ringing voice he said:

It has become the custom of late to restrict the lines of citizenship, and in the Senate and Congress of the United States it is denied that there is such a thing as national citizenship. To-night I address you, fellow citizens of Chicago, in a broad sense, as fellow citizens of the United States of America. * * * We have a matter under consideration to-night vastly more important than all the financial questions that can be presented to you, and that is, Are you or are you not a Nation? We had supposed for generations that we were a Nation. In 1857 treason raised its head upon the floors of Congress. They said, "Do this or we will destroy your Government. Fail to do that and we will destroy your Government." One of them repeated this threat to old Ben Wade, and he straightened himself up and said, "Don't delay it on my account."

When Abraham Lincoln took the oath of office there was nothing to protect the national life. Yet with all these discouragements staring us in the face, the Republican Party undertook to save your Government. We revived your credit; we created navies, raised armies, fought battles, carried the war to a successful issue, and, finally, when the rebellion surrendered at Appomattox, they surrendered to a Government. They admitted that they had submitted their heresy to the arbitrament of arms, and they surrendered to the Government of the United States of America. * * *

They had forfeited all their property; we gave it back to them. We found them naked, and we clothed them. They were without the rights of citizenship, and we restored to them those rights. We took them to our arms as brethren, believing that they had repented of their sins. * * *

The Republican Party is the only party that ever existed that has not one solitary unfulfilled pledge left. I defy its worst enemies to name a single pledge it ever gave to the people who created it which is not to-day a fulfilled and established fact. If we should die to-day or to-morrow, our children's children to the twentieth generation would boast that their ancestors belonged to the old Republican Party that saved the Nation and wiped slavery from its escutcheon. * * *

Take the smallest ship that floats, mark her "U. S. A.," raise to her peak the Stars and Stripes, the flag of this glorious Union, and start her around the world, and there is not a fort or ship of war of any nation on God's footstool that would not receive her with a national salute. We took your Government when despised and raised it to this high position among the nations of the earth. And yet we are told that we ought to die. I tell you that the mission of the Republican Party is not ended; furthermore, that it has just begun; and, furthermore, that it will never end until you and I, Mr. Chairman, can start from the Canadian border and travel to the Gulf of Mexico, making black Republican speeches wherever we please and vote a black Republican ticket wherever we gain a residence, and do it with exactly the same safety that a rebel can travel throughout the North, stopping wherever he has a mind to, and running for judge in any city.

An ex-Confederate officer was a candidate for a city judgeship at the election to be held in Chicago on the following Tuesday, and the newspaper report of the speech states that this local reference was received with such applause and laughter that it was three or four minutes before Mr. Chandler could proceed. He spoke for more than an hour, and then went to his hotel. The next morning he was dead.

Mr. Speaker, Michigan Republicans idolize the memory of Zachariah Chandler. They love to think that he and men like him founded the Republican Party. They glory in his dying words: If we die to-day or to-morrow, our children's children to the twentieth generation will boast that their ancestors belonged to the party that saved the Nation and wiped slavery from its escutcheon.

And let those whom it may concern give heed to his other words: Take the smallest ship that floats, mark her "U. S. A.," raise to her peak the Stars and Stripes, and let not a nation on God's footstool dare refuse to receive her with a national salute.

Chandler stood for the protection of Americans, not only at home but on the farthest shore of the most savage country where government is the least. He believed the United States should always and everywhere be the bravest, the foremost, and the best. In the Senate with him were Blaine and Conkling and Edmunds, and a galaxy of names that will shine forever like the blazing stars of a Michigan winter night; and he was in the very foremost rank. His star will never set.

The history of my State is replete with illustrious names. Where in the traditions of any forest race was there ever a more admirable barbarian than Pontiac, whose home was long on the beautiful island opposite Detroit? Where in the history of armed conflict is there a more gallant name than that of Custer? Where in the annals of the law have there been more just or learned judges than Cooley and Campbell and Christiancy? Any one of these, or a score of others, might have graced yonder Hall, and any son of Michigan would have pointed to the statue with pride. But this selection has been wisely made. We love the memory of Chandler, a citizen of the whole United States, and we intrust his enduring marble to a nation's perpetual care. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. J. M. C. SMITH].

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker—

> The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
> Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years;
> But thou shall flourish in immortal youth,
> Unhurt amid the mass of elements,
> The wreck of matter and the crush of worlds.
> (Addison in Cato; Irish.)

I am in complete accord with the spirit and sentiment that prompted the good people of the State of Michigan to have constructed a life-sized marble statue of Zachariah Chandler and give it a permanent resting place in the Capitol of the Nation. The States do well to thus give public recognition to the worth and services of their great men; and there can be no more fitting monument to honor the memory of our illustrious deceased citizen, Zachariah Chandler, than the marble statue so dedicated and placed in the Capitol of his country.

Mr. Speaker, I fully realize that no words of mine can add to the fame or name of Chandler. His life work and character far exceeds any eulogy which I can hope to pronounce on this distinguished and eminent former citizen of the State of Michigan, whose memory we this day commemorate. He was illustrious in life, and his deeds are so interwoven with the progress and material welfare of our State and Nation that to recall the one is but to relate the other. He lived at a time when the foundation of our Republic was shaken by internal strife and war; but he also lived to see the shrine of freedom restored and the bond of unity established between the States which never shall be broken while brother shall greet brother. In the work of preserving and restoring the Union he stood in the front rank and never faltered, fully believing that—

> He who fights for his country fights for all things and all things living bless him.

No man was better known in Michigan than Mr. Chandler in his lifetime. He was prominent in public and private life. He was an upright, honorable citizen and a constructive statesman. He lived at a time when our country needed strong men. He was of commanding presence, strong, firm, and resolute. He was, above all, extremely patriotic, and his whole soul was blended with the upbuilding and prosperity of his country. He chose Michigan for his home and was a central figure in its material development. Were he living to-day, he would be much pleased with its great progress.

In exalting the deeds of our departed friends we often overlook the transactions that go to make up the details of their everyday life and give prominence only to those which connect themselves with greater events.

Zachariah Chandler was born in the city of Bedford, N. H., December 10, 1813. His ancestry was of that list of New England's earliest and best citizens which aided so much in preparing the way for the form of government which we enjoy to-day. His father's family lived on a part of a grant of land made by the General Court of Massachusetts to the soldiers who served in the Narragansett War. In early life he worked upon his father's farm. His education was completed in the little red brick schoolhouse in Bedford and neighboring academies of Pembroke and Derry. In 1833, at the age of 20 years, with that great foresight and great judgment exercised by him in after life, he became a resident of Detroit, Mich., where he lived until the time of his sudden demise in the city of Chicago on the evening of November 1, 1879, at the age of 66 years.

When he first came to Michigan it was a Territory of 250,000 inhabitants; now it has a population of more than 3,000,000. Detroit at the time of his arrival had a population of 2,500; now it is a city of 600,000. At that time Michigan was a wilderness, but had played a prominent part in the early life of the Nation. It was the home of the earliest settlers of the great Northwest who suffered from innumerable raids and conflicts. It was the scene of conflict between great European nations. Historians tell us that in 1781 the Spanish standard was hoisted at Fort St. Joseph near the present site of Niles, and the flags of France and England alternated and were followed by ours. The sturdy pioneers passing through the Great Lakes, stretching like vast seas along the State border, found the forest swarming with wild life and the waters teeming with fish of choicest kind. The land was clothed with magnificent verdure. Indian trails and beaten paths interlaced the forest, and large tracts of open space were covered with flowers of variegated hue. The timid deer, the sluggish bruin, and plumed fowl found ready and safe retreat among the tall bushes and flowers. The wild pigeon filled the air like clouds above the trees. With the coming of the white settlers the Indians abandoned their hunting grounds, but not without much resistance and encounters which filled the early history of our State with constant conflict. Slowly at first, and little by little, the savage customs of the red man yielded to the onward progress of ennobling civilization, until to-day Michigan, the adopted home of Chandler, has taken an advanced position among the great States of our Republic and is surpassed by none, with its boundary of peaceful and safe harbors, rapid streams, fine soil, great agriculture, delicious fruit, healthful climate, varied industries, and diverse products.

Abounding in timber, iron, copper, coal, lime and quarries, salt, gypsum, and marl; only second in its sugar industry; known the world over for its fine type of rich and ornamental furniture; excelling in fruit, potatoes, and beans; luxuriant in wheat, corn, hay, barley, rye, oats, flax; and unexcelled by any State in diversified farming. Live stock is a potent industry. Michigan to-day builds nearly one-half of the automobiles and vehicles of the country, and manufactures woolen cloth, silk, and paper extensively. Its health-giving resorts are being patronized by the people of the continent. The fame of its great university and agricultural college is world-wide, and its many colleges and institutions of learning are accessible to all. Nature has well fitted it for commerce and trade, and its vast water powers and network of railways give cheap transportation for the distribution of its mineral, agricultural, and manufactured products.

Michigan is proud of its great benevolent, charitable, and public institutions, its fine churches, its splendid hospitals, sanitariums, and industrial schools, and homes for all classes of aged or infirm. A dignified, prosperous, and progressive people are placing Michigan in the front ranks of the great galaxy of States.

Here are magnificent opportunities to all. Manufacturing industries are mingled with prolific farming, both abound with opportunity and reward. And could he whose memory we reverse momentarily return he would find us to-day all coworkers, relying the one upon the other, but without class or distinction to an extent never before known, the successors and the beneficiaries of his life work and endeavor.

On the night of his death he had spoken at a large political gathering. Before retiring he was met by the beckoning angel of death and the world was closed to his visage forever. And it was stated:

> Death passed into the chamber of the sleeper,
> The dark and silent room,
> And as he entered darker grew and deeper
> The silence and the gloom.

His sudden death was lamented by State and Nation. He spent many years in public life. He had been mayor of Detroit. In 1852 he was defeated on the Whig ticket for governor of his State. He was a stanch Republican, and in 1854 stumped the State and was active in the formation of the Republican Party. He served 22 years in the Senate of the United States, and was recognized everywhere as a man of great power and influence. It is stated that he was much disliked by his enemies, but adored by his friends. He was a strong partisan and party man. He belonged to those—

> Men who their duties know,
> But know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain.

He had the confidence of Lincoln, and vigorously supported him in the conduct of the war. He took a leading part in the reconstruction of the States. He was defeated for the Senate by Judge Christiency in 1875. He was appointed Secretary of the Interior by President Grant, and served with distinction during the two terms of his incumbency. As a political leader and a forceful and convincing speaker he was in the front rank, especially among the people of his State where he was always in great demand.

It is not complete justice to say of Chandler that he acquired distinction only in public life. He was a successful business man and blended himself freely with the commercial life of his city. His activities in public life were associated with the dry-goods trade. It was related of him that he was retiring and devoted to his business, and when he began for himself he lived on $300 a year and slept in his store. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and elsewhere scarcely spent an hour of his time except to facilitate his trade. He won friends by his personal kindness and strict integrity in business. His prosperity and success in private enterprises gave him opportunities for which he was well qualified to enter upon a public career. In the Senate and before the people he always stood firmly for the integrity and honor of his country and for the rights of the humblest citizen. His honesty in public and private life was never assailed. He always kept his word and fulfilled his pledges. As Secretary of the Interior he introduced many commendable reforms and showed great executive ability.

And so we prize and praise the memory of this distinguished citizen. He performed well his part to give to his State a high place of honor and glory in the Republic. As a tribute to his splendid service to his State and Nation, a statue of marble attesting at once the great skill and perfect workmanship of the artist has been erected to his memory, so that for all time we can look upon him as he was; for in the execution of his work the sculptor blended the soul and countenance of his subject, and it is said that only breath is wanting to hear him speak.

In the Hall of Fame with other honored and illustrious dead of our great Republic, side by side with Lewis Cass, whom he succeeded, and surrounded by Hannibal Hamlin, Charles Sumner, Benjamin Franklin, and others who were his compatriots and colleagues in the Senate, his likeness stands in the Hall of Fame in the Capitol of his country, so beloved by him, and where he spent the best years of his sterling manhood. There in lifelike form he stands to speak silently of the glories of our grand Republic, and to encourage that patriotism and loyalty which he always so fully vindicated and which we may emulate. He died with the love of country on his lips, offering a prayer for its future welfare. Like him, may all who follow be faithful mariners and safe pilots of our country through every storm, watchfully, devotedly, and prayerfully.

"Thou, too, sail on, O ship of state!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope!
Fear not each sudden sound and shock,
'Tis of the wave and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!
In spite of rock and tempest roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee—are all with thee!"

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURKE of South Dakota). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the name of Chandler lives not because of his great political sagacity or his wonderful executive ability or his strong and vigorous mental powers, although he was gifted with all of these. His name is still a living force a generation after his death by reason of his unswerving loyalty to his convictions of right and truth and to his country's cause. Personal sacrifice or danger or fear of defeat never served to withhold him from the performance of his fullest public duty.

The State of Michigan has performed a great public service when she has placed here in the Capital of this Nation, where the citizens from every section may come to look upon his visage, the statue of Zachariah Chandler. In this day when a real democracy is constantly becoming more and more a reality, and when the responsibility upon the individual citizen is every day becoming more and more direct, it is well that here, before the citizens of our Nation, should be placed this statue of one who was chiefly distinguished by his courage in his convictions and by his loyalty to his country and its institutions.

Progress is not a matter which takes care of itself. In the remarks to-day of my distinguished colleagues there has been frequent and eloquent reference to the wonderful progress of this country in the recent century. But let me remind you progress, industrially, politically, ethically, and in all lines, has only been possible because there have been at frequent stages in the journey of time men who have been willing to sacrifice self, who have been willing to face the greatest of problems with unflinching courage, without regard to what it might mean to self. The path of progress has always been lighted by beacon lights where self was burned by the individual as a sacrifice that the many might benefit. In all our political history there has never been a man who has manifested in greater degree that willingness, who has been more characterized by such courage of conviction and loyalty to truth than was Zachariah Chandler. [Applause.]

Modern development of methods of transportation and distribution of property, persons, and thought consequent upon the development of that great dynamic trinity—steam, electricity, gasoline—counts preeminent among its weapons the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, the printing press, and a myriad of other triumphs of industrial progress. These have all tended to make possible a genuine government by the people. Even in a nation of 100,000,000 souls, scattered over areas greater in extent than even the dreams of the Alexanders and Napoleons of old, we are now working out this problem of a direct government of the people by the people.

In the earlier days of this Nation, with its slow methods of intercommunication, the representatives of the people exercised the rights of rulers. To-day the individual citizen can be, and on the average is, better informed as to current political problems and public crises than was the governor of an outlying State in other days. Hence has followed much of our recent political development, placing the power more fully in the hands of the individual voter, making it possible for him to exercise his will more directly and more positively than before. In these days of the Australian ballot, of the direct nomination of candidates, of the initiative, of the referendum, and of the recall, the final authority of government rests in the hands of the individual voter.

This fact is a grave responsibility as well as an opportunity. The final triumphant justification of this splendid experiment in popular government must depend upon the manner in which the individual citizen discharges this grave responsibility.

The average citizen will not be dishonest, unpatriotic, or intentionally lacking in the performance of his public duty; but if he fails to give study to the public questions which come before him for determination, and, further, if he fails to vote his own judgment upon such questions with a view to the general good rather than his personal benefit; and further, if he fails, whatever may be his station of life, to defend and promote that which he believes to be right through fear of personal danger or cost, then will the wail of the reactionary be justified and the demonstrated failure of popular government be accomplished. If, on the other hand, the brave spirit of Chandler actuates the average citizen and he forms his judgment with impartiality, defends it with courage, clings to it without regard to personal consequences, promotes it to the utmost of his ability, and fears not the outcome, then this splendid experiment will be glorified by the complete demonstration of the righteousness of the dreams of the founders of our Republic—that true liberty and self-government and true progress must go hand in hand.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, in the half light of history the character and works of public men are often seen dimly and obscurely; and the great men of all times stand out only by reason of having impressed themselves upon their contemporaries by strong, dominant characteristics that served strikingly to differentiate them from their fellows, and to leave a mark thereby that tradition carries down to succeeding generations.

In Zachariah Chandler Michigan contributed to the Nation a figure of towering strength. At a time in the history of the Nation when issues were at stake that truly tried men's souls he was found not only unvaryingly to have the courage of his convictions, but the power and strength to dominate his fellows by the very force and passion by which these convictions imbued him. He never stopped to consider what public opinion might be in shaping his course, nor was he ever deterred by any fear of consequences upon his personal fortunes. Webster says that when aroused he put forth his opinion and convictions "like the outbreaking of a fountain from the earth or the bursting forth of volcanic fires with spontaneous original native force."

I think that there is no higher tribute can be paid on this occasion, when we are about to commemorate the placing of his figure in the Nation's Hall of Fame, than to say that it keeps in remembrance one who was a man. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, we are assembled here to-day to perform the final act, representing the legislature and the people of the State of Michigan, of transferring to the care of the Nation, to be permanently placed in the National Hall of Fame, this effigy in marble of one of its most eminent public men, the Hon. Zachariah Chandler.

In this place, alongside of its companion statue, that of Gen. Lewis Cass, the first donation from our Commonwealth to be presented to the Nation, but the first only in point of time and service, we ardently hope to thus preserve the names and fame of the two distinguished men who so long honored the State whose commission they bore. As long as this grand Capitol stands their memory will endure.

The name of Lewis Cass has been a familiar one to me from my early childhood. My father was a great admirer and staunch supporter of Gen. Cass. A large portrait of the General adorned the front of the old clock in the home of my parents for many years.

It is a fact worthy of notice that for 60 years the political opinions of Michigan as a Territory and State were represented and largely formed by two men of New Hampshire birth.

From 1819 to 1854 Gen. Cass was the accepted political leader of Michigan, and only once in all that long period of 35 years did her people fail to follow him. That was in 1840, when the old pioneers and the soldiers of 1812—generally the friends of Cass—refused his leadership and voted for the older pioneer and the more illustrious chieftain, William Henry Harrison. From 1854 till Mr. Chandler's death the dominant opinion of Michigan was with him; and her people followed him, trusted him, believed in him. During that quarter of a century the population of the State more than trebled in number, but the strength of Chandler with the newcomers seemed as great as with the older population with whom he had begun the struggle of life in the Territory of Michigan. The old men stood firmly by him in the faith and confidence of an ancient friendship, and the young men followed with an enthusiasm which grew into affection, and with an affection which ripened into reverence.

Zachariah Chandler was a remarkable man, a great leader of men, and possessed of a strong character, both in his private and public life. He was a great American. He was far more than an ordinary, everyday politician. His public services covered a period a little short of 23 years, but they were rendered in an era of the greatest stress in the life of the Republic.

He entered the Senate on March 4, 1857, and with the exception of a few weeks in private life in 1875, he remained continuously in the service of his State and the Nation until his death on November 1, 1879. Soon after his retirement from the Senate he became Secretary of the Interior in President Grant's second administration, and it is a matter of history that the multifarious affairs of that great department were never more efficiently or honestly administered than during the incumbency of Secretary Chandler. Thoroughly honest himself, he was the relentless foe of all jobbers and corruptionists, and he stood like a lion in the path of all schemers in their attempts to swindle the Government.

Zachariah Chandler was born at Bedford, N. H., December 10, 1813, and died at Chicago, Ill., November 1, 1879, 40 days short of 66 years of age. He was of mixed English and Scotch-Irish ancestry, received an academic education, and early in life engaged in mercantile pursuits. When 20 years of age he removed to Michigan, settling in Detroit, where for a year or two he clerked in a store. Tradition has it that when Chandler, still a minor, decided to join the current of western immigration his father offered him $1,000 or a collegiate education. He chose the money and settled in Detroit, becoming a merchant with his brother-in-law, Franklin Moore, under the firm name of Moore & Chandler. This business was prosperous from the beginning, and by the middle forties Mr. Chandler was at the head of the largest wholesale dry goods establishment in the State.

Merchants in the young and rapidly growing cities and villages within a wide area became his regular customers, instead of going farther east for their supplies, and his liberal and courteous treatment of these dealers made them fast friends when, later on, he entered State and National politics.

In the late forties he served the city of Detroit as an alderman, and in 1851 was elected mayor as a Whig. He had an early and active share in the organization of the Republican Party, and was present at the mass convention "Under the Oaks" at Jackson in the summer of 1854, when the new party had its birth. He was the Whig candidate for governor of Michigan in 1852, but was defeated.

In the spring of 1854 the United States and the Earl of Elgin, then Governor General of Canada, acting for Great Britain, negotiated a reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada. This treaty included nearly all natural products, and the list of articles to be admitted free were identical for both countries. The arrangement went into effect July 1, 1854, and continued until December 31, 1866, when it was abrogated by the United States. During its entire existence Mr. Chandler was intensely and consistently hostile to this treaty, claiming that Great Britain and her Canadian possessions had gotten altogether the best of the bargain, and he rarely let pass an opportunity to bitterly assail and denounce it.

Never in the broad sense of the term an orator, he was an earnest and forceful speaker, and his homely phraseology and apt illustrations often brought conviction to the minds of many of his hearers who were ordinarily opposed to his economic views. Long before his first election to the Senate he had acquired quite an international reputation for his intense Americanism, and was generally recognized as the chief of the "twisters of the British lion's tail."

The year 1857 was a bad one for the United States. Commercial and industrial depression was widespread. The "hard times" began to appear soon after the close of the presidential campaign of the previous fall. In that hotly contested political struggle the newly organized Republican Party made its first appeal to the American electorate and henceforth became a vital political quantity.

Mr. Chandler gave liberally of his time and means in support of the principles of the infant party. He stumped Michigan and other neighboring States, and his services were in constant demand as a campaign speaker. The battle ended in the election of the Democratic ticket, headed by James Buchanan.

During the hard winter of 1856–7, sound currency was exceedingly scarce in Michigan. There was plenty of the red-dog and wild-cat variety in evidence, but only those who could not help themselves ever took it or circulated it. By this time Mr. Chandler's big dry-goods establishment was on such a firm basis that it was but slightly affected by the almost universal depression. He freely supplied his country customers with all the goods they required on long-time credits, and thus scores of rural merchants were saved from impending and certain bankruptcy. Years afterwards Mr. Chandler declared that he had not lost a dollar by this accommodation, but he had made fast friends and supporters of many when, a little later, he aspired to political honors.

In the National election of 1856 the young Republican Party swept Michigan and elected large majorities in both houses of the State legislature. When the time came for choosing a Senator in succession to Gen. Cass, whose term was about to expire, but who subsequently became Secretary of State in President Buchanan's Cabinet, a majority of the Republican members supported the candidacy of Mr. Isaac P. Christiancy, a successful and prominent lawyer of Monroe. A large and active minority, however, doggedly opposed Mr. Christiancy, and this minority succeeded in effecting a combination with the Democrats by which a sufficient number of votes of the latter were secured to make Mr. Chandler's election a certainty. Mr. Chandler's business friends, many of whom were country merchants affiliated with both political parties, had taken this means of proving their loyalty and gratitude, and thus was brought about the first election of Zachariah Chandler to the Senate of the United States, in which position he remained for 18 years, until he was defeated by a combination not unlike the one by which he had first succeeded in favor of Mr. Christiancy, his early opponent, and who the same year—1857—was nominated and elected a member of the State Supreme Court, that great tribunal with its three famous "C's"—Campbell, Christiancy, and Cooley—whose fame and ability as jurists were and still are of world-wide recognition.

Senator Chandler took his seat in the Senate March 4, 1857, with the advent of the Buchanan administration. From that moment his was a commanding personality, both physically and intellectually, in all national affairs. He now belonged to the entire Nation. His first assignments were to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Commerce. Early in his first term he succeeded to the chairmanship of the latter powerful and influential committee, so important to the interests of Michigan, with its vast expanse of navigable water front, the largest in mileage of any State in the Union. This commanding post was retained by Mr. Chandler until his senatorial career was broken in 1875. The pages of the Congressional Globe and its successor, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, bear testimony to the valuable work accomplished by the Committee on Commerce during the years of Senator Chandler's leadership.

Senator Chandler was hardly warm in his seat when he began an active onslaught on his pet aversion, the Canadian reciprocity treaty. He hammered away on this line in season and out of season for nearly 10 years, when, as has been already mentioned, the treaty was abrogated. He was never popular with the press of Great Britain or Canada.

When early in 1861 eleven of the Southern States seceded, and the Civil War was near at hand, Mr. Chandler became a vigorous supporter of the cause of the Union, which position he maintained throughout the four years of sanguinary strife. There was no uncertainty about his attitude. At all times he had the courage of his convictions. And his speeches reveal the intensity of his innermost thoughts and feelings.

In February, 1861, Senator Chandler wrote his famous "blood letter" to Gov. Austin Blair, who was afterwards known as the "War Governor of Michigan." In that letter the Senator declared "Without a little bloodletting this Union will not, in my estimation, be worth a rush." In some way this letter was made public and for a time it caused a great sensation. The writer was savagely assailed by a considerable section of the press of the country and by not a few of the politicians of his own party. The Senator stood firm, however, and let his adversaries harp and howl until they were tired. His only known utterance on the subject is:

> In that letter I wrote my honest belief at the time, and I have no further explanation or apology to make.

It is now a matter of history that before the four years of most sanguinary warfare of modern times were ended "a little bloodletting" actually occurred—but the Union was saved.

Throughout the war the Senator's services on the Committee on the Conduct of the War were invaluable. Probably no other member of that committee gave so much of his time and energy to the great work performed by it, and this labor was not ended until long after the close of hostilities.

Soon after Gen. Grant became commander of all the Federal Armies a deep attachment grew up between the great soldier and the great Senator, notwithstanding the fact that they had a somewhat serious personal difficulty, which was more amusing than otherwise to nonparticipants, while the Senator was mayor of Detroit and Grant a young lieutenant of the Regular Army, stationed at Fort Wayne, near Detroit. This attachment remained unbroken until the Senator's death, which preceded the General's by nearly seven years.

As a party man Senator Chandler was a stalwart, and he vigorously supported all the war measures of his party, including the impeachment of Andrew Johnson and the reconstruction acts which followed.

Senator Chandler was elected for a second term in 1863 and to a third in 1869, with practically no opposition in his party and with very little from the Democrats.

He had now held the Senatorship longer than any of his distinguished predecessors. Toward the middle of his term, however, murmurs of discontent began to be heard against Mr. Chandler's long tenure of office, and the dissatisfaction found ready and willing disseminators among that section of the press and people who opposed the election of Gen. Grant to a second term in the Presidency in 1872. "Chandlerism" became a term of reproach just as other "isms," with the names of other prominent party leaders prefixed, have become more or less unpopular in these latter days.

The most violent opposition to the Senator's desire for a fourth term came from a small, but noisy, faction in the party who in 1872 had broken away from their bearings and styled themselves "Liberal Republicans." In the national field the movement was a dismal failure; but, aided by a few able papers, whose editors and owners had conceived a violent antipathy to Senator Chandler, the sentiment against "Chandlerism" was making headway.

In 1874, for the first time since the Civil War, the Democratic Party elected a good working majority in the House of Representatives, and this change in public sentiment also resulted in a considerable increase in the representation of that party in the Michigan Legislature.

The campaign against "Chandlerism" was soon on in a most virulent form. Just what was meant by "Chandlerism" was never very clearly defined. In the popular mind at the time it meant "loyalty of the Senator to his friends and their loyalty to him." But he had held one of the greatest offices in the gift of the people for a long time—for 18 years—in which were included four years of the greatest war in modern history, during which the Republic had to fight desperately to maintain its existence—and there were a number of eager and patriotic gentlemen, from their own viewpoint, eager and anxious to supplant him.

No charges of personal or political corruption had ever been successfully laid at his door. All his public acts were well known and open and aboveboard. Both his friends and his enemies always knew exactly how he stood on the vital issues of the day. He had never trimmed a sail to catch the passing breeze, and he cared very little for personal popularity or the applause of the multitude.

When the time came for the nomination of a Senator at the session of 1875, a small number of Republican members refused to enter the caucus.

Mr. Chandler, however, was regularly nominated. Much maneuvering and scheming followed this action, and many combinations were suggested and some of them given a trial. The combination that eventually succeeded was the offer of the recalcitrant Republicans to put forward Judge Christiancy of the supreme bench, the same man who was defeated by Senator Chandler 18 years before, as their candidate and for whom they solicited the solid Democratic vote. After a few days of dickering the compact was agreed to, and Judge Christiancy was elected Senator by a bare majority vote. "Old Zack," as he was then popularly called, after long, arduous, and faithful service, was thus retired to private life. But the retirement was only for a little while.

When the news of Chandler's defeat was received at a well-known Democratic resort near the city hall in Detroit there was great jubilation, as might be expected, over the "victory." When the enthusiasm and the felicitations were at their height, one old Democrat, who had taken an active and conspicuous part in Chandler's first election, put a damper on the proceedings by a little impromptu speech. "Of course," said he, "it is all right that we, as good party men, should rejoice over Chandler's defeat. But there is another way to look at the matter. What does Michigan gain by the change? We have simply traded the chairmanship of the great Senate Committee on Commerce, with our large water front and numerous ports, and large and rapidly growing marine interests, for, possibly, the tail end of the Judiciary Committee. To my mind, this 'victory' seems more like a State calamity." Having thus relieved his mind, the old Democrat stalked gloomily out of the room, and the felicitations were at an end.

Mr. Chandler was idle only a few weeks. President Grant invited him to join his Cabinet as Secretary of the Interior, and he accepted.

The next year the memorable Hayes-Tilden campaign of 1876 came on, and Mr. Chandler was chosen chairman of the Republican national committee, with his namesake and distant relative, William E. Chandler, of New Hampshire, as secretary.

It would be out of place here, besides being entirely unnecessary, to enter into the details of that now historic political struggle. One incident of the battle must suffice. The morning after election, when the result of the balloting as regards a number of States was very much in doubt, the country was electrified by a dispatch from Republican headquarters in New York, and which was published in the daily papers all over the country, which read: "Hayes has 185 votes and is elected." This was signed "Chandler." For a good while the authorship of this laconic dispatch was credited to "Old Zack," who neither affirmed nor denied at the time. Later investigation, however, seems to fix the responsibility on the secretary of the committee, William E. Chandler, who subsequently became Secretary of the Navy in President Arthur's Cabinet, besides serving two terms as Senator from his native State, and who is still living in Washington.

Judge Christiancy during his brief service never seemed entirely at home in the Senate. The judicial habit had become so strong with him that he acted as if he felt out of place. Besides, he had numerous troubles of a domestic nature which caused him great uneasiness. When, therefore, after a little less than two years' service, President Hayes offered him the post of minister to Peru, he gladly accepted, and resigned the senatorship. As was predicted, he had drawn the tail end of the Judiciary Committee and some other minor assignments. The Legislature of Michigan—the one elected in the great campaign of 1876—promptly elected Mr. Chandler to fill the vacancy, and "Old Zack" was again in the saddle.

But he was not destined to enjoy his new honors long. The same senatorial term of six years, for which he was first defeated and afterwards triumphantly elected, was also fated to see the end of his earthly career.

During the short session of 1879 he filled his old seat in the Senate and appeared to be in fine form. He delivered a few speeches and made friends with many of the men who had entered the Senate during his absence.

In the last months of his life Senator Chandler ardently believed that he would be the Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

Only a few weeks before his death he discussed the conditions then prevailing in his party with an old friend, and gave his reasons for the belief that he would prove an acceptable dark-horse candidate, one on whom the warring factions could unite. The friend agreed that his reasoning and conclusions were sound.

Late in October, 1879, he visited Chicago to attend to some business and delivered his last memorable speech, prior to the meeting of Congress in December. He had completed his business and expected to return to his home in Detroit next day. On the morning of November 1 he was found dead in his bed in a hotel, having died sometime during the night from heart failure, brought on by an attack of acute indigestion, from which affliction he suffered at times.

His body lay in state in the city hall in Detroit and thousands of his neighbors and his friends joined the long line to take a last look at his honest and rugged face.

I did not enjoy the personal acquaintance of Mr. Chandler, but I liked him, believed in him and the principles for which he stood, and never lost an opportunity to hear him speak. When the sudden and unexpected news of his death came I, with thousands of others, was shocked and made sad, for the Nation had lost a great man, and the Republican Party one of its strongest and foremost leaders.

Such, in brief, is a most inadequate sketch of the career of Zachariah Chandler, whom we are assembled here to-day to commemorate, and whose statue we now consign to the keeping of the Government which he loved so well, and which we earnestly pray may endure for all time. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken, or those who may wish to speak, on this subject may have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] asks unanimous consent that all those who have spoken, or who may wish to speak, on this subject may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 20, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 20, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, grant unto us this day an especial measure of Thy blessing. We can not shut our eyes to the stern facts of life that call for more than human wisdom and demand the guidance and blessing of the Almighty. To interpret into terms of life and force the teachings of our Divine Lord is indeed a holy office. Thou dost put into the hands of Thy servants vast treasures of Christian civilization. We pray that Thou wilt give grace and wisdom in the discharge of these duties. Unborn generations depend upon the issues that arise from day to day in the conduct of a great nation. O Lord, our God, do Thou lend Thy aid and Thy blessing, that without mistake, with firmness in the right as Thou dost give us to see the right, and with charity, which is the fulfilling of the law, Thy servants may discharge the sacred duties of their office. Grant us peace with honor and brotherhood with universal justice. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a schedule of papers and documents on the files of the Interior Department which are not needed nor useful in the transaction of the current business of the department and have no permanent value or historical interest. The communication will be referred to the Joint Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives of the appointment thereof.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 468).

Mr. BRYAN. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12235) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes. I will not move to take up the report at this time, inasmuch as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires that it may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the conference report printed so that we can take it up to-morrow morning.

The report was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12235) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

N. P. BRYAN,
GEORGE C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
GEORGE WHITE,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 469).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13453) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. It is a partial report and I request that the reading of it may be dispensed with, and that it may be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to agreeing to the conference report as far as the conferees have agreed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think we ought to know what are the points of agreement. I think the report should be read, or a statement should be made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say that it is very unusual to agree to a conference report where there is only a partial agreement, but the conferees should consider all the questions in disagreement between the two Houses and make a full report on the whole matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from North Carolina is wrong in that contention. It is the usual custom to agree to the portion of a report that has been agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses unless an objection is raised. I think the motion of the Senator from Oregon is quite in order, and we should agree to the report and then appoint a further conference to take up the controverted questions.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have known occasions of this kind where the conferees have not agreed, and the conferees kept the whole thing open so that they might take into consideration all the matters that were in disagreement as well as those in agreement. I think it would be better for the conferees to let the whole report go back.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not object. I merely made the suggestion to the chairman.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is not a member of the Senate who understands anything about the report except the conferees. I asked a moment ago that the conference report either be read or that the chairman of the committee should make a statement.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the chairman of the committee if the conference report is a long document?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The report is quite long. I will say in this connection that the only items in disagreement are the larger ones which involve the question of policy between the conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate, and it is quite important that the Senate should agree to the report as presented.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me that a conference report on a bill of this kind is of enough importance to spend the time necessary to have it read. The Senate, I think, would be better satisfied if that course were followed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to having the report read. I only wanted to save the time of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the conference report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the conference report, which is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13453) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 13, 14, 20, 28, 29, 30, 31, 64, 65, 66, 90, 103, 105, 107, 108, 143, 144, 145, 153, 154, 155, 157, 158, 162, 163, and 165.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 17, 19, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 99, 100, 101, 102, 104, 106, 110, 111, 112, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 122, 125, 126, 128, 129, 130, 132, 133, 135, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 146, 147, 148, 150, 151, 152, 156, and 160, and agree to same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$11,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

"Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system: For defraying the cost of such extensions and betterments of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1915, from the receipts of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system which have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the extent of such extensions and betterments and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, $50,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the language stricken out by said amendment; in line 9 of said amendment omit the word "hereafter"; and on page 6, line 24, of the bill strike out the word "hereafter"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$950,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "Additional pay while on foreign service, $9,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of said amendment strike out the words "20 per centum" and insert in lieu thereof "$200 each per annum", and in line 13 of the same amendment, after the word "may" and the comma, insert the words "in case of vacancy and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter whenever the number of officers holding permanent appointments in any staff corps or staff department of the Army, except the Quartermaster Corps, shall have been reduced below four and a vacancy shall occur in an office above the grade of colonel in said corps or department, any officer of the Army with rank above that of major who shall have served creditably for not less than four years by detail in said corps or department under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, shall, in addition to officers otherwise eligible, be eligible for appointment to fill said vacancy: Provided further, That hereafter whenever the President shall deem it inadvisable to reappoint, at the end of a four-year term, any officer who, under the provisions of section 26 of the act approved February 2, 1901, or acts amendatory thereof, has been appointed for such a term, in any staff corps or staff department, to an office with rank above that of colonel, but whose commission in the lower grade held by him in said staff corps or staff department at the time of his appointment under said act to an office of higher grade has been vacated, the President may, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said officer to be an officer of the grade that he would have held, and to occupy the relative position that he would have occupied, in said staff corps or staff department if he had not been appointed to said office with rank above that of colonel; and if under the operation of this proviso the number of officers of any particular grade in any staff corps or staff department shall at any time exceed the number authorized by law other than this act, no vacancy occurring in said grade shall be filled until after the total number of officers therein shall have been reduced below the number so authorized: And provided further, That after September 1, 1914, in time of peace, whenever any officer holding a permanent commission in the line of the Army, with rank of colonel, lieutenant colonel, or major, shall not have been actually present for duty for at least two years of the last preceding six years with a command composed of not less than two troops, batteries, or companies of that branch of the Army in which he shall hold said commission, such officer shall not be detached nor permitted to remain detached from such command for duty of any kind except as hereinafter specifically provided; and all pay and allowances shall be forfeited by any superior for any period during which, by his order or his permission, or by reason of his failure or neglect to issue or cause to be issued the proper order or instructions at the proper time, any officer shall be detached or permitted to remain detached in violation of any of the terms of this act; but nothing in this act shall be held to apply in the case of any officer for such period as shall be actually necessary for him, after having been relieved from detached service, to join the organization or command to which he shall belong in that branch in which he shall hold a permanent commission; nor shall anything in this act be held to apply to the detachment or detail of officers for duty in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal until after such canal shall have been formally opened, or in connection with the Alaska Road Commission or the Alaska Railroad or the Bureau of Insular Affairs; and nothing in this act shall prevent the redetail of officers above the grade of major to fill vacancies in the various staff corps and departments as provided for by section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901: Provided further, That whenever the service record of any field officer is to be ascertained for the purposes of this act, all duty actually performed by him during the last preceding six years, in a grade below that of major, in connection with any statutory organization of that branch of the Army in which he shall hold a permanent commission, or as a staff officer of any coast defense or Coast Artillery district, shall be credited to him as actual presence for duty with a command composed as herein-before prescribed: And provided further, That temporary duty of any kind hereafter performed with United States troops in the field for a period or periods the aggregate of which shall not exceed 60 days in any one calendar year, and duty hereafter performed in command of United States Army mine planter by an officer assigned to a company from which this detachment is drawn, and duty hereafter performed in command of a machine-gun platoon or a machine-gun unit, by any officer who, before assignment to such duty, shall have been regularly assigned to, and shall have entered upon duty with, an organization or a command the detachment of certain officers from which is prohibited by the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, or by this act, shall, for the purposes of said acts, hereafter be counted as actual presence for duty with such organization or command."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 87: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For expenses of courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and compensation of reporters and witnesses attending the same, and expenses of taking depositions and securing other evidence for use before the same, $40,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$175,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 109: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amended paragraphs; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 124: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 124, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment and add the following: "or horse races; but nothing in this proviso shall be held to apply to the officers, enlisted men, and horses of any troop, battery, or company which shall, by order or permission of the Secretary of War, and within the limits of the United States, attend any horse show or any State, county, or municipal fair, celebration, or exhibition"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 127: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following: "That not exceeding the sum of $6,000 of this appropriation may be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for the construction of a rostrum in the national cemetery in the Presidio of San Francisco, Cal.: Provided further, That not exceeding the sum of $60,000 of this appropriation may be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for the construction of a library building for the Army Service Schools at Fort Leavenworth: And provided further"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 131: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$485,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of First Lieut. Robert L. Weeks, United States Army, the sum of $1,340, disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury in accordance with a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury dated March 14, 1913; and that hereafter any officer of the Army and member of said board of road commissioners who is living with his family while serving as a member of said board within the limits of the Territory of Alaska, and not stationed at a military post, shall be entitled to receive a per diem commutation fixed by the board in lieu of 'actual living expenses,' as now provided by law; and this provision shall embrace the time during which any member of said board shall have failed in the past to receive any allowance for expense of living by reason of the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury above referred to, to the effect that said allowance could not be made to an officer living with his family"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the words inserted by said amendment and, on page 43, line 4, of the bill, strike out the words "and materials therefor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 159: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 159, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "$450,000: Provided, That existing written agreements involving the purchase of patented articles, patents for which have not expired, may be carried out"; and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 24, 113, 121, 123, 137, 161, and 164 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

G. W. CHAMBERLAIN,
LUKE LEA,
F. A. DU PONT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES HAY,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is quite evident that from a mere reading of the report no understanding can be had of it, and I ask that it may be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be printed and go over until to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 20th day of April, 1914, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution presenting the thanks of Congress to the governor, and through him to the people, of Michigan, for the statue of Zachariah Chandler, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of sundry citizens of Columbus and Madison, in the State of Indiana; of sundry citizens of Elk Rapids, Detroit, Bad Axe, and St. Johns, in the State of Michigan; of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill.; of sundry citizens of Bonham, Tex.; of sundry citizens of Crookston, Minn.; and of sundry citizens of Troy, N. Y., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1914.

Resolutions relative to the restriction of immigration.

Resolved, That the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts protests against the provision in the Burnett-Dillingham bill, so called, now pending in Congress, that imposes a test of the ability of an immigrant to read. The general court believes that any educational test would be misleading and oppressive and would tend to make the admission of the immigrant a matter not so much of his real worth and capacity as of the opportunities for education which he had happened to enjoy or from which he had been debarred by circumstances.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the Members of Congress from this Commonwealth and to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress.

In senate, adopted March 19, 1914.
In house of representatives, adopted in concurrence April 6, 1914.
A true copy.
Attest:

FRANK J. DONAHUE,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. LODGE. In this connection I ask to have printed in the RECORD three brief letters and a telegram.

There being no objection, the letters and telegram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
CITY POINT LODGE, NO. 507,
South Boston, Mass., April 13, 1914.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SENATOR: On behalf of an organization having a considerable membership that desires the illiteracy test enacted into law precisely as it passed the House February 4 last by a two-thirds vote, I beg to urge you to vote in favor of keeping the test in the bill as it is and unamended, and that you give the bill your aggressive support and powerful influence so that it may become a law this session.

Our national legislative representative has appeared before the House Committee on Immigration and so fully explained our position and the position of our members that I will not intrude further on your good time to argue or explain the matter. As members of the organization we want this done for the good of the working people of this country, whether native or foreign born, and we assure you it will be appreciated. Hoping to hear from you with reference to it, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

[SEAL.] CHAS. B. BERGER,
Secretary Lodge No. 507.

—

WORCESTER, MASS., April 16, 1914.

Senator H. CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.

SENATOR: On behalf of an organization having a considerable membership that desires the illiteracy test enacted into law precisely as it passed the House February 4 last by a two-thirds vote, I beg to urge you to vote in favor of keeping the test in the bill just as it is and unamended, and that you give the bill your aggressive support and powerful influence, so that it may become a law this session.

Our national legislative representative has appeared before the House Committee on Immigration and so fully explained our position and the position of our members that I will not intrude further on your good time to argue or explain the matter. As members of the organization, we want this done for the good of the working people of this country, whether native or foreign born, and we assure you it will be appreciated. Hoping to hear from you with reference to it, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

[SEAL.] THEODORE B. WARDWELL,
Secretary-Treasurer Worcester Division, No. 64,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers,
11½ Hammond Street, Worcester, Mass.

—

BROTHERHOOD OF RAILROAD TRAINMEN,
PIONEER LODGE, NO. 238,
West Springfield, Mass., April 16, 1914.

Mr. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SENATOR: On behalf of an organization having a considerable membership that desires the illiteracy test enacted into law precisely as it passed the House February 4 last by a two-thirds vote, I beg to urge you to vote in favor of keeping the test in the bill just as it is and unamended, and that you give the bill your aggressive support and powerful influence, so that it may become a law this session.

Our national legislative representative has appeared before the House Committee on Immigration and so fully explained our position and the position of our members that I will not intrude further on your good time to argue or explain the matter. As members of the organization we want this done for the good of the working people of this country, whether native or foreign born, and we assure you it will be appreciated. Hoping to hear from you with reference to it, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

J. A. FLYNN, Secretary.

—

NORTH BROOKFIELD, MASS., April 15, 1914.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of an organization having a considerable membership that desires the illiteracy test enacted into law precisely as it passed the House February 4 last by a two-thirds vote, I beg to urge you to vote in favor of keeping the test in the bill just as it is and unamended, and that you give the bill your aggressive support and powerful influence, so that it may become a law this session.

Our national legislative representative has appeared before the House Committee on Immigration and fully explained our position and the position of our members. As members of the organization we want this done for the good of the working people of this country, whether native or foreign born, and we assure you that it will be appreciated.

W. L. MCMENIMEN,
Chairman Brotherhood Railroad Trainmen Legislative Board for Massachusetts, New Braintree, Mass.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Amory, Miss., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide a compensatory time privilege to post-office employees, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the New Hampshire Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Plymouth, N. H., and a petition of the Federated Churches of Meredith, N. H., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portsmouth, N. H., praying that a liberal appropriation be made for the maintenance of the Children's Bureau, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRISTOW presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kansas, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Eskridge, Kans., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Herndon and Nekoma, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Herndon and Nekoma, in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide compensatory time for Sunday service performed by employees in the Post Office Department, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SHIVELY presented petitions of sundry medical societies of Sullivan, Perry, and Monroe Counties, in the State of Indiana, praying for the passage of the so-called antinarcotic bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Pharmaceutical Association of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the discrimination in prices and to provide for publicity of prices to dealers and the public, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 118, United Garment Workers of America, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate interstate commerce in convict-made goods, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry churches and citizens in the State of Indiana, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THOMAS presented memorials of sundry citizens of the State of Colorado, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of the congregation of the First Methodist Church of Dallas, Tex., praying for the establishment of a national bureau of censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Houston, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide compensatory time for Sunday service of employees in the Post Office Department, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Texas, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Texas, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Texas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Galena, Kans., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POMERENE presented memorials of sundry citizens of Piqua, Ohio, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRADY. I have received a communication from the governor of the State of Colorado in reference to a resolution adopted by the conference of western governors, which was in session in Denver April 7 to 11. I should like to have it read.

There being no objection, the communication was read, as follows:

STATE OF COLORADO, EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Denver, April 14, 1914.

Hon. JAMES H. BRADY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It has been reported to me that the resolution pertaining to the water powers of the West, unanimously adopted by the western governors' conference in session in Denver April 7 to 11, was omitted from the eastern press reports. Inasmuch as this was one of the most important of the resolutions adopted by the conference and one in which great interest was taken, I give you below a copy of the same for your information:

"Whereas Congress has declared 'the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public, for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes,' we insist the Federal Government has no lawful authority to exercise control over the water of a State through ownership of public lands.

"We maintain the waters of a State belong to the people of the State, and that the States should be left free to develop water-power possibilities and should receive fully the revenues and other benefits derived from such development."

Yours, very truly,

E. M. AMMONS,
Secretary Western Governors' Conference.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I have a very short article from a late issue of the Daily Consular and Trade Reports, entitled "Sawdust Briquets in British Columbia."

The Department of Agriculture is at the present time making an intelligent investigation and study as to the best manner of saving the by-products of our forests.

The Division of Forestry is also doing some splendid work along these lines, and I believe that the information contained in this article by Consul General R. E. Mansfield, of Vancouver, will be beneficial to the readers of the RECORD, and also information which the Senators should have.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAWDUST BRIQUETS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

[Consul General R. E. Mansfield, Vancouver.]

The disposition and profitable utilization of the by-products or refuse from sawmills is a question that is receiving the serious consideration of individuals and companies operating the mills on the Pacific coast. The production of lumber and shingles constitutes one of the principal industries of British Columbia, but on account of the extensive tracts of timberland and the increasing demand for lumber and shingles it has not yet reached the magnitude to which it promises to attain.

The increasing number of large sawmills, the growing importance of the lumber interests, and the thousands of tons of by-products or refuse in the way of sawdust, splinters, bark, slabs, and small cuttings that are constantly accumulating at the mills make the utilization of this waste material a matter of importance to the lumber and shingle manufacturers.

DEMAND FOR CHEAP FUEL IN CONVENIENT FORM.

The demand for a cheap fuel in convenient form, one that will produce less ash and cinder than coal, has encouraged experiments in the utilization of the by-product of the mills, especially of sawdust in compressed form. Most of the mills now use the sawdust from their plants in the furnaces for the production of steam power, and in some instances for generating electricity.

The conversion of the refuse into fuel possessing greater heat-producing power than the sawdust in its original form promises to develop a profitable industry. It will also lessen the cost of operating the mills by disposing of the by-product that now constitutes an item of considerable expense. The average loss is about 20 per cent of the cut in the manufacture of lumber, and in the Armstrong-Kerr process sufficient residue is obtained from the cutting of 1,000 feet of lumber to make 1 ton of briquets.

The approximate cut of the 220 sawmills, large and small, in British Columbia is 1,350,000,000 feet of lumber annually. The estimated waste from the cut of 1,000 feet of lumber is 350 pounds of sawdust, making a total annual residue from the mills in the Province of 236,250 tons. If this waste material were converted into briquets at a market value of $6 per ton, the total value would be $1,417,500.

To meet the demand for the utilization of this waste material two companies are conducting experiments in the manufacture of briquets. One has a plant in Victoria that is now turning out a considerable quantity of the new fuel, and the other is constructing a briquet factory in Vancouver for one of the largest lumber companies.

PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE—COSTS.

The process employed in the plant at Victoria is described as follows: The bark, slabs, shavings, sawdust, and other portions of the wood refuse from the sawmills is first passed through a "hog," or edging machine, in which it is cut into pieces not more than three-fourths inch long. The material is then passed into a shredder, where it is reduced to fine particles from the thickness of a match up to a quarter of an inch. From the shredder it passes into a dry kiln, where it is thoroughly dried, as green particles of wood will not adhere and remain in form, no matter how great the pressure may be. From the drier it goes to the heavy compress machine, where it is pressed into briquets or rolls 3 inches in diameter, held together with a 7-ply tarred jute string, the only bond used in the briquets.

The cost of production, including depreciation, interest on capital, insurance, etc., is estimated at $3 per ton. The selling price will be governed by the price of coal, as the new fuel will be a competitor of coal for domestic uses. The manufacturers claim that the briquets as a grate fuel and for cooking purposes, especially for baking, are superior to either wood or coal, as it is more combustible than the latter and leaves less ash and residue than either.

From scientific tests made by experts the fuel is said to contain 8,614 British thermal units to the pound, and the ash amounts to 2½ per cent. The company claims that from experiments made recently no ash or residue resulted from the burning of their product either in a grate, stove, or furnace. It is also claimed that it requires less air to insure good combustion than other fuels, especially coal, and that it does not disintegrate in the process of burning. The plant at Victoria is equipped with three machines with a daily capacity of 7 tons each. The fuel can be manufactured and delivered within a mile of the factory at a cost of $3 per ton, which is much less than the cheapest grades of Pacific coast coal.

COMPOSITION OF THE BRIQUETS.

The briquets manufactured by one company are made from sawdust and other by-products of the mills, to which is added tar, pitch, petroleum refuse, or similar substances of an adhesive nature, in sufficient quantities to bind or hold together the principal ingredient. The filler is coal, yellow clay, or other substances, the quantity or proportion depending upon the quality of sawdust used. The cheapest quality of soft-coal dust or slack, including a considerable percentage of dirt and ash, may be used to advantage. The composition of the briquets is as follows: Wood refuse, 65 per cent; coal, 25 per cent; pitch, tar, or oil, 10 per cent. The weight is one-third less than that of an equal bulk of coal.

The sawdust produced in the cutting of lumber on the Pacific coast is not really dust but flakes. Cut from softwood with saws especially made for the timber the residue is soft, spongy, and resilient, and in the raw state is difficult to compress, whereas the sawdust obtainable at the mills in the Eastern States, eastern Canada, and in Europe is from heavier wood, is granular in form, and is more easily compressed, requires less preparation and a smaller proportion of binding material, and is consequently less expensive to manufacture.

To convert the refuse of the British Columbia mills into briquets it is necessary first to pass it through a shredder, and then through a pulverizer to reduce it to a consistency from which it can be pressed into proper form.

BRIQUETTING MACHINERY.

The machinery required in the manufacture of briquets depends on the material utilized and the preliminary preparation necessary, such as pulverizing, drying, etc. The machines used in one process, designed and built especially for the purpose, are capable of a wide range of adjustment, with a maximum pressure of 10,000 pounds to the square inch. The cost of a compressing machine with an average capacity of 11,000 briquets per hour is from $12,000 to $14,000. The preparatory machinery consists of special forms of grinders, pulverizers, amalgamators, and mixers. The raw material is measured and weighed automatically and carried to the various parts of the plant by elevators and conveyors automatically operated.

Mr. CATRON presented petitions of sundry citizens of New Mexico, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STERLING presented memorials of sundry citizens of Huron, S. Dak., remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of sundry citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Virginia and Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Stillwater and St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the postal and civil-service laws, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of Typographical Union No. 136, of Duluth, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation making lawful certain agreements between employees and laborers and persons engaged in agriculture or horticulture, to limit the issuing of injunctions in certain cases, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have a petition from the capital of my State to present to the Senate.

I desire first to preface it with the statement that I am opposed to the bill to repeal the so-called Panama Canal tolls, and should it be my privilege to be present when the vote comes, I shall so declare myself in vote.

With no spirit of gloating or exultation, I have in my hand a petition that is most numerously signed from the capital of my State, in the city of Trenton, protesting against the passage of that bill and requesting, among other things, that I read the same in the Senate. I shall desist from that, inasmuch as it says some flattering things regarding myself. I will send it to the Secretary to be read.

I want to say that I am with the President. I believe him to be a patriot and a statesman, but on this question of the Panama Canal tolls my conscience and my judgment lead me to vote "nay." I do this in no sense or desire to be spectacular, but because the dictates of my judgment say no.

I believe that the welfare of the country demands the toll exemption. I believe that the great preponderance of public sentiment in the United States protests against the repeal. I want to be with the President, but I will only vote with the President, or any other man, on this or any other theme, when conscience and heart bid me. I do not believe, and I have too much faith in the President of the United States to believe, that he desires me or any other man to be with him without heart and without conscience.

I request that the petition may be read. I have about a hundred postal cards in the same line and more are coming each day.

There being no objection, the petition was read, as follows:

CITIZENS' COMMITTEE,
AGAINST REPEAL OF PANAMA CANAL TOLLS,
Trenton, N. J., April 16, 1914.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
United States Senator from New Jersey,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a largely attended citizens' meeting composed of all classes and political affiliations of influential Trenton citizens held in the Young Men's Christian Association Auditorium, Wednesday evening, April 15, and addressed by Hon. Frederick W. Donnelly, mayor of the city; Hon. Barton B. Hutchinson, State senator from Mercer County; and Bainbridge Colby, esq., of New York, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted; and in accordance with the resolutions, we are forwarding them to you, with the request that you read them in the Senate as the expression of the citizens of the capital city of the State of New Jersey.

Another inclosure is a list of the vice presidents of the meeting.

Very truly, yours,

SAML. HAVERSTICK,
Chairman of Meeting.

Whereas the free tolls to American coastwise shipping was made a law nearly two years ago, after fullest consideration, by a Democratic House and Republican Senate and President, advised by those best versed in international law, and no new evidence of dominating character has since been made public to justify any reconsideration; and

Whereas the people of the United States were pledged a continuance of this law in the platform of the party now in power; and

Whereas to repeal this law by the present Congress and administration is a reflection on our national honor and on the intelligence or integrity of our former Congress and President, and to do it now, under an implied threat of foreign hostility, is extremely humiliating to the American people and un-American; and

Whereas free highways and waterways is a well-established American principle; and

Whereas to repeal this law is an unjust discrimination against American shippers, manufacturers, and consumers of dire consequence to the future of Trenton and other American cities; and

Whereas to repeal this law places a construction on the Hay-Pauncefote treaty with England surrendering our rights to use the Panama Canal in case of war and making all nations joint political owners of the canal with the United States, thereby violating the Monroe doctrine; and

Whereas to repeal the law at this time is perpetual, as we surrender our rights to all nations; and

Whereas a subsequent treaty with Panama made by the same man who consummated the Hay-Pauncefote treaty with England, and a pending treaty with Colombia which is urged by our administration, established beyond doubt our rights to pass our coastwise vessels through the canal toll free; and

Whereas the legislative branch of our Government is guaranteed in our Constitution supremacy in its own sphere and freedom from domination by the executive branch: Be it therefore

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Trenton, assembled in mass meeting, deplore the action of our Executive in attempting to coerce the legislative branch of our Government; and

Resolved, That we commend the action of our Senator JAMES E. MARTINE in opposing this repeal, and urgently call upon our Senator WILLIAM HUGHES to cooperate with Senator MARTINE and other Members of the Senate who, in the interests of the people, are opposing the repeal; and be it further

Resolved, That we respectfully request our Senator JAMES E. MARTINE to read these resolutions in the Senate as the expression of the citizens of the capital city of the State of New Jersey; and

Resolved, That our committee is hereby instructed to forward copies of these resolutions to our Senators, JAMES E. MARTINE and WILLIAM HUGHES, and supply copies to the press.

List of vice presidents: Walton M. Watson, James C. Tattersall, Hon. George W. Macpherson, Dr. N. D. Oliphant, Gen. James F. Rusling, Charles A. May, Charles B. Upjohn, Arthur H. Wood, Very Rev. Thadeus Hogan, Hery Wirtschafter, Duncan A. Mackenzie, Dr. H. G. Norton, Hon. Edward C. Stokes, Willis R. Doyle, Charles R. Austin, A. G. Dale, Hon. Huston Dixon, A. K. Leuckel, William H. Lafferty, Lester R. Weller, Edmund C. Hill, Dr. A. W. Belting, J. Wiggins Thorn, A. V. Robinson, Capt. John Schoenthaler, Dr. Robert H. C. Phillips, Richard R. Rogers, Casper Niedermeier, Joseph T. Cotton, Henry C. Moore, George W. Thomas, James H. Mulheron, William J. Walsh, Walter P. Wilson, James Tallon, Dr. Clarence J. Slack, Horace E. Fine, Rev. W. W. Case, Dr. William A. Clark, E. F. Wilgus, John R. Phillips, David Valz, Alfred F. Lutze, Hon. E. C. Hutchinson, Dr. Charles H. Mitchell, Everett Townsend, John W. Manning, A. Crozer Reeves, Dr. George R. Moore, Newton A. K. Bugbee, George W. King, Charles L. Hancock, Edward F. Connoly, Thomas H. Thropp, Dr. Harry R. North, Clifford H. Oakley, George F. Eberhard, D. M. Lovett, George M. Lynch, Dr. Frank G. Scammel, Harry A. Hill, J. Harry Thompson, Willard H. Young, William B. Maddock, James W. Rusling, Leo Salamander, Dr. E. S. Hawk, Frederick C. Anthiel, John Hillman, H. Edward Walsh.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I present resolutions adopted at the third annual conference of western governors, held in Denver, Colo., on April 9, 10, and 11, 1914, relating to the policy which they believe the United States Government should pursue in regard to public lands. The resolutions have been unanimously agreed to, and I ask that they may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Colorado if these are not similar to the resolution which was read this morning? I refer to the resolution presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not hear the resolution read this morning. The resolution read at the request of the Senator from Idaho was the Ammons resolution, which was omitted from the eastern press reports.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the resolutions? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WHAT THE WEST WANTS.

Resolutions adopted unanimously by the third annual conference of western governors, held in Denver, Colo., April 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 1914.

We, the members of the western governors' conference, in convention assembled at Denver, Colo., April 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, 1914, do hereby adopt the followings resolutions:

CONSERVATION.

We believe in conservation—in sane conservation. We believe that the all-wise Creator placed the vast resources of this Nation here for the use and benefit of all the people—generations past, present, and future—and while we believe due consideration and protection should be given to the rights of those who come hereafter, we insist that the people of this day and age should be given every reasonable opportunity to develop our wonderful resources and put them to a beneficial use.

STATE CONTROL.

That it is the duty of each and every State to adopt such laws as will make for true conservation of our resources, prevent monopoly, and render the greatest good to the greatest number, and that as rapidly as the States prepare themselves to carry out such a policy of conservation the Federal Government should withdraw its supervision and turn the work over to the States.

SETTLEMENT OF OUR LANDS.

Believing that those who control the soil control the Nation, and that the most blessed nations are those where the ownership of lands is in many hands, we insist that in the management and sale of our public lands both the Federal Government and the State should maintain such a policy as will make for the rapid settlement of all vacant agricultural lands.

DESERT-LAND ACT.

Resolved, That this convention recommend to Congress amendments of the following nature to the desert-land act:

(1) That the entryman's proof of citizenship in the State wherein he makes a desert-land filing be changed from the time of filing to the time of proving up.

(2) That the requirements of reclamation be enlarged to embrace the alternative proof of cultivation by the actual growing of crops by dry-farm methods on double the acreage required if by irrigation.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

We approve the plan now before Congress to permit homestead entries by persons over 18 years of age.

WATER POWER.

Whereas Congress has declared "the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes," we insist the Federal Government has no lawful authority to exercise control over the water of a State through ownership of public lands.

We maintain the waters of a State belong to the people of a State, and that the States should be left free to develop water-power possibilities and should receive fully the revenues and other benefits derived from such development.

PRECIOUS METALS.

We reiterate our expression contained in article 10 of the 1913 resolutions, referring to the reopening of mineral land, and in addition would urge that the revenues derived from the sale of such lands should be used for the reclamation of the arid lands of the West.

GRAZING LANDS.

We believe grazing lands should be disposed of through an "enlarged-homestead" act, giving the settler sufficient ground to enable him on a live-stock basis to support a family.

SUMMER HOMESTEAD LAW.

We favor the passage of a summer homestead or preemption law, permitting land not valuable for timber, minerals, or agriculture, but suitable for summer homes, to be acquired in not to exceed 40-acre tracts for summer homes. The entryman should not be required to be a resident of the State in which the land is situated, and suitable improvements of the value of $300 and three years' summer residence should be necessary to secure patent.

GOOD ROADS.

We reiterate that 5 per cent of the public lands in the several States should be granted to the said States to aid in construction of permanent roads.

DELAYS—RED TAPE.

We believe one of the greatest blessings the officials at Washington could bestow upon the West would be the elimination of all red tape and the taking of prompt action upon all matters pending before the departments and in which the Western States are interested, and we are pleased to note that efforts are already being made in that direction.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

We are pleased at the thoughtfulness of the Secretary of the Interior in sending so many of his representatives to the irrigation conference now in session in this city. We express our appreciation of his intention to adopt a more liberal policy toward the settlement and development of the West, and assure him of our hearty cooperation in this direction.

DONATION OF LANDS.

We recommend that 10 per cent of all vacant and unappropriated public lands in each of the arid States be donated to such States and each of them as shall so request, said lands to be sold by such States as other State lands are disposed of, and the proceeds of such sales to form a reservoir fund to be used under the direction of the State for irrigation reclamation purposes.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

We urgently recommend that the United States reclamation projects now under process of construction be completed at the earliest practicable moment and turned over to the settlers thereunder as soon as can be.

CAREY ACT PROJECTS.

We urgently recommend that the United States Reclamation Service immediately investigate any and all Carey land, irrigation district, or like projects commenced or under construction in the arid States, and render such projects all financial and other assistance possible, to the end that they may be immediately completed and the settlers thereunder protected and assisted, and the persons holding bonds issued against said projects be compensated as far as practicable.

We urge the press of the Western States to investigate and actively support these principles.

RESOLUTIONS REAFFIRMED.

We reaffirm the action taken by the governors' conference in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1913, as follows:

"We, the governors of public-land States, in conference assembled, believing that upon the administration of the laws governing the disposal of the public lands in a very large measure depends the future prosperity of our States, do hereby agree to the following statement of what we believe should be the policy of the National Government in the administration of the public lands:

"1. That the newer States having been admitted in express terms on an equal footing in all respects whatever with the original States, no realization of that condition can be attained until the State jurisdiction shall extend to all their territory, the taxing power to all their lands, and their political power and influence be thereby secured.

"2. That as rapidly as the States become prepared to take over the work of conservation, the Federal Government withdraw its bureau from the field and turn the work over to the States.

"3. That permanent withdrawal of any lands within our States from entry and sale we believe to be contrary to the spirit and letter of the ordinance of 1787, the policy of which was followed for over a century, and we urge that such lands be returned to entry and opened to sale as speedily as possible.

"4. Dilatory action on the part of executive departments of the Government in passing title to purchasers of public lands is unfair to the States, as it permits purchasers to occupy the lands indefinitely, without the States having power to tax them.

"5. We believe that the best development of these States depends upon the disposal of the public lands to citizens as rapidly as the laws can be complied with.

"6. Bona fide homestead entry within the forest-reserve boundaries should be permitted in the same manner as on unreserved lands, subject only to protest where lands selected are heavily timbered with trees of commercial value, or known to contain valuable mineral deposits.

"7. That the Government grant to the public-land States 5 per cent of the public land remaining in such, to be administered by the States as the school lands are now administered, for the purpose of building national public highways.

"8. That liberal land grants be made for the purpose of establishing and maintaining forestry schools in the public-land States.

"9. That rights of way for all lawful purposes be granted without unwarranted hindrance or delay.

"10. That all mineral lands now withheld from entry or classified at prohibitive prices be reopened to entry at nominal prices, under strict provisions against monopolization.

"11. That we express our appreciation of the splendid work done by the departments at Washington in cooperation with the several States in experimentation and instruction. This assistance has been most valuable in the education of our children and the development of our States, and we commend the same principle to the administration at Washington as being the most feasible plan for the present advancement of true conservation.

"12. We believe that the National Government should provide for expert experimental work in the solution of the mining problems of the mineral States, in the same manner that the Agricultural Department now assists the farmers in solving the agricultural problems.

"13. We believe that the speedy settlement of those public lands constitutes the true and best interests of the Republic. The wealth and strength of the country are its land-owning population.

"14. The best and most economical development of this western territory was accomplished under those methods in vogue when the States of the Middle West were occupied and settled. In our opinion, these methods have never been improved upon, and we advocate a return to those first principles of vested ownership with joint interest and with widely scattered individual responsibility."

Mr. GALLINGER. A telegram has just been handed me, which I ask to have read from the desk.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

LACONIA, N. H., April 20, 1914.

JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Block attempts of financial interests through jingo press to force intervention.

LACONIA SOCIALIST PARTY.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in the nature of a petition and pursuing the policy of publicity which I have followed heretofore in regard to this matter, I send to the desk and desire to have read a letter from Mr. Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern Railway Co., and my reply to it. They relate, as will be seen, to Mr. B. L. Dulaney's letter, which appeared in the RECORD on April 8. As I want to be entirely fair to all parties concerned, I deem it nothing but just that Mr. Harrison's letter should be given as wide publicity as Mr. Dulaney's has received.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SOUTHERN RAILWAY CO.,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C., April 16, 1914.

The Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to a letter written to you by Mr. B. L. Dulaney, under date of March 25, 1914, and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 8, 1914.

This letter contains serious charges against the management of this company. They have been made on the floor of the Senate and have become a part of its record.

If they are true, the management of this company ought to be exposed.

If they are false, their author ought to be exposed.

I ask, on behalf of the Southern Railway Co., an opportunity to refute them and, to that end, that a speedy and thorough investigation be ordered and the results given as wide publicity as the charges.

Faithfully, yours,

FAIRFAX HARRISON, President.

APRIL 20, 1914.

Mr. FAIRFAX HARRISON,
President Southern Railway Co.,
1300 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Yours of April 16 received. If the Naval Committee is ordered to investigate the charges made by Mr. B. L. Dulaney, as I hope will be done, your company shall have the fullest opportunity to expose Mr. Dulaney's falsehoods, if he has told any.

I will be delighted if you can refute the charges, because they are so serious, damaging, and far-reaching in their consequences to the whole South.

The matter will be brought to the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs April 23, when Mr. Dulaney is expected to appear and make his statement orally. If you desire it, you may have a representative of the Southern Railway Co. at that meeting of the committee, not to cross-examine Mr. Dulaney but simply to hear him.

If an investigation is ordered by the Senate, a time will be appointed later for a thorough sifting of all the evidence presented in order that a report by the committee may be made to the Senate itself.

Very sincerely, yours,

B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Britain, Conn., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Connecticut, remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of South Manchester, Conn., praying for an appropriation for the celebration of the so-called "One hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples," which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Balder Lodge, No. 12, Independent Order of Vikings, of De Kalb, Ill., praying for an appropriation for the erection of a monument to the memory of Capt. John Ericsson, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented a memorial of the Chicago Medical Society, of Illinois, remonstrating against an amendment to the so-called antinarcotic bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Typographical Union No. 16, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to make lawful certain agreements between employees and laborers and persons engaged in agriculture or horticulture, to limit the issuing of injunctions in certain cases, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry labor organizations of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry labor organizations of Illinois, remonstrating against the conditions existing in the mining districts of Colorado, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented memorials of 5,734 citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Marquette, Mich., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Order of Railroad Trainmen, of Detroit, Mich, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Copper Country Commercial Club, of Houghton, and of the Commercial Club of Menominee, in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the assignment of the upper peninsula of Michigan to the Minneapolis reserve district, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Petoskey, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Petoskey, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide compensatory time for Sunday services rendered by employees in the Post Office Department, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Michigan Joint Penology Commission, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide for the regulation of interstate commerce in convict-made goods, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Vermont, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Jamaica, Vt., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, remonstrating against certain provisions of the pending immigration bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented memorials of sundry citizens of Maine, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Maine, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAPP presented sundry memorials of citizens of Minnesota, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Indiana, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NORRIS presented a petition of the congregation of the General Baptist Church of Elsmere, Nebr., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented petitions of sundry citizens of California, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oxnard, Cal., remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of California, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast, of San Francisco, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a harbor at Crescent City, Cal., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a memorial of Local Union, No. 227, United Mine Workers of America, of Ronald, Wash., and a memorial of Local Union, No. 934, United Mine Workers of America, of Carbonado, Wash., remonstrating against the treatment accorded miners in the mining districts of Colorado, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Babcock Camp, No. 20, United Spanish War Veterans, of Flint, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors and dependent widows and minor children of certain soldiers and sailors of the Spanish-American War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of Local Union, No. 2808, and of Local Union, No. 2064, United Mine Workers of America, of Bay City, Mich., praying for an investigation into the conditions existing in the mining districts of Colorado, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of Local Lodge, No. 63, Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, of Muskegon, Mich., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Menominee, Mich., remonstrating against the assignment of the upper peninsula of Michigan in the Minneapolis Federal reserve district, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a petition of Upper Hay Lake Grange, No. 1552, Patrons of Husbandry, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., praying for the adoption of a system of rural credits, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BRADLEY presented petitions of Local Division No. 225, International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Paducah; of Local Division No. 397, International Order Railway Conductors, of Covington; of Local Division No. 410, International Order of Locomotive Engineers, of Dixon; of Local Division No. 290, Order of Railway Conductors, of Wingo; and of Local Division No. 579, Order of Railway Conductors, of Lebanon Junction, all in the State of Kentucky, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 2466) for the relief of Elsie McDowell Bunting, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 431) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1930) granting to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. a right of way through the Fort Wingate Military Reservation, N. Mex., and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 432) thereon.

Mr. WORKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 638) for the relief of William Liskey, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 434) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 5042) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 435) thereon.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5255) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians against the United States, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 436) thereon.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO.

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 3897) authorizing the Great Northern Railway Co. to revise its line of railway adjacent to the Glacier National Park, in the State of Montana, and granting to the said railway company the right of way for its revised line in the said national park, and I submit a report (No. 433) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes to the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 5313) to regulate the taking or catching of sponges in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and the Straits of Florida outside of State jurisdiction; the landing, delivering, curing, selling, or possession of the same; providing means of enforcement of the same, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Fisheries.

A bill (S. 5314) for the relief of Edward J. Fisher; and

A bill (S. 5315) for the relief of Charles F. Ross; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 5316) authorizing the survey and sale of certain lands in Coconino County, Ariz., to the occupants thereof; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 5317) granting an increase of pension to Robert S. Parker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 5318) for the relief of the heirs of Mary A. Ragsdale, deceased, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 5319) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine suits brought by or on behalf of the Yankton Sioux Tribe of Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 5320) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Beadle (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5321) granting an increase of pension to James D. Bennett (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5322) to provide for the national defense; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 5323) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and to further regulate commerce among the States and with foreign countries; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 5324) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Myton, Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 5325) authorizing the county of St. Louis to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 5326) granting an increase of pension to William J. Murray (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 5327) granting an increase of pension to Adaline Norton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 5328) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Morningstar;

A bill (S. 5329) granting an increase of pension to Milford M. Britton;

A bill (S. 5330) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Riggs;

A bill (S. 5331) granting an increase of pension to Arthur Householder (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5332) granting an increase of pension to Emory A. Hilkert (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5333) granting an increase of pension to Moses Bahney; and

A bill (S. 5334) granting an increase of pension to Robert Layman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make an approximate classification of the unreserved unappropriated public lands of the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 141) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to have cleaned the exterior of the Federal building at Cincinnati, Ohio, under contract let upon competitive bidding, and appropriating money therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for beginning the improvements in the harbor of Key West, Fla., in order to provide a suitable naval station for use of torpedo boats, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of one executive assistant in seed distribution in the Bureau of Plant Industry, Agricultural Department, from $2,500 to $2,750 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. RANSDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION COMMISSION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduce the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 142) authorizing the Vocational Education Commission to employ such stenographic and clerical assistants as may be necessary, etc., was read twice by its title.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, a joint resolution has passed both Houses of Congress creating the commission and an appropriation of $15,000 has been made for their use. The Comptroller of the Treasury holds, however, that the use of the appropriation does not extend to the clerical force under the formal wording of the joint resolution; and this joint resolution which I introduce is simply to amend the previous joint resolution. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that action will be taken.

THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 341), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That for the compiling of data showing the results of insurance of bank deposits in Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Nebraska, and South Dakota, also the compiling of the statutes on the subject in said States and the judicial construction of said statutes in the courts of last resort, the Committee on Banking and Currency is authorized to employ expert assistance, the cost not to exceed $50, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman.

THE PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read and lie over under the rule.

The resolution (S. Res. 342) was read, as follows:

Whereas all nations largely engaged in commerce now pay either indirectly or specifically the tolls of their principal national lines of steamships passing through the Suez Canal, and are preparing to make the same provisions for payment out of the national treasuries of tolls for their vessels which may seek to pass through the Panama Canal; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, acting on the urgent recommendation of the President, is now legislating with a view to provide that tolls shall be paid in full by all American ships which may be engaged in both the coastwise and foreign trade at Panama, so that American ships will probably be the only ships which will be required to pay tolls for the use of this great waterway, built by the United States Government at a cost of nearly $400,000,000 of the money of the American people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in the event of the free-tolls provision of the Panama Canal act being repealed, in order to establish equality between American and foreign ships in the matter of the payment of tolls, no vessel of foreign register, whose owner or owners receive a subsidy or bounty of any kind whatsoever in connection with tolls for the use of the Panama Canal, shall be permitted to enter or pass through said canal.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution lie over under the rule, as I desire to address myself briefly to it at some subsequent time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10138) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 7, 11, 35, 40, 45, 47, and agree to the same.

BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY,
N. P. BRYAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. A. M. ADAIR,
J. N. LANGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

SELAH G. BLAKEMAN AND TIMOTHY E. HAWLEY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the enrolled bill (S. 1689) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations, and, without objection, the request was ordered to be complied with.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES—PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read (H. Con. Res. 37):

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 20th day of April, 1914, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

Mr. KERN. I ask that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

STATUE OF ZACHARIAH CHANDLER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read (H. Con. Res. 36):

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the governor, and through him to the people, of Michigan for the statue of Zachariah Chandler, whose name is so honorably identified with the history of that State and of the United States.

Resolved, That this work of art is accepted in the name of the Nation and assigned a place in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, already set aside by act of Congress for statues of eminent citizens, and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Michigan.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in reference to the resolution, I feel quite sure the senior Senator from Michigan suggested that he would like to have it lie over for the present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to have the resolution lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] stated to the Chair that it was his desire that the resolution be concurred in; but, of course, it makes no difference to the Chair.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that the resolution may go over, because I desire to submit some remarks on it, and I am not prepared to do so this morning. I therefore ask that it may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will lie on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15279. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

VESSELS IN COASTWISE AND FOREIGN TRADE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 23), submitted by Mr. SHEPPARD on the 17th instant, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to immediately investigate and, as soon as practicable, report to Congress the following information:

First. To what extent, if any, vessels and steamship lines are engaged in transporting freight between Atlantic and Pacific ports wholly by water, or partly by water and partly by rail, and in the coastwise trade of the United States, under joint ownership or common control or in community of interest, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership, trust, holding committee, or otherwise, with railroad companies engaged in transporting freight by rail between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States and in the coastwise trade of the United States, stating separately what vessels and steamship lines are owned and controlled by said railroad companies, if any, and what vessels and steamship lines in said transportation are under a common or joint ownership or control with said railroad companies, or any thereof, and the names of the owners, stockholders, trustees, holding companies, directors, and officers of all steamship lines and railroads engaged in the coastwise and foreign trade of the United States. And to what extent and how, if any, they are consolidated, directed, or operated by and through holding companies, interlocking stocks, interlocking directorates, or interlocking officers.

Second. What are the prevailing rates upon the principal commodities carried by vessels between said Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States wholly by water or partly by water and partly by rail across the Isthmus of Panama or Tehuantepec, and what are the prevailing rates between said Atlantic and Pacific ports upon such commodities transported wholly by rail, and what are the prevailing rates for transportation of similar commodities wholly by water by vessels not under United States registry for similar distances as the water routes between said Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States carried under similar conditions.

Third. And what are the prevailing rates upon the principal commodities carried by vessels in the coastwise trade of the United States in comparison with such rates on similar commodities for similar distances carried by vessels in the foreign trade of the United States.

Fourth. And what are the prevailing rates for transportation for similar commodities wholly by water by vessels not under United States registry for similar distances on similar commodities under similar conditions in comparison with the rates on commodities transported in the coastwise trade of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas, who submitted the resolution, if an identical resolution has not been introduced in the House, and whether or not it has been passed by that body?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has been favorably reported in the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Has not the resolution already passed the House?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am not sure as to that. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I do not think it has been reached in the House on account of the vast amount of legislation pending over there. I introduced the resolution in this body thinking that in this way action could be gotten on it sooner.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I have no objection whatever to the passage of the resolution, but I was told this morning that the resolution had passed the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think it has.

Mr. SMOOT. But if the Senator is quite sure it has not, then of course I have no objection to it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I did not hear the resolution distinctly in all its parts. Does it direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to make this investigation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The resolution directs an investigation and a report to Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know, of course, what the intention of the Senator from Texas may be in regard to the treatment of this resolution; but inasmuch as it came over from a previous day under the rule, I assume that he intends to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

A copy of the resolution has just been handed to me. It contains more than two pages of printed matter. I have not had time to read it. I consider it of considerable importance, and possibly it would involve quite a time and considerable investigation. I am quite confident that certain matters which I see alluded to here have already been investigated by committees of Congress of one House at least, and I would not desire now to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to make this investigation.

I suggest to the Senator that he either let the resolution go over or have it referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which I think ought to consider it before the Senate acts upon it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It will be entirely satisfactory to me to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that we may proceed with the calendar at the point where the Senate left off at its last session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The first business on the calendar was the bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. FALL. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3112) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. In view of the necessary absence of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. MYERS], who is interested in that bill, I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 156) limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That resolution is the unfinished business, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is not the unfinished business.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 218) proposing an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 26) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3023) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Ohio is not present, and on that account I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the condition of trade in China, for the purpose of determining the desirability of establishing there a permanent exposition of the products of the United States of America, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2425) to authorize the Roanoke River Development Co. to construct and maintain a dam across the Roanoke River in Mecklenburg County, in the State of Virginia, approximately 20 miles below the town of Clarksville, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3971) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1986) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry Fuller was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that this bill and the two following ones may be passed over. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate bill 1986, Senate bill 3594, and Senate bill 1990 will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Utah.

The resolution (S. Res. 254) to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War Volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 121) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator making the objection to the fact that the Senate had this bill under consideration a few days ago, and it was discussed at some considerable length, and we had hoped to be able to take it up to-day and get rid of it. We had formerly made an agreement to consider the Senate committee amendments and the other amendments and dispose of the bill at that time, but it was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I did not make the objection because of opposition to the bill itself; but I presume that the special order will be laid down again at 1 o'clock, and I hardly think we can complete this bill in that time under the five-minute rule. I will cooperate with the Senator to get early action upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the special order come into operation at 1 o'clock?

Mr. GALLINGER. I assumed that to be so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is that the fact?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then it is useless to enter upon the consideration of this bill at this time, because there is only one minute left in which to do so.

The bill (H. R. 6827) to amend an act entitled "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4552) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN and Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

VOLUNTEER FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (H. R. 7138) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will take up this bill for consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The special order comes on at 1 o'clock.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I move that the bill be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion can not be made before 1 o'clock.

Mr. REED. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of the bill. I may say to the Senate that the War Department is very anxious to have the bill considered; and if there ever comes a time when we will probably need it, I think it is right now. It is a bill that has received the earnest attention of the House; it has passed the House; it has received the consideration of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and it has already been read. It ought not to take very long to dispose of it.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order of business, which is Senate bill 4405. It will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7138.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Oregon withhold the motion until I can make a brief statement touching the point of order?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the view has been expressed by some of the skilled parliamentarians in this body, including the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the two Senators from Utah, that the decision of the Vice President overruling the point of order and holding that the special order was not displaced by reason of the failure to dispose of the same upon the first day when it was set is not supported by precedent and will embarrass the Senate in the future transaction of its business. I had expected that some one else more familiar with the rules and practices prevailing in the Senate would discuss the point of order from the standpoint contrary to that occupied by these very able and learned Senators.

Considering the subject for the purpose of determining my own vote on the appeal from the decision of the Chair, I have reached the conclusion that the ruling of the Vice President is right, and should therefore be sustained, and will briefly submit some of the considerations which have prompted this conclusion.

THE PRECEDENTS SUSTAIN THE CHAIR.

It must be borne in mind that while no precedents have been cited to the contrary, the Vice President has called attention to the decision of the President pro tempore, Mr. Frye, of February 23, 1901, in point. The ruling of the Vice President gives some dignity to special orders, and will in no wise prevent the Senate from displacing the special order by an affirmative majority vote. The contrary view penalizes special orders unless, as rarely happens, they are disposed of during the first day.

The suggestion that this ruling, if sustained, will, in effect, enable the Senate to mortgage its time in advance, and thus exclude the consideration of other business, is not of controlling force when it is recalled that the object of a special order is to make certain the consideration of a certain measure at a fixed time and that the Senate can, by a majority vote, proceed to the consideration of any other subject and thus relieve itself of the obligation to finally dispose of the special order whenever in the opinion of the Senate it is desirable to do so. It is clear that since, upon motion adopted by a majority vote, the Senate can displace a special order with other business, the ruling will not have the effect of seriously interfering with the business of the Senate, as has been suggested by some Senators.

Those who have argued against sustaining the Chair have declared that the sole object of a special order is to give it "a day in court." In the use of this illustration they are unfortunate. The term "day in court" does not mean the right of a litigant to begin the trial of his case, but almost always implies the right to proceed to the hearing and determination of the cause. How can a measure be said to have had its "day in court" if the discussion of it has merely been commenced and the measure has not been disposed of? Before it can fairly be said to have had its "day in court," it must be passed upon by the Senate or that body must have expressed its desire not to finally determine it by voting to take up some other measure.

So, if the effect of making a bill a special order is to give that bill its "day in court," the ruling of the Chair should be sustained, because that is exactly what the Vice President has done. He has held that when the Senate, by a two-thirds vote, agrees to take up a measure at a certain time, it shall proceed under the rules to finally determine the measure, unless before a vote upon it has been taken the Senate decides to take up something else.

Any other view of the matter would make procedure by special order in the Senate ineffective. It would give no more rights to a bill which two-thirds of the Senate vote to take up at a fixed time than to another which may be taken up by a majority vote.

If the contention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is correct, that Rule VIII precludes the consideration of special orders during the morning hour so long as the calendar under Rule VIII remains disposed of, it must follow that this special order has no rights or privileges within the morning hour, either upon the initial day or upon any subsequent day, when it had been consigned, in accord with Rule X, to that mysterious bourne designated as the "Calendar of Special Orders."

If it is agreed that the early clause in Rule VIII, which reads "unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order," protects the special order upon the one particular day that is named in the motion creating it, why do not those same words apply to, follow, and protect that special order in all of its rights upon the following day?

The two Senators from Utah argue that after the special order has been taken up, whether disposed of or not, whether or not it has been displaced by the unfinished business, the fact that it has been laid before the Senate at all is sufficient to comport with the peculiar privilege and dignity attaching to its character as a special order, made by a two-thirds vote of the Senate, that it then goes off somewhere—to a mysterious and indefinable realm designated as the "Calendar of Special Orders." According to the arguments of these Senators, it has had its "day in court," and if it ever comes up again, it must be under Rule IX, upon a specific motion for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I prefer to proceed to the conclusion of my statement, and then I will yield to the Senator from Utah.

In other words, if a Senator is indiscreet enough to ask that a bill be made a special order for a particular day and hour, and two-thirds of the Senators are willing to grant his request, the bill is straightway placed in special and peculiar jeopardy. It is marked for a legislative burial ground, conspicuously designated as the Calendar of Special Orders, under Rule IX.

Every Senator realizes that Calendar IX is a Senator's last hope. It is rarely, if ever, reached in the regular order of business. How many Senators here can recall when the calendar under Rule IX was reached in a regular way? It takes a motion to lift a bill from this tomb, and the fact that the bill has once been buried there puts a Senator upon guard. He becomes suspicious and slow to assent to the resurrection.

And so we have the special receiving vault, labeled the "Calendar of Special Orders."

To state the matter in another way: A bill that has once been given special consideration by the Senate by a two-thirds vote—that is, a "special order"—can by the easiest of parliamentary legerdemain be relegated to a much inferior position than it originally occupied—to a place where it is virtually blacklisted.

So long as it was upon Calendar VIII it could be reached in the course of regular procedure; if not reached one day, it might be taken up the next; if once reached and not disposed of, it might have a second chance. These privileges it enjoyed without special let or hindrance. It could also be taken from Calendar VIII without any stigma attaching to it, without a sign above its title that it belonged to the class of "has beens."

If a special order of the Senate has no preferred standing in this body, why did the Committee on Rules ever frame Rule X, to which a bill must go if once made a special order and not disposed of on the first day? The "Calendar of Special Orders," as construed by the Senators from Utah, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, and others, becomes a mysterious place in parliamentary economy comparable to that "twilight zone" so affectionately referred to in debate by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] as the mysterious borderland of the millenium from which no real Progressive ever returns. May it not be said that this "Calendar of Special Orders" was wisely provided to give special rights to all such bills as two-thirds of the Senate shall decide are of sufficient importance to have special consideration?

I am inclined to follow the ruling of the Vice President, supported by his able opinion based upon the decision of ex-President pro tempore Mr. Frye, who said that inasmuch as it requires a two-thirds vote of the Senate to make a special order, a bill having received this recognition becomes clothed with unusual rights; that whenever there is no unfinished business subsequent to the special order made, that special order is to be laid before the Senate as unfinished business. The able and astute Vice President has been governed by the time-honored precedents of this body, and his ruling will give reasonable effect to all the rules established for the regulation of procedure here. No harm can come to the Senate by sustaining his decision. It may make the Senate more cautious as to what measures it will make special orders. It may make us more reluctant to encroach upon the morning hour and to "mortgage" the time of the Senate. As the Vice President has suggested, the Senate will still have the power, by a majority vote upon motion to proceed to the consideration of some other subject, to displace special orders.

So long as we have permitted the morning hour to be mortgaged and preempted by the mere notices of Senators, sometimes given weeks in advance of their intention, upon the conclusion of the morning business, to speak upon subjects not really before this body, thus deferring for days and even weeks consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, the objection that the ruling of the Vice President which in effect says that when a bill is made a special order it does not lose its dignity as such by the mere expiration of the day when its consideration is begun constitutes an unreasonable mortgaging of the time of the Senate sounds absurd to the mind not trained to the arts or devoted to the practices of parliamentary sleight of hand.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Senator from Arkansas, so far as my own position is concerned in this matter and I believe as I presented it to the Senate, is only partially correct. I have never contended that a special order did not give any privilege to a bill, for I particularly called attention to the fact that if a bill is made a special order for an hour upon a particular day at the hour of the day for which that special order had been fixed the bill must be presented to the Senate. The privilege that bill has is this: The bill must be presented to the Senate, and then if the bill is not disposed of on that particular day and the Senate adjourns before the conclusion of the measure, with that bill pending before the body, automatically it becomes the unfinished business on the morrow unless——

Mr. GALLINGER. Provided there is no other unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say exactly what the Senator from New Hampshire has suggested, providing there is no unfinished business upon the calendar at that time.

In this particular case, Mr. President, when the Senator from Montana asked that this bill be made a special order, I myself called his attention to the fact that there was unfinished business upon the calendar and told him at the time that the unfinished business would come up at 2 oclock and had precedence over a special order. The Senator from Montana admitted it, and the hour was changed from 2 o'clock, as first requested, to 1 o'clock, at my suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah, if the request, as I originally preferred it, that it be made a special order for 2 o'clock had been acceded to, would not the bill have stood for disposition immediately after the unfinished business?

Mr. SMOOT. Not unless on the particular day on which the special order had been made the unfinished business had been disposed of, and then the special order taken up for consideration. Otherwise, it would have had no privilege. That has been the past practice of the Senate.

I did not take the time the other day to point to precedents, but I have here at least 20 showing that that has been the case. I contented myself by simply calling attention to the bill in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] in relation to the liquor question.

Mr. President, I am still of the opinion that the rules as they are to-day were made for the very purpose that a special order should not have a privileged position except under the circumstances to which I have referred this morning. I believe that anyone who has studied the question and the rule before the change in 1884 can come to no other conclusion, because the rule that governed special orders in 1854, which was referred to by the Vice President, could not have been more specific than it is. It is Rule XXXI, and the fourth paragraph specifically states that—

> Special orders shall not lose their position on account of intervening adjournment, nor shall they lose their relative position on the calendar, except by a vote of the Senate, until finally disposed of.

Why was that rule abolished if the ruling of the Chair is to stand now? Why did the Senate change it? I defy any Senator to write language more plainly than that and express a position more clearly than the words of the old rule.

Mr. President, the rule of 1854 was changed because of the fact that the Senate decided to make the unfinished business the privileged question, and it automatically comes up at 2 o'clock every day until it is disposed of. Before that time, Mr. President, that was not the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair ask where the rule is that makes the unfinished business come up at 2 o'clock? The Chair can not lay his hand on it just now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I may be permitted to make a suggestion, I do not think there is any specific rule on the subject, but under usual parliamentary law, when a piece of business has been entered upon and not finished on a particular day, it comes up at the meeting the subsequent day. Now, that ordinary rule of parliamentary law has been interfered with and modified by Rule VIII, which provides that—

> At the conclusion of the morning business for each day * * * the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

And then the rule further provides that that "shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was not the inquiry of the Chair. The inquiry of the Chair was where is the rule.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the only rule there is on the subject, as I understand, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. The effect of the practice——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not asking about the practice; the Chair is asking where the rule is.

Mr. SMOOT. Rule VIII specifically provides that until 2 o'clock certain business shall have precedence, but after 2 o'clock it does not; and the only thing——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that. The Chair was asking where the rule is about the unfinished business coming up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, that has been the rule and in accordance with the precedents of the body ever since I have been here, and for years previously.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember precisely what Jefferson's Manual says upon this point, but I think that it also specifically upholds my contention on this point.

Mr. WALSH. I dare say this matter has now been sufficiently discussed, and I move to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion has been lost, the Chair understands, although the Chair was not here at the time.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been lost, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. After the matter has been debated and discussed, is not the motion then in order? My understanding is that the purpose of the motion is to shut off debate. Of course, after it has been debated the question is before the body in a different parliamentary status.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Montana that we shall reach a vote upon this matter in a very few moments, I think, if he will be patient about it? I do not think there is any disposition to debate it at any further length.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Montana has been obliged to exhibit considerable patience, but he will be glad to withhold the motion if the Senator from Utah desires to say anything further.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from Montana that the Chair is of the impression that only one motion to table could be in order, and the motion to table was not carried the other day, as the RECORD discloses. The Chair thinks that the question on which the Senate is now to vote is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a word. I wish, first of all, to complete what I began to say in response to the inquiry of the Chair. The inquiry of the Chair was, Where was the rule which made the unfinished business come up at 2 o'clock each day? As I understand, it is a rule of general parliamentary law that when business has not been completed upon one day it comes up the next day for completion as the unfinished business. That general rule of parliamentary law has been modified to the extent only that under Rule VIII of the Senate the unfinished business is postponed until 2 o'clock by the express provisions of that rule. So, taking the general parliamentary rule in connection with Rule VIII, the unfinished business comes up automatically every day at 2 o'clock.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has argued at some length in support of the ruling of the Chair, and has undertaken to show that when the Senate by a two-thirds vote has made a bill a special order for a particular day, that gives it some unusual status. It does, Mr. President; it gives it a status which no other bill has, namely, the right to come up on the particular day that has been fixed, at the hour fixed, and to be considered, if there is no unfinished business, during the remainder of that day.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment. But if it is not disposed of, the rule expressly provides, not that it shall be continued from day to day at the same time—which would have been a very simple thing to provide if the Senate had so desired—but that it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders. Then we must go to the rules to ascertain what is to be done with the Calendar of Special Orders, and when we do so we find there is absolutely no provision anywhere in the rules as to when that Calendar of Special Orders shall be called.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator will find in Rule X the provision with relation to the unfinished business.

Mr. WEST. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. It requires, as I understand from the rules, a two-thirds vote in order to make a bill a special order?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEST. But the Senate can displace that at any time by a majority vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WEST. And if it is the will of the Senate to displace a special order, why do we mortgage the time of the Senate when we can at any time displace such a measure?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know that I can say anything further in response to the question of the Senator from Georgia than I have already said, that before the Senate will consent to even set aside a particular hour of one particular day for the consideration of a measure there must be a two-thirds vote; it is considered sufficiently out of the ordinary even to give up a single day to the consideration of a bill in advance to require that that shall be done.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas had argued that the special order came up at the conclusion of the morning hour, provided there was no unfinished business in the way, there might have been some foundation for his argument; but when he insists that it comes up automatically every day at 1 o'clock, he is utterly without any support whatever in the rules. There is simply the provision that such a bill shall go to the Calendar of Special Orders, and then there is no provision in the rules at all as to when it shall come up. Certainly, if it had been intended by the Senate that it should come up automatically at a certain hour every day, it would have been provided in precise terms.

Mr. GALLINGER. As it was in the old rule.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As the old rule of 1856 provided in precise terms that such a bill should come up at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes seems to have it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND and Mr. SMOOT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST responded to his name.

Mr. LEWIS. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point can not be made at this time, the roll call having begun.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I inquire if the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Kentucky has not voted.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently when my name was called, and I desire now to withdraw my vote. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], who is absent.

Mr. KERN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is absent because of illness. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and vote "nay."

Mr. ROOT. I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I do not see him in the Chamber. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS. As I have already stated, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. I ask if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CATRON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FALL] is paired with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is absent, is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. WALSH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] and his general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

I also desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and his general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I inquire if he has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ashurst	Hughes	Owen	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Kern	Perkins	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Lane	Pittman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thompson
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Walsh
Fletcher	Lewis	Sheppard	West
Gore	Martin, Va.	Shields	Williams
Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Hollis	O'Gorman	Simmons

NAYS—25.

Brandegee	Cummins	Oliver	Townsend
Bristow	Dillingham	Overman	Vardaman
Bryan	Gallinger	Page	Warren
Burleigh	Jones	Poindexter	Weeks
Catron	Lippitt	Root
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Smoot
Crawford	McCumber	Sutherland

NOT VOTING—36.

Bradley	Goff	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Gronna	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Burton	James	Penrose	Stephenson
Clapp	Johnson	Ransdell	Sterling
Clarke, Ark.	Kenyon	Reed	Stone
Colt	La Follette	Saulsbury	Thomas
Culberson	McLean	Shafroth	Thornton
du Pont	Myers	Sherman	Tillman
Fall	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.	Works

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

VOLUNTEER FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7138) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon to proceed to the consideration of House bill 7138.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on that motion I should like to know what reason there is for displacing Senate bill 4405 at this time. I desire to say to the Senator from Oregon that if the bill which he desires to present for the consideration of the Senate bears any special reference to the condition in which we find ourselves placed this morning with reference to Mexico, I might not be disposed to antagonize the substitution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am informed that it does, Mr. President. The purpose of the bill is to place the volunteer forces of the United States in such condition that they may be used if necessary. The War Department has been very anxious that I should bring up the bill. I do not want to interfere with any bill which the Senator has in charge if I can secure the consent of the Senate to consider House bill 7138 at a convenient season. There is no particular hurry about it if it can be acted upon within the course of the next few days.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator understand that his motion displaces the bill that is now before the Senate? I do not desire to embarrass the consideration of the measure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make the point of order that this motion is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the question is put I desire to ask unanimous consent that the special order may go over without prejudice. If this motion prevails, then it is displaced by the action of the Senate; but if it goes over by unanimous consent without prejudice it continues to enjoy such advantages as it now has.

Mr. WALSH. I feel that the Senator from Oregon ought to concede at least that much in view of my desire to accommodate him.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I repeat the suggestion that the motion is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7138.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7138) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the bill has been read, and I simply ask that it be read now for committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the bill is read for amendment I will ask the Senator from Oregon to state very briefly the purpose and purport of the bill. It need not take more than a minute.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the War Department, in a letter which is attached to the bill, has stated its purpose very much more succinctly and more clearly than it would be possible for me to do in any statement I might make. I therefore ask that the department's statement may be read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WEST in the chair). Without objection, it will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter. During the reading,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a result of glancing over the report, which I had not previously read, I assume that this bill is simply to organize into a compact body in time of war the volunteer forces known as the militia of the States. I will ask the Senator if that is correct?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the bill has not anything to do with the Organized Militia. They are called into requisition first in case of an emergency, and this is to provide an additional force.

Mr. GALLINGER. An independent volunteer force?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Only in time of actual or threatened war.

Mr. GALLINGER. I highly approve of the bill, as I understand it; and I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the letter from the War Department, which is very illuminating, may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may say to the Senator that the bill had the cordial approval of Mr. ROOT when he was Secretary of War; it had the approval of Mr. Dickinson when he was Secretary of War; it had the approval of Mr. Stimson when he was Secretary of War; and it has the approval of the present Secretary of War.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe that fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, is it not also true that this is substantially the same bill which was agreed upon by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs of the last Congress?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is. I may say, too, that the bill has had the careful consideration of Mr. HAY and the other members of the House committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Understanding it as I now do, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the letter of the War Department may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is, in full, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, August 7, 1913.

Memorandum for the Chief of Staff.

Subject: S. 542 and H. R. 7138, Sixty-third Congress, first session, to provide for the raising of volunteer forces in time of war.

1. Herewith are copies of bills to provide for raising volunteer forces in time of actual or threatened war. The two bills are meant to accomplish the same object and are substantially the same. They have the same number of sections and the subject matter dealt with in each section is the same. There are several minor differences which will be discussed in detail later. The following discussion is submitted with reference to the proposed law:

NECESSITY FOR AN ADEQUATE LAW FOR THE RAISING OF VOLUNTEERS.

2. In the five principal wars in which the United States has been engaged since its existence as a separate State the records show that of the total number of men enrolled 7.5 per cent were furnished by the Regular Army, 69.7 per cent were volunteers, and 22.8 per cent were militia, rangers, and emergency men.

3. The report of the Board on the Organization of the Land Forces of the United States shows that at the outbreak of war with a first-class power we should be capable of mobilizing at once an effective force of 502,000 mobile and Coast Artillery troops as a minimum for the first line, and that to augment this force and replace losses plans should be in existence for raising immediately an additional force of 300,000 men; total, 802,000 men.

4. The number of men of the Regular Army available for duty in the United States after the outlying possessions shall have been garrisoned will be about 51,000 men, including 13,000 Coast Artillery. The strength of the Organized Militia is 112,700 (Report of Chief of Division of Militia Affairs, 1912), of which 7,200 belong to the Hospital Corps. Total peace strength of fighting troops, including both Regulars and Organized Militia, 161,000 men. If both the Regular and Militia organizations be brought to the maximum strength allowed by law, the total will be about 350,000 men. To make up the 502,000 for the first line 152,000 volunteers will be required, and to replace their losses 90,000 additional will be required; total volunteers to be organized for the first line, 242,000 men. Even though we may assume that all the Organized Militia will be called into the service and kept at war strength, the probability is that in the future as in the past from 50 to 75 per cent of our soldiers will come from the volunteers.

5. Mr. ROOT, when Secretary of War, emphasized the great importance of legislation for providing an adequate system for the raising, training, and officering volunteer forces. It is patent that an adequate law for this purpose should be on the statute books.

6. The only law in existence authorizing the raising of volunteer forces was that passed April 22, 1898. This law was passed three days before the declaration of war with Spain, and is defective in several ways, some of its deficiencies being due to the haste and confusion which prevailed at the time of its passage, and others to the fact that a good many of its provisions have become obsolete.

7. Secretary Taft in his report for 1906 called attention to the defects of the law of 1898 and showed the necessity for a revision of the laws governing the raising of volunteer forces.

President Roosevelt sent a special message to Congress in December, 1908, on the subject, in which he says:

"Everyone familiar with the existing law is aware that it is faulty and wholly inadequate to a speedy and proper organization of a volunteer force, and that in part it has become obsolete through recent legislation affecting the Organized Militia."

8. Secretary of War Dickinson in his report for 1910 says:

"The present law for raising a volunteer army in time of actual and threatened war was placed on the statute books piecemeal and hurriedly, partly on the eve of the Spanish War and partly after hostilities had actually commenced. As might naturally be expected of legislation passed in such circumstances, the plan which it provides for raising a volunteer army is faulty and inadequate to a speedy and proper organization of a volunteer force. Within a year after its passage it was considered advisable to enact a new law to provide for raising the volunteers used in the Philippine insurrection. This statute, however, was only a temporary measure, and after the volunteers raised under it were mustered out of service the older law became again operative, but has in part become obsolete through subsequent legislation affecting the Organized Militia. A comprehensive measure for the organization of a volunteer army, to be raised only after Congress has made a declaration of war, would be of inestimable value if the country is ever again confronted with a foreign war. * * * Some new legislative enactment of this kind is an essential part of our national military system and will enable the General Staff and the War College to discharge one of the most important duties for which Congress created them, and which they are now prevented from doing because of the absence of such law."

9. In a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, under date of June 6, 1911, Mr. Stimson, then Secretary of War, said:

"The act of April 22, 1898, did not recognize the difference between militia and Volunteers, but since the Spanish-American War the militia is recognized as an entirely separate organization from the Volunteers. In that act there is a definite recognition of three different classes of troops, viz, the Regular Army, the militia, and the Volunteers; and it is provided that the Organized Militia shall be called into the service of the United States before the Volunteers are organized. The volunteer bill now proposed is intended to provide an organization for these volunteer troops. * * * It provides for a complete organization of any force of Volunteers that may hereafter be called out, whether that force be a single regiment or an army of a million men. The bill harmonizes entirely with the militia organization under the Dick law and with the existing law governing the Regular Army, and it is elastic and flexible in that the organization of the volunteer forces is prescribed to conform to that of the Regular Army, and any future changes in the Regular Army will automatically carry corresponding changes in the volunteer forces. This is now prescribed for the militia."

10. In his annual report for 1911 Secretary Stimson says:

"I earnestly recommend the passage of the volunteer bill. * * * There is no new policy or principle involved in the proposed volunteer bill, which is based on the experience in all previous wars."

In his report for 1912 the Secretary of War says:

"I again earnestly recommend the passage of the volunteer bill, providing the necessary legislation under which, in time of war, a force of National Volunteers can be created without delay. * * * It is the height of national shortsightedness not to have upon our books an adequate law which will govern and provide for the raising of such a volunteer force in time of war. * * * There is now pending in Congress a bill which makes such a provision and which, I believe, is admirably adapted to meet the exigencies which would be presented in case of war. Its passage has been urged again and again by this department. It would not entail a dollar's expense upon the Government at this time or in the future until war comes. I earnestly urge its passage."

DEFECTS OF THE LAW OF 1898.

11. The following are the defects of the existing law for the raising of Volunteers:

(a) It is provided in section 4 that the term of enlistment shall be for two years unless sooner terminated.

The proposed law will correct this defect.

(b) The existing law provides that all officers and men of the Volunteers shall be discharged from the service of the United States when the purposes for which they were called into service shall have been accomplished or on the conclusion of hostilities. But the law does not fix definitely who is to decide when their services are no longer required nor the date on which their muster out is to begin.

This defect will be corrected by the proposed law, which provides that the Volunteers shall be mustered out as soon as practicable after the President shall have issued his proclamation announcing the termination of the war or the passing of the emergency or imminence of war.

(c) The provision under section 5, which relates to the Indian Territory, is obsolete.

(d) Section 6 provides that each regiment of Volunteers shall have one surgeon and two assistant surgeons.

The proposed law provides the same personnel of the Medical Corps for each organization of Volunteers as will be provided for similar organizations of the Regular Army.

(e) Section 6 provides also that regimental and company officers shall be appointed by the governors of the States and Territories.

This defect will be corrected by the provision in section 5 of the proposed law, which authorizes the President to appoint all the officers of the Volunteer forces.

(f) Section 8 is defective in that it requires the records of Volunteer organizations to be deposited with the Record and Pension Office.

This will be corrected by the provisions of section 9 of the proposed law.

(g) The provision is section 10 in regard to the numbers, grades, and titles of staff officers for units larger than regiments is defective, principally because the composition of these units have changed since the law was passed.

The proposed law will correct this defect. Section 5 provides that the number and grade of such officers shall not exceed the number and grade of like officers provided for a like force of the Regular Army.

(h) The provision in section 13 limiting the number of officers of the Regular Army to one for each regiment of Volunteers is defective. Experience has shown that much better results are obtained by having a greater number.

This defect will be corrected by the provisions in section 7 of the proposed law, which limits the number of regular officers to one to each separate battalion of Volunteers and to four to each regiment of Volunteers.

ADVANTAGES OF THE PROPOSED LAW.

12. In addition to correcting the defects of the existing law as written, the proposed law is more complete, and corrects the deficiencies of omission in the old by provisions as follows:

(a) In section 3 it is provided that the power to organize shall include the power to provide the officers and enlisted men of all grades and classes, including trained nurses, male and female, that may be necessary in the various arms, corps, and departments.

This provision is broad and elastic and allows the organization of units of all branches, corps, and departments to proceed simultaneously.

(b) The last provision in section 3 permits volunteers of any particular arm to be organized as soon as the Organized Militia of that particular arm has been called into the service.

This corrects that defect of the existing militia law which requires all the Organized Militia of all arms to be called into the service before any volunteers can be organized.

(c) The provision in section 4 requiring organizations of Volunteer units to be the same as corresponding units of the Regular Army will make future changes in the proposed law to meet changes in organizations of the Regular Army unnecessary.

The last provision in section 4 in regard to the organization of the coast defenses, machine-gun detachments, establishments of the Medical Department, remount depots, military trains, secret-service agencies, military prisons, lines of communications, supply depots, and other adjuncts that may be necessary for the prosecution of the war is broad and elastic and permits the organization of all the adjuncts or such of them as the exigencies may warrant at any time when war is imminent or after it has been declared.

(d) There is question as to the wisdom of the last provision of section 5. This provision did not appear in the original bill (S. 2518). It was stated by Senator DU PONT that this provision was inserted because it was thought wiser to leave the number and rank of general officers and their personal aids to be determined by the circumstances of the case when the emergency should arise and which could be arranged by presidential recommendation, subject to the judgment of Congress.

(e) Section 6 provides for the appointment by the President of the staff officers that will be necessary for the various Staff Corps and departments.

The act of 1898 did not provide any staff officers except for troops in the field. Within three months after the passage of the act there were eight different acts authorizing increases in the Staff Corps and departments by volunteer appointments. The act of March 2, 1899, specified a number of staff officers equal to 1 for each 175 enlisted men. The proposed law provides not to exceed the ratio of 1 staff officer for each 200 enlisted men.

(f) Section 7 provides for the appointment by the President of all officers for the volunteer forces, and wisely requires that preference in their selection be given to those who have had military training and instruction in the Regular Army, National Guard, Volunteer forces, or military schools.

(g) Section 8 makes provision for the filling of temporary vacancies in the Regular Army that may be caused by the appointment of regular officers to volunteer commissions.

This provision will prevent the depletion of officers in the Regular Army and provides for the filling of all temporary vacancies, whether caused by appointments to volunteer commissions or details to the Staff Corps and departments.

(h) Section 10 provides for the recruitment of all organizations of the land forces.

This is one of the most important provisions of the proposed law. Provision is made for the additional officers necessary for the efficient recruitment of all arms, corps, and departments; depots for the enlistment and training of recruits are to be established: transfers of disabled officers and men may be made to these depots from organizations in the field in exchange for able-bodied officers and men from the depots. In this way the organizations in the field may be kept full of able-bodied fighting troops, while at the same time the services of partly disabled men may not be lost entirely to the Government. In other words, the proposed law permits the establishment of the depot battalion system for all regiments of Regulars and Volunteers. The last provision in section 10 authorizes the enlistment and training of recruits for National Guard organizations in the service of the United States at the depots established for the training of recruits for the Regular Army and Volunteers.

(i) Section 11 provides for the employment of retired officers and enlisted men for recruiting duty.

This provision prevents the loss to the Government of the services of men who may be capable of performing efficiently the duties at recruiting stations and depots, but who are not fit for service in the field.

(j) The last provision in section 12 provides for the detail of one medical inspector who is experienced in sanitation to each army, field army, and division, and for the base and lines of communications.

(k) Section 14 provides a fair and just method of eliminating the vicious and unfit officers.

(l) Other advantages of the proposed law may be stated as follows:

(1) It will enable plans to be formulated and put in workable shape, so that Volunteers can be speedily organized at the outbreak of war.

(2) It should prevent the payment of bounties.

(3) It will do away with short-term service with all its evils.

(4) By procuring the necessary number of men at the beginning of a war for a long period drafting should not be necessary.

(5) The law should contribute toward the saving of men and money during the war and a decrease in the pension list thereafter.

(6) No appropriation of money is involved in the proposed law.

HISTORY OF THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

13. In the Fifty-ninth Congress the War Department recommended legislation for providing volunteer forces in time of war, and prepared a bill which was introduced into both Houses on the same day, February 18, 1907.

In the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses similar bills were introduced into both Houses. Later, in the Sixty-first Congress, a bill (S. 4003) was introduced which contained modifications of the previous bills. All these bills were read and referred to committees, but no further action taken, not because there was opposition, but because the pressure of other business prevented their consideration.

14. At the request of the War Department, in the Sixty-second Congress, Senate bill 312 was introduced, which was identical with Senate bill 4003 of the previous Congress. This bill contained a number of provisions which did not meet with the approval of the Senate committee, and, after conference with representatives of the War Department, another bill (S. 2518) was prepared and introduced May 25, 1911. After hearings on S. 2518 as originally prepared, there were so many amendments that the bill was practically recast in the form in which it now appears. By unanimous vote of the committee this bill was ordered to be favorably reported to the Senate. It was introduced again the Senate in the Sixty-third Congress, first session, April 9, 1913. It is now S. 542. H. R. 7138, which is practically the same as S. 542, was introduced into the House July 28, 1913.

* * * * * * *

RECOMMENDATION.

That steps be taken to bring about the passage of the House bill as corrected, except that for section 4 there be substituted section 4 of the Senate bill.

JNO. E. MCMAHON,
Lieutenant Colonel, General Staff,
Acting Chief of War College Division.

H. LIGGETT,
Brigadier General, United States Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). The bill will be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after the word "militia," to insert "while in the service of the United States," so as to make the section read:

That the land forces of the United States shall consist of the Regular Army, the organized land militia while in the service of the United States, and such volunteer forces as Congress may authorize.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 1, line 11, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That all enlistments in the volunteer forces shall be for a period terminating with the war or, if war shall not occur, with the passing of the imminence of war," and insert "That the term of enlistment in the volunteer forces shall be the same as that for the Regular Army, exclusive of reserve periods," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the volunteer forces shall be raised, organized, and maintained, as in this act provided, only during the existence of war or while war is imminent, and only after Congress shall have authorized the President to raise such a force: Provided, That the term of enlistment in the volunteer forces shall be the same as that for the Regular Army, exclusive of reserve periods, and all officers and enlisted men composing such volunteer forces shall be mustered out of the service of the United States as soon as practicable after the President shall have issued a proclamation announcing the termination of the war or the passing of the imminence thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 22, after the words "Provided further," to insert "That when three-fourths of the prescribed minimum enlisted strength of any company, troop, or battery, or when three-fourths of the prescribed minimum enlisted strength of each company, troop, or battery, comprised in a battalion, regiment, brigade, or division of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, organized as prescribed by law and War Department regulations, shall volunteer for service in the Volunteer Army as such company, troop, battery, battalion, regiment, brigade, or division, such organization shall have the right to be received into the volunteer forces in advance of the raising of other organizations of the same arm or class, and the officers in service with such organizations may then be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of corresponding grades in the Volunteer Army and be assigned to the same grades in the said organizations," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That when volunteer forces are to be raised the President shall issue his proclamation, stating the number of men desired for each arm, corps, and department, within such limits as may be fixed by law, and he shall prescribe such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, as may be necessary for the purpose of examining, organizing, and receiving into the service the men called for: Provided, That the power to organize volunteer forces shall include the power to provide, within such limits as are or may be prescribed by law, the officers and enlisted men of all grades and classes, and the trained nurses, male and female, that may be necessary in the various arms, corps, and departments: Provided further, That when three-fourths of the prescribed minimum enlisted strength of any company, troop, or battery, or when three-fourths of the prescribed minimum enlisted strength of each company, troop, or battery, comprised in a battalion, regiment, brigade, or division of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, organized as prescribed by law and War Department regulations, shall volunteer for service in the Volunteer Army as such company, troop, battery, battalion, regiment, brigade, or division, such organization shall have the right to be received into the volunteer forces in advance of the raising of other organizations of the same arm or class, and the officers in service with such organizations may then be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as officers of corresponding grades in the Volunteer Army and be assigned to the same grades in the said organizations: Provided further, That all enlisted men received into the service in the volunteer forces shall, as far as practicable, be taken from the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in proportion to the respective populations thereof: Provided further, That when the raising of a volunteer force shall have been authorized by Congress, and after the organized land militia of any arm or class shall have been called into the military service of the United States, volunteers of that particular arm or class may be raised and accepted into said service in accordance with the terms of this act regardless of the extent to which other arms or classes of said militia shall have been called into said service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 9, after the word "respect," to strike out "to promotion or," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the volunteer forces shall be subject to the laws, orders, and regulations governing the Regular Army in so far as such laws, orders, and regulations are applicable to officers or enlisted men whose permanent retention in the military service, either on the active list or on the retired list, is not contemplated by existing law; and no distinction shall be made between the Regular Army, the Organized Militia while in the military service of the United States, and the Volunteer forces in respect to the conferring upon officers or enlisted men of brevet rank medals of honor, certificates of merit, or other rewards for distinguished service, nor in respect to the eligibility of any officer of said Army, militia, or volunteer forces for service upon any court-martial, court of inquiry, or military commission: Provided, That the organization of all units of the line and of the signal troops of the volunteer forces shall be the same as that prescribed by law and regulations for the corresponding units of the Regular Army: Provided further, That when military conditions so require the President may organize the land forces of the United States into brigades and divisions and such higher units as he may deem necessary, and the composition of units higher than the regiment shall be as he may prescribe: Provided further, That to each regiment of Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery, and to each battalion of Engineers and Signal Corps troops organized under this act, there shall be attached the same personnel of the Medical Department as are attached to like organizations of the Regular Army: Provided further, That the organization of the coast defenses, of machine-gun detachments, establishments of the Medical Department, remount depots, military trains, secret-service agencies, military prisons, lines of communication, including their supply depots, and of other adjuncts that may be necessary in the prosecution of war, and the organization of which is not otherwise provided for by law, shall be as the President may from time to time direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 6, line 14, after the words "Provided further," to strike out "That the number of volunteer staff officers appointed in any grade in the various staff corps and departments shall not exceed in any staff corps or department the proportionate strength of regular officers of the corresponding grade as established by law for the corresponding staff corps or department of the Regular Army," and insert "That the whole number of volunteer staff officers appointed in any grade for all staff corps and departments shall not exceed the proportionate strength of regular officers of the corresponding grade as established by law for all staff corps and departments of the Regular Army," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That to provide the staff officers that will be necessary in the various staff corps and departments in time of war or while war is imminent, and that are not otherwise provided for in this act, the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, such number of volunteer staff officers of grades authorized by law for the Regular Army as he may find necessary for such corps and departments: Provided, That the total number of such staff officers so appointed, including all such officers of the Organized Militia called into the military service of the United States, shall not exceed the ratio of 1 officer to 200 enlisted men for all militia and volunteer forces called into the military service of the United States: Provided further, That the whole number of volunteer staff officers appointed in any grade for all staff corps and departments shall not exceed the proportionate strength of regular officers of the corresponding grade as established by law for all staff corps and departments of the Regular Army: Provided further, That the President may appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, volunteer chaplains at the rate of 1 for each regiment of Volunteer Infantry, Cavalry, and Field Artillery, and 1 for every 12 companies of Volunteer Coast Artillery raised, with rank corresponding to that established by law for chaplains in the Regular Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 9, line 3, after the word "law," to insert:

Provided, That in the staff corps and departments subject to the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, and acts amendatory thereof, temporary vacancies that can not be filled by temporary promotions, as hereinbefore prescribed, shall be filled by temporary details made in the manner prescribed in said sections 26 and 27 and acts amendatory thereof, and the resulting temporary vacancies in the branches of the Army from which the details are so made shall be filled as hereinbefore in this section prescribed.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the temporary vacancies created in any grade not above that of colonel among the commissioned personnel of any arm, staff corps, or department of the Regular Army, through appointments of officers thereof to higher volunteer rank, shall be filled by temporary promotions, according to seniority in rank of officers holding commissions in the next lower grade in said arm, staff corps, or department; and all temporary vacancies created in any grade by temporary promotions shall in like manner be filled from, and thus create temporary vacancies in, the next lower grade; and the vacancies that remain thereafter in said arm, staff corps, or department, that can not be filled by temporary promotions, as prescribed in this section, may be filled by the temporary appointment of officers of such number and grade or grades as shall maintain said arm, corps, or department at the full commissioned strength authorized by law: Provided, That in the staff corps and departments subject to the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, and acts amendatory thereof, temporary vacancies that can not be filled by temporary promotions, as hereinbefore prescribed, shall be filled by temporary details made in the manner prescribed in said sections 26 and 27 and acts amendatory thereof, and the resulting temporary vacancies in the branches of the Army from which the details are so made shall be filled as hereinbefore in this section prescribed: Provided, That officers temporarily promoted or appointed under the terms of this section shall be so promoted or appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms that shall not extend beyond the termination of the war or, if war shall not occur, beyond the passing of the imminence thereof, as defined by the President's proclamation, and upon the expiration of said terms said officers shall be discharged from the positions held by them under their temporary promotions or appointments: Provided further, That officers temporarily promoted under the provisions of this section shall not vacate their permanent commissions, nor shall they be prejudiced in their lineal or relative standing in the Regular Army under permanent commissions, by reason of their services under temporary commissions authorized by this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 11, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 14. That the commander of a division or higher military unit is authorized to appoint, from time to time, military boards of not less than three nor more than five officers of the volunteer forces to examine into the capacity, qualifications, conduct, and efficiency of any commissioned officer of said forces within his command: Provided, That each member of the board shall be superior in rank to the officer whose qualifications are to be inquired into: Provided further, That if the report of such board is adverse to the continuance of any officer, and if the report be approved by the President, such officer shall be discharged from service in the volunteer forces, at the discretion of the President, with one month's pay and allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 1, after the word "Sec.," to strike out "14" and insert "15."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as there are only about three minutes remaining before 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business will come up, and I presume no other matter could be considered in that time, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hitchcock	Norris	Simmons
Brandegee	Hollis	Oliver	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Hughes	Page	Smith, S. C.
Catron	James	Perkins	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson	Poindexter	Sterling
Chilton	Kern	Pomerene	Tillman
Clapp	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Walsh
Colt	Lewis	Saulsbury	Warren
Cummins	Lippitt	Shafroth	West
Dillingham	McCumber	Sheppard	Williams
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Works
Gallinger	Nelson	Shields

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me merely to enter a motion?

Mr. NELSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. REED. I shall not ask to have it considered, but by making the motion I merely wish to save the right, in order that I may be permitted to examine the bill which passed a few moments ago when I happened to be out of the Chamber. I may find the bill entirely satisfactory to me, but there is a clause in it upon which I want to secure some further light. I happened to be out a moment ago attending, in company with some other gentlemen, the architect of this building in making an examination with reference to some work that has been assigned to a subcommittee.

I move to reconsider the vote by which House bill 7138 was passed. I ask that the motion may lie on the table, to be called up hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 7138 was passed. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. REED. I presume the motion will carry with it what I am about to request, that the bill be withheld and not sent to the other House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the effect of the motion so entered.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the following portions of the report of the North Dakota commission which I heretofore omitted:

> After having made a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the present method of handling grain at the terminals of both Minneapolis and Duluth we have reached the following conclusion:
>
> That the only proper and profitable way for the people of our State to handle their grain is by establishing State warehouses at Minneapolis and Duluth or Superior and possibly at points within our State. Our reasons for this conclusion is that our wheat being acknowledged the best in the United States is much sought after by millers everywhere, and if it was handled by our own terminal houses under our own State inspection, thoroughly cleaned, and conditioned—

That means put through a grain hospital—

> thoroughly cleaned and conditioned and, when shipped out either in car or boat accompanied by our North Dakota certificate of inspection, it would not lose its identity and would command a premium anywhere from 5 to 8 cents per bushel more than we are now getting for it.

Now, I want to call your attention to the fact that the farmers do not clean their wheat and do not condition it before they ship it. They sell their wheat, and have done so for years, to the local country elevators, and they ship it to the terminal elevators just as it comes from the thrashing machine, with all the foul seeds that are in it, with all the dirt, and oftentimes damp and bleached. If the grain is bleached or damaged from having stood in the stack too long where they indulge in shock thrashing, of course the grain coming in that condition will not grade as high as it would by the other system, by having it cleaned, scoured, and the seed taken out of it.

Now, this is what the commissioners further say:

> and if it was handled by our own terminal houses under our own State inspection, thoroughly cleaned and conditioned and, when shipped out either in car or boat, accompanied by our North Dakota certificate of inspection, it would not lose its identity, and would command a premium anywhere from 5 to 8 cents per bushel more than we are now getting for it.

Now, there are two things they insist upon here. One is that the State build its own warehouses at the terminal points. In the next place, they recommend what has never been done heretofore anywhere, and that is, that the wheat before it is sold be cleaned and "conditioned," as they call it. The term "condition" is a technical term that they have in the grain trade. It means improving the grain, putting it in a shape where it is marketable. To carry out this scheme the farmer would have to ship his wheat to a terminal elevator for treatment and cure, before sale, otherwise he could not get any benefit from the scheme. If he sold his wheat at the local elevator, it would be the purchaser—the middleman—who would get the benefit of the renovating process.

I quote further:

> We have been advised by eastern millers that they would be glad to pay the above premium for our North Dakota wheat if they could get it in its purity. By the establishment of State warehouses or terminals our people could save to themselves not only this premium, amounting to about $3,400,000, but also the dockage, which has a value of about $1,350,000—

I do not know how they get their figures—> on wheat and flax each year. Also commissions and other charges amounting to about $750,000 per year. There is another item of loss that should be taken into consideration; that is, the loss on weights, which is of frequent occurrence and hard to estimate, but no doubt is quite large. Under the present methods—

I call your attention to this—> in a great many cases our wheat loses a grade and in some instances two grades at the Minnesota terminals by reason of the dockage it contains. By having our own terminals to condition—

That means their warehouses—

> this wheat we could save these grades.

In other words, if North Dakota would have its terminal warehouses there, that would clean and fan and condition and scour and dry and improve the wheat in that way, they could get more for it and get a higher grade. There is no doubt of that. But the trouble is the farmers sell their grain at the local elevators before the renovating process takes place at the terminals.

This, you understand—

The report further adds—

> does not take into consideration the loss our farmers sustain at the local end of the business.

That is at home.

> For the past five years our State has shipped on an average of 60,000,000 bushels of wheat and 13,000,000 bushels of flax, which at 2½ cents per bushel profit to the local elevators—> would amount to $1,825,000 each year. And in addition to this must be taken into account the short weights, overdockage, and under grading done by many local elevators, of which our farmers so grievously complain. There is no doubt that the farmers sustain a very heavy loss from these causes. We believe more than $1,000,000 each year.

That is what they charge—

The farmers of North Dakota, like our farmers in Minnesota in the olden times, before we put our country elevators under strict State regulation, no doubt suffer from these local elevator men. The North Dakota farmers have, in my opinion, suffered the most from their local elevators.

We remedied that trouble in Minnesota by establishing a rigid State inspection law and putting country elevators under State control. In the next place, in Minnesota, a large number of farmers' elevators have sprung up all over the State. The farmers form themselves into associations a good deal as they have done in the creamery business, and the result is that farmers' elevators are established and run at many of the railroad stations.

I wish to read a little further from this report:

> This loss to our grain growers would build or buy fully equipped 1,000 local elevators, and provide a terminal house with a storage capacity of 5,000,000 bushels each at Minneapolis and Duluth or Superior. Among—

Now, listen to this:

> Among the many other good reasons why this system would be of great benefit to our grain growers is that if for any cause at any time throughout the year the price was low, and the grower did not wish to sell his grain and needed money to take care of his current expenses, he could ship his grain to our State terminal and store it at the actual cost of the storage, and receive our State storage certificate, which he could use as security for loans at a very reasonable rate of interest. As there is no better security offered than warehouse receipts, especially when they are issued by the State, money can be had at times as low as 3 per cent and as high as 90 per cent of the value.

Now, I call your attention to the peculiarity of this report. First, the relief they suggest is building terminal elevators for the purpose of keeping the North Dakota wheat by itself. In the next place, they favor it because they could then clean and condition their wheat, as they call it, by having their own terminals put it in good shape for marketing. Of course, if they clean their wheat thoroughly and condition it properly, they can always find a good market among the millers.

But in connection with this is the idea to loan money on these warehouse receipts. The warehouse receipts issued by the terminal elevators in Minnesota are good. They are transferred like a promissory note, payable to order, and anyone who desires money can borrow it on those receipts at reasonable rates. They are regarded as first-class security. Whether the North Dakota farmers could ever borrow money on their wheat receipts for as low a rate of interest as 3 per cent I do not know. It may be possible, but not very likely.

The foregoing are the chief recommendations of the North Dakota commissioners who sat with our board of grain appeals under the legislative acts quoted.

The commissioners further say:

> Drawing our conclusions from our observations, experience, and labor since receiving the appointments of State grain commissioners, we believe our State legislators will make no mistake if they provide for a continuance of the office of State grain commissioners—

That is what they were called—> until such time as the State shall have its own terminals. We believe the duty of the commission in connection with its duties on the appeal board would be to maintain a bureau of information and investigation where the shippers of our State could report and have investigated all cases of irregularities in the matter of grades, weights, dockage, etc. We would recommend that one of the commissioners be located at Minneapolis, the other at Duluth.

It is evident that the commissioners were anxious to continue in office.

I will not read any more from the report. I will only say that none of these recommendations were adopted. The North Dakota people did not provide for terminal elevators, and I believe they did not because they had no constitutional right to do it; they could not appropriate any money for that purpose. They did not provide for building terminal elevators at Minneapolis or Duluth, and they did not provide for the continuance of these two men in office for another year. If anyone will read this report in its entirety, he will come to the conclusion that these men found little of importance to criticize in our own system.

There is one thing which has struck me here. If anyone will examine the laws and regulations for maintaining our grain-inspection system in Minnesota he must come to the conclusion that it is as good a code of law and as good a code of regulations as could possibly be made on this subject. If there is any vice in the system it comes through the imperfection of poor humanity. It comes from the fact that the people who execute the law are either not competent or not honest. So far as that imputation is concerned, I want to say to the Senator from North Dakota that the members of the Minnesota grain-inspection service are as honest and upright and competent as are any of the officials or officeholders of North Dakota or of the Federal Government. If there is any branch of our public service in Minnesota that we pride ourselves upon it is the grain-inspection service, because it is the only service in which we have a permanency in the holding of the office. Men who become members of that force stay on it if they prove themselves competent. If they are incompetent they are discharged. We have never made it a party question. I have in my time occasionally recommended to the Railroad and Warehouse Commission men for appointment in the grain-inspection service and I have never recommended anyone but farmers or the sons of farmers. I have never known the warehouse commission to appoint new, fresh men to anything higher than what we call a helper. They do not make him an inspector; they do not even make him a weigher till he has shown his fitness and ability.

Now, what is a helper? A helper is a man who assists the sampler or the weigher. We have in the service what we call samplers, who go and open the cars and take the number of the seals and take out samples. These helpers go and assist them in that work; they help them to open the cars; they help them to take samples; and they get acquainted with the service. If they prove themselves efficient they are by and by promoted and made assistant deputy inspectors or assistant weighers.

In other words, our grain-inspection service is divided into two head classes. One we call the grain-inspection department and the other is the weighing department. I have heard little complaint about any dishonesty among the officials of the grain service. The complaints in years past have been chiefly against the local elevators—the men who run elevators or grain houses at the railway stations. These were the men the farmers dealt with directly, and if they were dishonest and unfair the farmers always suffered, for there is where the farmer sold or stored his grain. If he was hard up and wanted the cash immediately, when he got to the elevator he would sell it and take the cash. If he did not need the cash immediately and had an idea that wheat would go up in price, that there would be a rise, he would take a storage ticket. The ticket would describe the number of bushels, the grade, and the dockage, and the storage charge.

Now, our law regulates the storage charges. These elevators can not charge exorbitant prices. The first 15 days after the grain goes in the elevator the charge is the highest; after that it is lower; and if a man wants what they call winter storage—storage from in the fall to spring—for his grain, the total storage is only 4 cents a bushel. We have the same rule as to storage in terminal elevators; in fact, we have guarded the matter at all points possible by legislation.

Outside of the line elevators, which belong to terminal elevators, all the grain that is shipped either directly by the farmer himself, or by independent elevators, or by farmers' elevators, is shipped to commission merchants for sale by them.

Years ago some of these commission merchants advertised conspicuously and extensively in the agricultural papers as equity exchanges, farmers' commission houses, and by various other names, to attract the farmers, but in some instances our farmers got badly bitten by those commission houses. In some instances they cheated them in two ways: They would do it in a small way, in a homeopathic way, by falsely reporting the sales; they would sell wheat at a certain price at a given time; then they would report that sale to the customers, and not give the exact figures of the sale. In other words, they would report the sale for a little less in price, sometimes lower in grade, and sometimes more in dockage than the facts of the case warranted. Then, there were instances where those commission merchants failed, where they went into bankruptcy, and the farmers who had intrusted their grain to them lost it all.

I refer to these commission men for this reason: The Legislature of Minnesota passed a law requiring these commission merchants to take out a license and to give bonds—bonds in proportion to their business. Such bond could never be less than $5,000, and it might be as much more as the character of the business demanded. The great importance of regulating these commission houses by a license system and a bonding system is this: That the proceeds of the sales will be safe; moreover, the independent elevators and the farmers' elevators have not always the money with which to pay for the wheat; they rely on the commission men to advance them the money. I know in my part of the State—and I live in one of the best agricultural portions of Minnesota—the independent country elevators and the farmers' elevators go into business without much, if any, capital. Sometimes the farmers raise a little money to start with, but as a rule they form a connection with a commission house at Duluth or Minneapolis, and that commission house advances them the money with which they buy the wheat, and that places them at the mercy of the commission house. So you can see, Mr. President, how important it is to regulate these commission men.

Although our grain-inspection system in Minnesota—and I say it without intending to reflect on any other system—is one of the best regulated and best planned in the entire country, yet I recognize the fact that, owing to human imperfections, here and there we may find a man who may not be faithful to his trust; but does anybody here or elsewhere imagine that the Federal Government, under the civil-service law, can get a better, a more efficient, and a more honest lot of officials than we have succeeded in getting under our system in Minnesota, which we have been upward of 28 or 29 years in establishing? I do not think that men become angels all at once and more perfect because they wear the garb of Uncle Sam's service. I think our State officials, as a rule, are apt to be as honest and reliable as are those who wear Uncle Sam's colors.

I want now to call the attention of Senators to another fact. An idea seems to prevail that it is an easy thing to establish grades for wheat; that it is like establishing grades for corn, merely making two or three classes, such as white corn, yellow corn, and mixed corn. But when you come to wheat, taking into account the diversity of our soil, of our climate, and all the other conditions, you will find, as I will point out to you, that we shall require at least a dozen different classes of grades in this country. I want to call attention on this point to a part of the hearings on one of these bills. I think it was not this bill, but on a prior bill having the same purpose. They are the hearings before the subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate, second session, Sixty-second Congress. I want to read from the testimony of Mr. E. H. Culver, of Toledo, Ohio, president of the Association of Inspectors, a most interesting statement. I refer to it because it relates to the matter of standardizing grades. Our people are not opposed to standardizing grades; that is, to letting the Federal Government establish the standards, but leaving the States to carry on the inspection service and comply with the standards; but when I read this testimony to Senators, they will see how difficult it will be for the Agriculture Department here to establish standards, owing to the diversified character of our wheat crop. You can not make a grade that will be continuous from year to year, but you must make a grade each year to fit the crop of that year, and grades that will fit the various sections of the country. Here is Mr. Culver's statement:

Mr. CULVER. The real movement to standardize grades originated in the chief inspectors' organization 15 years ago, at the Beach Hotel, Chicago. Mr. Hubert Price was the gentleman who made the first suggestion at Chicago—the chief inspector of the State of Illinois. We followed along down and built standard samples in Chicago, in St. Louis, in Kansas City, and at different places, but the grain at that time was so diversified in character that it was almost impossible to standardize the grades of grain of the country. For instance, we had in Michigan what is known as the Lancaster semihard, soft wheat. We had in the States of Illinois and Missouri amber wheat. We had in Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Pennsylvania what is known as the Mediterranean wheat. We had in Kansas City—and which had been introduced a few years prior to that—what is known as the Turkey hard wheat.

Turkey red. I think they call it. Now, listen to this:

We went into this deal to straighten up and see if we could not make two hard wheats and two soft wheats the standard grades of the country, and it took us six years to compile the information, which brought us up to 1902 in Peoria. We showed the first samples at the Peoria meeting of the Grain Dealers' National Association. Mr. Foehring, then president of the Chief Inspectors National Association, as chairman of the grades committee, had the inspectors of 37 different markets compile their standard samples and bring to that meeting. At that meeting Prof. Holden, a college from Minnesota, and a college from Champaign reviewed those samples and standards. In the winter of 1902 we met at Philadelphia and drew up rules to govern the grade of grain and submitted them to the Grain Dealers' National Association and the different exchanges for their adoption. The wheat was so diversified that it was utterly impossible at that time to bring about the result that we tried to obtain. The consequence was that we went along down then until the first congress of grades was held in New York under Capt. John Foehring. The second grade congress was in Chicago the next year, and the congress of grades the following year. Then the Grain Dealers' National Association turned this matter over to the Chief Inspectors National Association and said, "Gentlemen, bring in your report."

That was in 1906 at the St. Louis meeting. The chief inspectors at our meeting adopted a rule, which 18 markets accepted within less than a week, for grading the grain under the uniform phraseology of the Chief Inspectors' National Association and the Grain Dealers' National Association.

We found, after carefully experimenting, that our grades were not right. The moisture tester came in about that time, which was supplied by the Agricultural Department, and we made what is called a six years' test of the average moisture and dirt in grain and corn and we found that we were not liberal enough so we changed those grades, raising the moisture to 19 per cent at Indianapolis and 10 per cent on bin-burnt grains—such as you people in Kentucky object to now—and we have found that after the six years' average has been reported that we have got down, in the Chief Inspectors' National Association, to a solid foundation upon which we can work—and by the way, I would like for comparison to file here the uniform rules of the Grain Dealers' National Association in order to show the progress and study that the association is giving the matter in trying to bring about uniformity so that there would be no difference in the grades of wheat in this country and there would be no complaint from the shippers and they can understand them. They are so simple that a child can understand them.

Senator GRONNA. Why is not wheat from Minnesota and the Dakotas included?

Mr. CULVER. The wheat in Minnesota and the Dakotas is included under grades, Senator GRONNA, but not as yet on the percentage basis. Your wild oats up there in certain years seem to thrive more luxuriantly than they do in any other years, and it is a question of the seeds of the wild oats entirely to get that down to a fair percentage so as to treat all alike.

Senator GRONNA. I understand that the gentleman objected to questions until he had finished his statement.

Mr. CULVER. No, sir; that is all right. I can answer at any time. Our association of chief inspectors has experimented along the line of corn, wheat, and oats for the last 14, 15, or 16 years.

Mr. President, I shall not be able to finish my remarks before the time fixed for the execution of the order of the Senate to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to hear the address of the President of the United States, and so I yield the floor to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

Mr. KERN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Chamberlain	Cummins	Goff
Brady	Chilton	Dillingham	Gore
Brandegee	Clapp	du Pont	Hitchcock
Bryan	Clark, Wyo.	Fall	Hollis
Burleigh	Colt	Fletcher	Hughes
Catron	Crawford	Gallinger	James
Johnson	Nelson	Saulsbury	Thomas
Jones	Norris	Shafroth	Thompson
Kenyon	O'Gorman	Sheppard	Thornton
Kern	Oliver	Sherman	Tillman
La Follette	Overman	Shields	Townsend
Lane	Owen	Simmons	Vardaman
Lea, Tenn.	Page	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Lee, Md.	Perkins	Smith, Md.	Weeks
Lippitt	Pittman	Smith, Mich.	West
Lodge	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.	Williams
McCumber	Ransdell	Smoot	Works
McLean	Reed	Sterling
Martin, Va.	Robinson	Sutherland
Martine, N. J.	Root	Swanson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT—AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 3 o'clock p. m.). The hour having arrived at which the Senate agreed by resolution to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to hear the communication of the President of the United States, the Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by the Vice President, its Sergeant at Arms, and its Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The address of the President of the United States delivered this day to both Houses of Congress is as follows:

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 910).

Gentlemen of the Congress, it is my duty to call your attention to a situation which has arisen in our dealings with Gen. Victoriano Huerta at Mexico City which calls for action, and to ask your advice and cooperation in acting upon it. On the 9th of April a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested by an officer and squad of men of the army of Gen. Huerta. Neither the paymaster nor anyone of the boat's crew was armed. Two of the men were in the boat when the arrest took place, and were obliged to leave it and submit to be taken into custody, notwithstanding the fact that the boat carried, both at her bow and at her stern, the flag of the United States. The officer who made the arrest was proceeding up one of the streets of the town with his prisoners when met by an officer of higher authority, who ordered him to return to the landing and await orders; and within an hour and a half from the time of the arrest orders were received from the commander of the Huertista forces at Tampico for the release of the paymaster and his men. The release was followed by apologies from the commander and later by an expression of regret by Gen. Huerta himself. Gen. Huerta urged that martial law obtained at the time at Tampico; that orders had been issued that no one should be allowed to land at the Iturbide Bridge; and that our sailors had no right to land there. Our naval commanders at the port had not been notified of any such prohibition; and, even if they had been, the only justifiable course open to the local authorities would have been to request the paymaster and his crew to withdraw and to lodge a protest with the commanding officer of the fleet. Admiral Mayo regarded the arrest as so serious an affront that he was not satisfied with the apologies offered, but demanded that the flag of the United States be saluted with special ceremony by the military commander of the port.

The incident can not be regarded as a trivial one, especially as two of the men arrested were taken from the boat itself—that is to say, from the territory of the United States—but had it stood by itself it might have been attributed to the ignorance or arrogance of a single officer. Unfortunately, it was not an isolated case. A series of incidents have recently occurred which can not but create the impression that the representatives of Gen. Huerta were willing to go out of their way to show disregard for the dignity and rights of this Government and felt perfectly safe in doing what they pleased, making free to show in many ways their irritation and contempt. A few days after the incident at Tampico an orderly from the U. S. S. Minnesota was arrested at Vera Cruz while ashore in uniform to obtain the ship's mail and was for a time thrown into jail. An official dispatch from this Government to its embassy at Mexico City was withheld by the authorities of the telegraphic service until peremptorily demanded by our chargé d'affaires in person. So far as I can learn, such wrongs and annoyances have been suffered to occur only against representatives of the United States. I have heard of no complaints from other Governments of similar treatment. Subsequent explanations and formal apologies did not and could not alter the popular impression, which it is possible it had been the object of the Huertista authorities to create, that the Government of the United States was being singled out, and might be singled out with impunity, for slights and affronts in retaliation for its refusal to recognize the pretensions of Gen. Huerta to be regarded as the constitutional provisional President of the Republic of Mexico.

The manifest danger of such a situation was that such offenses might grow from bad to worse until something happened of so gross and intolerable a sort as to lead directly and inevitably to armed conflict. It was necessary that the apologies of Gen. Huerta and his representatives should go much further; that they should be such as to attract the attention of the whole population to their significance and such as to impress upon Gen. Huerta himself the necessity of seeing to it that no further occasion for explanations and professed regrets should arise. I therefore felt it my duty to sustain Admiral Mayo in the whole of his demand and to insist that the flag of the United States should be saluted in such a way as to indicate a new spirit and attitude on the part of the Huertistas. [Applause.]

Such a salute Gen. Huerta has refused, and I have come to ask your approval and support in the course I now purpose to pursue.

This Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstances be forced into war with the people of Mexico. Mexico is torn by civil strife. If we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, it has no government. Gen. Huerta has set his power up in the City of Mexico, such as it is, without right and by methods for which there can be no justification. Only part of the country is under his control. If armed conflict should unhappily come as a result of his attitude of personal resentment toward this Government, we should be fighting only Gen. Huerta and those who adhere to him and give him their support, and our object would be only to restore to the people of the distracted Republic the opportunity to set up again their own laws and their own Government. [Applause.]

But I earnestly hope that war is not now in question. I believe that I speak for the American people when I say that we do not desire to control in any degree the affairs of our sister Republic. [Applause.] Our feeling for the people of Mexico is one of deep and genuine friendship, and everything that we have so far done or refrained from doing has proceeded from our desire to help them, not to hinder or embarrass them. We would not wish even to exercise the good offices of friendship without their welcome and consent. The people of Mexico are entitled to settle their own domestic affairs in their own way, and we sincerely desire to respect their right. The present situation need have none of the grave implications of interference if we deal with it promptly, firmly, and wisely.

No doubt I could do what is necessary in the circumstances to enforce respect for our Government without recourse to the Congress and yet not exceed my constitutional powers as President, but I do not wish to act in a matter possibly of so grave consequence except in close conference and cooperation with both the Senate and House. I therefore come to ask your approval that I should use the armed forces of the United States in such ways and to such an extent as may be necessary to obtain from Gen. Huerta and his adherents the fullest recognition of the rights and dignity of the United States [applause], even amidst the distressing conditions now unhappily obtaining in Mexico.

There can in what we do be no thought of aggression or of selfish aggrandizement. We seek to maintain the dignity and authority of the United States only because we wish always to keep our great influence unimpaired for the uses of liberty, both in the United States and wherever else it may be employed for the benefit of mankind. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m., and the Vice President resumed the chair.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 38 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 9 o'clock to-night.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, while the matter may not be debatable, I wish the Senator from Indiana would give us some assurance as to whether the recess is for the purpose of receiving a resolution which will probably come over from the House and then referring it to the committee, or whether it is the purpose to go on and do legislative work upon that or any other subject after 9 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. My impression is—and I give it only as an impression—that there will be little business done to-night beyond referring to the committee the resolution that comes from the House. Developments might occur between now and then that would change the situation, but I do not know of anything probable at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOFF in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana——

Mr. LIPPITT. Just a moment, Mr. President; I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask for order and that Senators be required to take their seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. KERN. I said that so far as I was advised at this moment no business would be transacted beyond receiving the resolution that comes from the House and referring it to the committee. I further said that between now and 9 o'clock there might be developments of which I know nothing which would change that program, but I do not imagine they will occur.

Mr. LIPPITT. Do I understand the Senator to say that there will be no business transacted to-night, or what does he mean?

Mr. KERN. I stated as plainly as I could that my best judgment is that no business will be transacted beyond receiving the resolution that will come from the House and referring it to the Committee on Foreign Relations; but——

Mr. LIPPITT. What about 9 o'clock? I am asking only for information.

Mr. KERN. The motion is to take a recess until 9 o'clock to-night.

Mr. LIPPITT. Then do I understand that the Senator hopes to have the resolution discussed this evening?

Mr. KERN. I do not. I do not expect such a course, but I shall not make any pledge of that kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say that I not only hope but expect action upon the House resolution to-night. For one, I shall be very much disappointed unless the Senate does take action upon it to-night. The House will vote upon the House resolution at half past 8, and it will be over here by 9; and if we take a recess until 9 o'clock the committee can be sitting and considering the resolution while the Senate is in session for a short while.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. If the committee should be able to report the resolution within a reasonable time to-night, after it comes over from the House, does he not think we ought to insist upon a vote to-night upon the resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am of the opinion that we ought to take a vote to-night. This is a thing which—

> If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well
> It were done quickly.

Mr. LEWIS. But not rashly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope and expect we shall vote to-night.

Mr. GALLINGER. Provided it is done right.

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not know exactly what the Senator means by taking a vote to-night. Certainly the resolution will be subject to discussion. I am quite sure there will be a pretty long discussion upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate take a recess until 9 o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 9 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 9 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	McCumber	Sherman
Bankhead	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shively
Brady	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Brandegee	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	James	Oliver	Sterling
Burleigh	Jones	Owen	Swanson
Catron	Kenyon	Page	Thompson
Chilton	Kern	Pittman	Thornton
Clapp	Lane	Pomerene	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Vardaman
Colt	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Walsh
Crawford	Lewis	Root	Warren
Cummins	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Williams
Dillingham	Lodge	Sheppard

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

RECESS.

Mr. SHIVELY (at 9 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate take a recess until 9.45 p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and on the expiration of the recess (at 9 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) justifying the employment by the President of armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Newlands	Simmons
Bankhead	Hollis	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Hughes	Oliver	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	James	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Jones	Owen	Sterling
Bryan	Kenyon	Page	Swanson
Burleigh	Kern	Pittman	Thomas
Catron	La Follette	Pomerene	Thompson
Chilton	Lane	Reed	Thornton
Clapp	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lee, Md.	Root	Vardaman
Colt	Lodge	Saulsbury	Walsh
Crawford	McCumber	Shafroth	Weeks
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	West
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Williams
Fletcher	Nelson	Shively

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251), justifying the employment by the President of armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta, was read the first time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think a joint resolution of this importance, of the gravest importance which can attach to any resolution before the Congress, ought to take the regular course and be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHIVELY. I, of course, know that the Senator can insist on the regular course and that an objection will occasion the reference of the joint resolution to the committee; but in the presence of the situation, which I submit is somewhat emergent, I ask the Senator to allow us to take up the joint resolution at once and dispose of it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not feel that we ought to consent to this departure from the regular course of procedure. I make the objection with no intent of delay, either in committee or here; but the joint resolution requires, I think, the most serious consideration that can be given to it. A single objection to the second reading on the same day would send it over for a day. Of course I am willing to let it be read twice and referred at once.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator will permit me, we might take a recess, and have the matter referred to the committee and reported out to-night.

Mr. LODGE. The matter of taking a recess is a question for the Senate to decide. If it is referred to the committee, the action of the Senate as to taking a recess will be decided by the Senate of course.

Mr. SHIVELY. Certainly. I merely made the suggestion. I regret that the Senator can not see his way clear to withhold his objection.

Mr. LODGE. That is something which must be decided by the Senate. I do not feel authorized to say what course shall be taken. I think the joint resolution should be referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be considered, read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is so ordered. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Massachusetts objected to the second reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I said, if it was to be referred to the committee, I should make no objection to its being read the first and second times and referred in the usual course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action has been taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he would object to the consideration of the joint resolution to-day in case the committee could report on it to-day. The same rule that permits an objection to its present consideration permits an objection to its consideration if reported upon this day. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he would insist upon that objection.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think I quite understood the Senator's question.

Mr. FLETCHER. The same rule which permits an objection to the consideration of the joint resolution without a reference permits an objection to its consideration on the day it is reported. I was inquiring of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he would insist upon his objection in case the committee could report to-day.

Mr. LODGE. That would depend somewhat upon the character of the joint resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. The joint resolution has been read, and its character is pretty well known.

Mr. LODGE. I mean the joint resolution as reported by the committee. I certainly should not undertake to answer that question now. We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Assuming that the joint resolution reported by the committee is the same as that read, I ask the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not ready to make that assumption yet.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess for 15 minutes. I hope the committee can report in that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12.10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 21, 1914, at 12.10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 20, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, God Almighty, Father of all souls, source of all wisdom, power, justice, mercy, a question of great moment confronts us; a crisis which may affect thousands of people must be met. Impart unto those who are in authority, the President, his advisers, and the Congress of the United States, wisdom, courage, fortitude, that they may meet it in accordance with the highest conceptions of right and truth and justice, that the civilization of the world may be advanced, and the things that make for peace and righteousness be emphasized. May the clash of arms and the terrible effects which must follow in its wake be averted and the interests of all be conserved, to the glory and honor of Thy Holy Name. In the spirit of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 18, 1914, and of Sunday, April 19, 1914, was read and approved.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has advised me that he desires to communicate with the Congress this afternoon. I therefore send to the Clerk's desk this resolution, and move its immediate adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 37.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday the 20th day of April, 1914, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce that it will be necessary to vacate the first three rows of seats all around in order to furnish seats for the Senate.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolutions was passed was laid on the table.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT—SECOND HOMESTEAD AND DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar day, and the unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 1657) to authorize the allowance of second homestead and desert entries, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1657) to authorize the allowance of second homestead and desert entries.

[Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I move, Mr. Speaker, the adoption of the committee amendment offered by the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That any person otherwise duly qualified to make entry of public lands under the homestead or desert-land laws, who has heretofore made or may hereafter make entry under said laws, and who, through no fault of his own, may have lost, forfeited, or abandoned the same, or who may hereafter lose, forfeit, or abandon the same, shall be entitled to the benefits of the homestead or desert-land laws as though such former entry had never been made: Provided, That such applicant shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the prior entry or entries were made in good faith, were lost, forfeited, or abandoned because of matters beyond his control, and that he has not speculated in his right nor committed a fraud or attempted fraud in connection with such prior entry or entries, and that he has not relinquished his former entry or entries for a valuable consideration in excess of his filing fees."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Now I move an amendment to change the title, if that is necessary.

The SPEAKER. That comes later. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I move that the title be amended in accordance with the committee amendment so as to read: "A bill providing for second homestead and desert-land entries."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill that was just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 100 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5849) to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] objects.

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill being passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FRANCIS]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ANNUITIES TO THE MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA (SANTEE) SIOUX INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11246) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render final judgment for any balance that may be found due the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota Bands of Sioux Indians, otherwise known as Santee Sioux Indians, with right of appeal as in other cases for any annuities that may be ascertained to be due to the said bands of Indians under and by virtue of the treaties between said bands and the United States, dated September 29, 1837 (7 Stat. L., p. 538), and August 5, 1851 (10 Stat. L., p. 954), as if the act of forfeiture of the annuities of said bands approved February 16, 1863, had not been passed: Provided, That the court in rendering judgment shall ascertain and include therein the amount of accrued annuities under the treaty of September 29, 1837, up to the date of rendition of judgment, and shall determine and include the present value of the same, not including interest, and the capital sum of said annuity, which shall be in lieu of said perpetual annuity granted in said treaty; and to ascertain and set off against any amount found due under said treaties all moneys paid to said Indians or expended for their benefit by the Government of the United States since the treaties were abrogated by the act of 1863: Provided, That the treaty of 1868 shall not be a bar to recovery, but all equities and benefits received thereunder by the Santee Sioux Indians may, in the discretion of the court, be taken into consideration in the determination of the amount of recovery. Upon the rendition of such judgment and in conformity therewith the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to ascertain and determine which of said Indians now living took part in said outbreak, and to prepare a roll of the persons entitled to share in said judgment by placing thereon the names of all living members of said bands residing in the United States at the time of the passage of this act, excluding therefrom only the names of those found to have personally participated in the outbreak; and he is directed to distribute the proceeds of such judgment, except as hereinafter provided, per capita, to the persons borne on the said roll.

Proceedings shall be commenced by petition verified by one of the attorneys who have been heretofore employed by said bands of Indians to prosecute their claims under this act under a contract which has been approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the existence of the facts stated in said petition, and no other verification shall be necessary. Upon final determination of the cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find to be reasonable upon a quantam meruit for services performed or to be performed, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys so employed by the said band of Indians and their associates, and the same shall be paid out of the balance found to be due said bands of Indians when an appropriation therefor shall have been made by Congress: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by the court amount in the aggregate to more than 5 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered, and in no event shall the aggregate amount exceed $25,000: Provided further, That the court shall by its decree distribute such fees equitably between the attorneys who have been employed by said bands of Indians in said cause.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has reserved the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] intend to offer any amendments to this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; I will say that there are several amendments that I propose to offer to this bill. In line 15, page 2, I shall move to strike out the words "for their benefit" and insert the words "on their account."

In lines 20 and 21, on the same page, I shall move to strike out the words "in the discretion of the court."

And on page 3, line 20, I shall move to insert the letter "s" after the word "band."

Mr. MANN. In that second amendment, should not the gentleman move to strike out the words "may in the discretion of the court" and insert "shall"?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Insert "shall" instead of "may"?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is satisfactory. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] inform the House as to the total amount that would be submitted to the Court of Cliams for consideration under this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The total amount of the obligation of the Government to these Indians under the treaties of 1837 and 1851 was something like $3,500,000. The Government has paid on this account possibly $1,500,000, which it paid before it abrogated the treaties in 1862. I am only approximating the amounts. Then, in addition thereto, there are other offsets that are to be made, and it is a question whether these Indians will receive anything or not, but they feel that their case ought to go to the court and their rights be adjudicated.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, under the treaty of 1851 these Indians were to receive 50 installments of $61,450 each, of which they received 12 installments up to the time when this treaty was repealed by the treaty of 1868.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Of 1862.

Mr. MILLER. By the act of Congress of 1863.

Mr. STAFFORD. They were also to receive, under the treaty of 1837, the sum of $15,000——

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. They were to receive $15,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. A year, in perpetuity, of which they have only received 27 installments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, this whole matter revolves about the question whether, under this act of 1862, these prior treaties were negatived. I notice the statement in the report that the department has always considered that that act superseded those treaties. I read from the report as follows:

> The Department of the Interior has, however, always contended that these Indians have forfeited their rights to the restoration of these annuities by becoming parties to the treaty of April 29, 1868—

I mentioned 1868, and the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Nebraska attempted to correct me. I find I am right—> and further contends that if they did not surrender and forfeit their claims or rights by the terms of such agreement that then they should be charged up with all payments in money or clothing, provisions, etc., made under that treaty.

Now, does the gentleman think that an old, cold-storage claim, which has lain dormant for years and years until two or three years ago, and which involves millions of dollars, should be brought up for consideration on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that this identical bill passed this House two years ago, and those who are familiar with it understand that under that treaty of 1868 the Indians were not, in fact, consulted at all. A few of this tribe were taken out to Fort Sheridan, and they signed that treaty of 1868 without authority of the tribal council at all; and even though the tribe had been consulted, the treaty of 1868 was for another and specific purpose—that of policing the frontier along the Union Pacific Railroad. And, furthermore, the treaty of 1868 could not abrogate treaties that were not in existence. In 1863 the treaties with these Indians for the payment of these annuities were abrogated, so that there were no treaties in existence at the time of the treaty of 1868.

This bill simply contemplates restoring the rights of these Indians under their former treaties and permitting them to send their claim to the Court of Claims, so that that court can say whether these Indians have been treated fairly or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] has been quite solicitous during the past week to secure an audience with me to explain his side of this bill. I have gone over the bill very thoroughly, and also the report. Through no fault of his, the gentleman was not able to get that audience, and I wish he would ask unanimous consent to pass this bill over without prejudice for two weeks. Otherwise I might feel constrained to object at the present time. I assure him that I will collaborate with him and consult with him about the matter before this bill comes up next time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he will kindly not press that request. Let me briefly state why. The session of Congress is not going to last forever, though it may last some time. This bill has been passed over without prejudice several times in response to a similar request. The proponents of the bill are perfectly willing that all information about the bill shall be given. I think if the gentleman will withhold his point of order, we can in five minutes state to him all the facts that are important concerning this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the bill will take at least half an hour, and perhaps longer. There are amendments recommended by the department which the committee have not seen fit to incorporate.

Mr. MILLER. In one minute I can convince the gentleman that we ought not to incorporate them.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there are other amendments which have not been included by the gentleman from Nebraska. I hope the gentleman will see his way clear to ask to have this put over without prejudice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TO AMEND SECTION 19, RIVER AND HARBOR BILL, 1889.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14331) to amend section 19 of an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1899.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, to avoid the necessity of reading the bill I ask unanimous consent that this be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10138) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 37.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 20th day of April, 1914, at 8 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communications as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make them.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the enrolled bill (S. 1689) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN SETTLERS IN LOUISIANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of settlers within the limits of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which strikes out all after the enacting clause be read in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the amendment be read in lieu of the original bill.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that, if the original bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent that the original bill be printed in the RECORD and only the amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the original bill be printed in the RECORD and that the amendment be read in lieu of the original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The original bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the public-land laws of the United States the Secretary of the Interior and all subordinate officers of the Department of the Interior and all courts of the United States shall give full force and effect to the terms and provisions of section 2 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes," and whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that any lands lying within the limits of the grant made to said New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co. were occupied by actual settlers at the date of the definite location of the line of said railroad opposite such lands, and that such lands remained in the occupancy of such settlers, their heirs or assigns, from such date of definite location until the 8th day of February, 1887, then it shall be held and decided that such lands did not pass to said railroad company or to any successor in interest under its original grant made by act approved March 3, 1871, or under any amendment thereof, because such lands were never subject to said grant; and such lands shall be thereupon deemed to be public lands of the United States, open to acquisition and to disposition under all appropriate public-land laws of the United States, any general statutes or acts of limitation notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That it having been expressly provided by section 2 of said act of February 8, 1887, that lands such as are above described should be held and deemed excepted from the operation of said grant, if it shall be found by the Secretary of the Interior that any such lands were so occupied at and between the date of definite location of said line and the 8th day of February, 1887, then it shall be further held and considered that any patent or patents or approvals of lists of selections made by said company or its successors in interest and intended to have the general effect of a patent, which may have been issued or approved, including such lands, were absolutely void as to such lands; and it shall be further held and considered that no title to such lands passed to said railroad company, its successors in interest, or their assignees or grantees under or by virtue of such patents or approvals, and no plea or allegation by any assignee or grantee of said railroad company or its successors in interest that such assignee or grantee is an innocent purchaser of such land for value shall be held good or be sustained, either by the Secretary of the Interior or by any court, unless made by a grantee holding in good faith, by conveyance made under such patent by said railroad company and actually residing upon the land in question at date of approval of this act, and in such case shall be sustained only as to the technical legal subdivisions upon which are situated the residence and improvements of such person.

SEC. 3. That in order that titles to the lands lying within the limits of said grant may be finally settled, all persons claiming any lands lying within the limits of said grant and asserting title thereto adversely to said railroad company or its successors in interest, assignees, or grantees shall within two years from this enactment, file with the United States land office for the district within which said lands lie a notice of his claim to such land, together with an application to make entry thereof under the provisions of the public-land laws of the United States, and shall state under oath, corroborated by the oath of at least one other person, the facts upon which he relies to show that the lands in question were excepted from said grant. All papers so filed shall be forthwith transmitted by such local land office to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who shall pass upon the sufficiency thereof; and upon a sufficient showing being made, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall direct that a hearing be ordered by such local land office to determine the facts of the case, to which hearing the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Co., as successor in interest to said New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., shall be made a party, and any person claiming under said railroad companies shall be permitted to intervene at such hearing upon disclosing under oath the nature of his interest or claim in the lands involved.

SEC. 4. That if it shall be proven in any proceeding hereunder that any such lands were in fact occupied by any settler at and between the date of definite location of the said railroad and February 8, 1887, it shall be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that such settler was qualified to make entry of such lands under the public-land laws of the United States in quantity not in excess of that permitted by the homestead laws; but if it shall be shown and found that such settler was not in fact so qualified, then it shall be held that such occupancy was insufficient to except such lands from the operation of said grant.

SEC. 5. That in event it shall be finally decided and held by the Commissioner of the General Land Office or by the Secretary of the Interior that any such lands were in law and in fact reserved and excepted from the operation of said grant, then a notation of such decision shall be made upon the public-land records in the General Land Office and in the United States land office for the district wherein such lands lie, and shall be deemed to be and to constitute notice of such decision to all persons.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe all proper and necessary regulations for the administration of this act, including the prescribing of the manner of giving reasonable notice of any hearing which may be ordered hereunder, either by publication of notice or otherwise.

SEC. 7. That this act shall be deemed and considered a local act, applicable solely to the lands hereinabove described, lying within the State of Louisiana. The decision of the Secretary of the Interior as to the fact of occupancy at and between the date of definite location of the line of said railroad and February 8, 1887, shall be final and conclusive.

SEC. 8. That all claims to any of the lands hereinabove described, adverse to said railroad company or its successors in interest, which shall not be asserted within the period of two years from this enactment, shall be deemed and considered forever barred, and no claim or proceeding adverse to said railroad company or its successors in interest shall be thereafter accepted or entertained by the Land Department of the United States: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act limiting the time for presentation of claims adverse to said railroad grant shall not apply to claims to lands involved in that certain suit commenced in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Louisiana on or about February 27, 1901, entitled "The United States of America, complainant, v. The New Orleans Pacific Railway Co., et al., defendants," being equity cause No. 16 in said court; but claims to lands included in said suit, now pending, may be asserted in accordance with the terms of this act at any time within two years after the termination of said suit: Provided further, however, That the pendency of said suit shall not preclude the assertion of claims to any lands included in said suit, and this enactment shall not work a dismissal or discontinuance of said suit.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to immediately take up and resume the adjustment and adjudication of all rights and privileges relinquished, granted, conveyed, and confirmed to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Co., as the assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, and entitled 'An act to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg Railroad Co., to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes, subject to all the provisions and conditions therein contained for the protection of actual settlers, their heirs and assigns.

"SEC. 2. That on the application of persons to make entry in accordance with the provisions of the act aforesaid, the rights only of those who were actual settlers at the date of definite location, their heirs, or other persons to whom they may have assigned their possessory rights, prior to December 1, 1913, shall be given consideration as against the outstanding patent or patents to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Co.

"SEC. 3. That in determining rights asserted by or on behalf of actual settlers, their heirs or assigns, proof showing actual settlement at the date of definite location, and the existence of such settlement and occupancy at the present time, shall be deemed prima facie evidence of the continuity of the settlement claim.

"SEC. 4. That all claims adverse to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Co., or its successors in interest, which are not asserted as herein provided within the period of two years from the passage and approval of this act shall be deemed and considered forever barred."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if the committee considered the advisability of adopting draft 2 instead of draft 1, as proposed by the department?

Mr. FERRIS. They did, and considered that this draft was the more preferable one.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the committee consider its effect in reference to this matter? The bill before the House does not require the proof of continuous occupancy that was required by the original act. It requires only that there shall be proof of occupancy at the time of filing the map of definite location and at this time. Does that modification of the proof on which the settler founds his claim so modify the original legislation that it might serve as a basis for a claim on behalf of the railroad company for lieu land or compensation?

Mr. FERRIS. I think not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Or for recompense for what they may have lost by modification of the law?

Mr. FERRIS. I think not. Their rights come solely under section 2 of the grant of 1887, which specifically provided for any land occupied by settlers at the time of the land grant, that those lands should be reserved and saved to the settlers. I think that all that should be done is to say that they were there in good faith at that time is sufficient, but the committee goes further and says that they shall be there now or that their descendants shall be there now.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is confident that the change of proof required will not have the effect of giving the railroad company any valid claim for compensation for what they may lose?

Mr. FERRIS. I feel a certainty of that, and so much so that I will say that the Gould heirs settled with 38 settlers and paid them what they claimed to be due, which shows that the settlers have a good claim. The others should do as the Gould heirs did.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he will not ask unanimous consent to let the bill go over. It has been called to my attention very lately, and I have not had an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. FERRIS. I understand full well that the gentleman from Iowa has the right to object. I know he would not object unless he left bound to do it. But I want to plead with him not to object now, from the fact that these people have already waited 30 years. The bill was passed over two weeks ago in deference to the wishes of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and the gentleman from Iowa knows that this legislation can not be delayed much more with a prospect of getting through with the great drive in the House for business. Here are 450 homestead and home seekers who have waited 30 years trying to get a title.

Mr. TOWNER. If that be true, the bill has merit in it. But here is a bill that has been entirely substituted by a new bill recommended by the committee, and I have not had time to examine it.

Mr. FERRIS. The department drew every line of the substitute bill after extensive hearings before the committee. It was the department's final view of it, and it is also the committee's final view as to what should be done.

Mr. TOWNER. That may be true, but I have not had the opportunity to examine it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman will have an opportunity to offer an amendment, and I hope he will not ask that the bill go over.

Mr. TOWNER. I shall object unless the gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill may go over.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, pending that, will the gentleman from Oklahoma permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In this departmental bill what is the meaning of the words "settlement and occupancy at the present time"? What is the present time?

Mr. FERRIS. It says that they must be there December 1, 1913.

Mr. MANN. Where is that?

Mr. FERRIS. On line 25, page 7.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that if the bill goes over, the gentleman ought to ascertain from the department what the present time is. It evidently does not mean now.

Mr. FERRIS. I assume that the language might be construed to mean at the time of the passage of the bill, but we are not sticklers for this bill if it can be perfected in that way.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will try and ascertain what the present time means.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the preferable way would be to fix a specific date, or say "on and after the passage of the act." Now, one word to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. I very much hope that the gentleman from Iowa will not insist on this bill going over. These settlers occupied the land in good faith in 1887, when a three and a quarter million acre land grant was made to the railroad company, with the specific provision that the land occupied by bona fide settlers should not be patented to the railroad. They came up here and by the aid of their plats the Interior Department and the Commissioner of the General Land Office not having sufficient field force to find out how the land was occupied, erroneously executed the patents not only for the lands included in the grant but also on the lands on which settlers lived. This worked a tremendous hardship on the settlers, and for 30 years they have suffered while waiting for their rights to be heard, to be adjudicated, and straightened out.

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that settlers who received title from the railroad company are also interested in this matter.

Mr. FERRIS. The purchasers from the railroad company have at all times had notice of the law, which specifically excluded from the grant the lands on which these settlers lived.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I received word only yesterday in regard to this matter. I can not in justice let the bill go through this morning without examination, and unless the gentleman asks that it be passed over without prejudice I shall object.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I submit the gentleman takes a good deal of responsibility in this matter just because somebody writes him a letter. I ask unanimous consent that it go over with prejudice for that reason, as the gentleman insists that he shall object unless it is passed over without prejudice. With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION STATION AT BALTIMORE, MD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11625) to increase the appropriation for the erection of an immigration station at Baltimore, Md.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LIGHTHOUSE ON QUINAIELT INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12463) to authorize the withdrawal of lands on the Quinaielt Reservation, in the State of Washington, for lighthouse purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside not exceeding 206.75 acres of land at or near Cape Elizabeth, on the Quinaielt Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, for lighthouse purposes: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce shall pay the Indians therefor, from the appropriation for the general expenses of the Lighthouse Service for the fiscal year in which this reservation is made, such price for the lands set aside hereunder as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce: Provided further, That the funds thus derived shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Quinaielt Reservation, and shall be subject to expenditure for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby reserved for the use and benefit of the Indians of the Quinaielt Reservation in common all oil, gas, coal, or other minerals in the lands set aside hereunder for lighthouse purposes, and the right to prospect for and mine these commodities under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to interrogate the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Who is in charge of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for taking some 270 acres for lighthouse purposes, and then provides that certain parties can have the oil and gas, etc. Is it possible under this for these Indians to assign their right to these minerals?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the minerals would be handled under the general law which covers the leasing of oil or gas deposits on Indian reservations under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BRYAN. Is there any real reason for that number of acres, nearly 300, to install a lighthouse?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Department of Commerce, having jurisdiction over lighthouses, said it needed the entire area. It is a spit of land that sticks out into the water, and the department thought it ought to have jurisdiction over the entire area.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Washington will permit, as I understand it, there is a high point on this land?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. About 2 miles from the water?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And it is desired to put the lighthouse on the high point, but there are trees between that point and the water, and the department asked to have sufficient land so that it can cut down the trees which would otherwise obstruct the light.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Commerce is very insistent that this entire area be placed under its jurisdiction for lighthouse purposes, but on account of the land being valuable for oil or gas, it was not thought by the committee that the Indians ought to be deprived of any revenue that might be derived from that source in the future, and that is why the reservation is made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Washington will permit, it is very often desirable to have this right in preference to constructing at a much greater cost a very high lighthouse. If they can remove the trees between the lighthouse and the water, they can construct a lighthouse at comparatively little cost, whereas if they have to construct a lighthouse 75 feet high, for instance, although this is on a high point, it would be very expensive.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask just this further question: If this bill be enacted into law, will the status of these mineral rights be any different in this land from what it will be on the other lands of the Indian reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. No difference at all; the status will be exactly the same.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well; I do not object. I understand the lighthouse is greatly needed by navigation in that section. I hope the bill will pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The passage of this bill is an important step toward the advancement of the Lighthouse Service on the north Pacific coast. The Elizabeth Light Reservation is ideal for the purpose, the ground reserved is of ample size, and the reservation of the mineral rights fully protect the Quinaielt Indians.

I hope that the Lighthouse Board will find the money to put this light in at an early date. A lighthouse at this point would no doubt have saved the Ferndale and 27 men and the Ernest Reyer and 2 men. Both of these vessels thought that they were off the mouth of the Columbia, having missed the north current, which sets very strongly from Grays Harbor north.

But, Mr. Speaker, this land, which is desired for lighthouse purposes, has been, at a prior date, allotted to the Indians in good faith. I believe, however, that the Indians will be willing to accept other allotments in lieu of this land which the Government now desires for lighthouse purposes. It is a fact, which no one will dispute, that the Washington coast is not properly lighted.

ALLOTMENTS ON MORONGO INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10505) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made to Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the Morongo Indian Reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause allotments to be made to the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the Morongo Indian Reservation, in the State of California, in areas as provided in section 17 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 859), rather than as provided by section 4 of the act of January 12, 1891 (26 Stat. L., p. 713).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it—and I ask the question for information—the department is now authorized to allot this Indian land by families or to the heads of families?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And it is now desired to allot the land to individuals?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If it is allotted to individuals and there is a baby, I take it that the baby will receive the allotment of land that its father will receive?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; each man, woman, and child.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that will conduce to the actual use of irrigated land?

Mr. HAYDEN. Well, the baby belongs to some family, and the larger families will get larger areas. That is the plan adopted.

Mr. MANN. Who will make use of the baby's land?

Mr. HAYDEN. The father or the mother.

Mr. MANN. By what authority?

Mr. HAYDEN. As his guardian.

Mr. MANN. Then, it will have to be rented.

Mr. HAYDEN. They get it that way under general allotment now.

Mr. MANN. Is it not better simply to allot the land to the head of the family, and would it not be much more likely to be cultivated if allotted to the head of the family instead of to members of the family, including the wife and all the children?

Mr. HAYDEN. Well, the experience of the Indian Office is just to the contrary. They find that to let each individual have an allotment of his own works out better in practice. The testimony before the committee in regard to this particular Indian reservation is that if allotments were made to heads of families, and then there was trouble in the family, he may divorce his wife under the Indian custom or abandon the children, leaving them without a home. These lands ought to be allotted under the general law as it now exists.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that there is very much difference between Indians and many white people in that regard, but I take it when an ordinary person is farming 160 acres of land, and if he has to divide it and give each child a portion of it, there would not be much done on that farm.

Mr. HAYDEN. The father can manage the farm for his children, just as he now does.

Mr. MANN. Well, that depends upon whether the father can manage the farm or not. If he handles it, he must rent it and account for it. He is not going to take possession of the baby's farm and farm it for his own benefit.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the way they are practically handled in the Indian Service at the present time.

Mr. MILLER. There is also another feature of this particular case that ought to be realized and have some consideration. This property does not belong to heads of families. It never did and never ought to, but it belongs to the band of Indians. They got it from their fathers, and their fathers got it from their fathers, and when it is divided it should be divided among the members of the band, and nobody can get around that.

Mr. MANN. And nobody can get an account of it.

Mr. MILLER. You can; you can get them fairly and squarely.

Mr. MANN. If this land had been allotted 10 years ago a child under 10 years of age would not receive anything.

Mr. MILLER. And if it were allotted 100 years ago none now living would receive anything. Now, there is one thing more. I have a little additional statement I would like to put in the RECORD, in order to have it before the House if anyone objects.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman take up the matter of alienation?

Mr. MILLER. I have this one other statement: In this particular band there are several widows who have been kicked out by the heads of families, and unless the allotment is made as requested by the Indian Office they will get nothing. There are also several dependent children, because they have been abandoned by heads of families, and unless the relief is granted as asked for in this bill you will give to the heads of families the land and you will make destitute widows to a large number and destitute orphans to a larger number, and, as I said at the beginning, this property belonged not to the heads of families, but to all the members of the tribe alike.

Mr. FALCONER. I will ask the gentleman from Arizona if it is not a fact under the laws governing the sale of lands of noncompetent Indians that it is to the advantage of the minor members of Indian families to have the lands given directly to the children instead of to the head of the family? For instance, a noncompetent Indian may have his land sold. If the head of the family acquired all land allotments for all the members of his family, it might all be sold if he were judged noncompetent and the children would have nothing left, and the department now very wisely takes the position that the children ought to have an allotment rather than to have it go to the head of the family, so as to conserve and secure the use and value of the property to the children when they grow up.

I agree with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. That is one of the reasons, if the gentleman will permit, why this change is made. Whenever in the past a division of an Indian estate, either land or money, has been made it has been the custom to make same equally to each member of the tribe, until 1892, when the Government began the allotment of lands in severalty to heads of families, making a distinction between heads of families and others.

But in 1910, if I remember correctly, an act was passed providing for the allotment of land to Indians in severalty—man, woman, and child alike. That was done after the other system had been tried, and I think this was thought to be more advantageous to the people. It certainly seems more equitable, as has just been explained by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in reading the report that these Indians on four different occasions have voted against the allotment of this land. I recognize that the gentleman is an authority on Indian affairs, as we all do, and I would like to inquire of him who are entitled to vote when such a question comes up in tribal matters?

Mr. CARTER. Usually those of voting age, the same as under the white man's system of voting.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do you think, when the tribe on four separate occasions have voted positively against the procedure recommended in this bill, that we should go against the recommendations of those Indians? Does not the gentleman think the Indians know better what is best for them than we who are so far removed from their affairs?

Mr. CARTER. Well, the reply to that would be that the very people we are trying to assist in this bill did not get an opportunity to take part in those elections.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did not the electors who did express themselves on four different occasions have the welfare of their children at heart? Does the gentleman mean to say that the heads of the families have not the welfare of the minors at heart because they happen to be Indians?

Mr. CARTER. They did not seem to have in this instance.

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman will also observe this significant fact, if he looks up the actual voters: He will find voters were confined practically to heads of families, and they are the ones who would be voting away their own property rights.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says this voting privilege extends to those who are in the majority. In that case, there were 63 heads of families and 50 single persons over 21 years of age whom, I assume, would be entitled to vote—a majority of those living on the reservation, even including the 111 children who are minors, I assume.

Mr. MILLER. That is the specific feature the agent of the department has pointed out to us for years, that it was not possible for them to get a favorable vote among these people, because those who had the voting power were the ones who wanted to be the hogs and get all the land.

Mr. CARTER. I think we ought to pay great heed to what the Indians say about these things; but if we are going to permit the Indians to settle these matters themselves, then what is the use of our Indian Bureau?

Mr. STAFFORD. We should not go directly contrary to the expressed determination of the Indians on four separate occasions when this matter was up. The gentleman, I assume, is in favor of the official mandates, so far as the Indians are concerned.

Mr. CARTER. That would depend entirely upon whether the Government of the United States thought it was best for the Indians to go contrary to the way in which they had voted, because certainly the guardian has the right to do what he thinks is best for his ward, and if he always did what his ward thought best there would be little use for the guardian.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman thinks it would be far better to allow it to be allotted in the family unit rather than segregate it into little units, which in this case would only amount to 5 acres. It would be better to allow it on the family unit, and allow the family to be kept intact rather than to divide it up into these piecemeal patches?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is touching on a proposition which has been thoroughly gone into by the department and the Indian Bureau has repeatedly placed itself on record in favor of making the individual the unit instead of the family a unit.

Mr. MILLER. May I add one thing? In this case, where irrigable land is to be divided, if it is divided among the heads of families alone, each is going to get a whole lot more than he can ever use. And I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will listen to that. The heads of families will be getting vastly more than they can use of irrigable land. Divided up among the people, each will get what he can handle.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask where the Morongo Indian Reservation is located?

Mr. CARTER. It is located in southern California.

Mr. MURDOCK. How large is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. It contains 26,553 acres.

Mr. MURDOCK. How many Indians are there?

Mr. HAYDEN. Two hundred and sixty.

Mr. MURDOCK. How are they divided as regards adults?

Mr. HAYDEN. There are 63 heads of families, 50 single persons over 21 years of age, 36 married women, and 111 children.

Mr. MURDOCK. And this bill will enable the allotment to be made to individuals, including the future babies, and not the heads of families?

Mr. HAYDEN. Allotments will be made to every man, woman, and child on the reservation at the date of the allotment.

Mr. MURDOCK. And at some previous time the tribe has taken a vote upon the proposition of allotment, in which only adult males voted. Is that correct?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. And the proposition on four different occasions was voted down? And subsequent to these elections Indian men have abandoned wives and children?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, if the old proposition would stand and the allotment should be made to the heads of families, it would leave these abandoned women and babies without land. Is that correct?

Mr. HAYDEN. Without a bit of land in the world. It would all be taken by the men who are the heads of families.

Mr. MURDOCK. It seems to me beyond controversy that the allotment ought to be made to individuals. Can these lands be alienated by the Indians under any circumstances?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at the present time. This is an Executive order reservation. If the lands are allotted to the Indians, 25-year trust patents will be issued to each man, woman, and child for the land allotted to them, and after that it may be possible for them to sell their lands, as they do in Oklahoma.

Mr. MURDOCK. But neither in the case of the adult male nor the woman nor the baby will it be possible for these Indians to alienate the land?

Mr. CARTER. Not for 25 years.

Mr. HAYDEN. This bill is to apply the general law to this particular reservation.

Mr. MANN. Why can they not alienate the land if it is allotted to them?

Mr. HAYDEN. Because they are still the wards of the Government. They get a patent, but not in fee.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what patent they get. If they are allotted Indians, are they not entitled to a patent?

Mr. HAYDEN. There must be a 25-year trust patent.

Mr. MANN. If one of them dies, can not the property be sold?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I do not think the gentleman is informed on that. This property was authorized to be allotted by the law of 1891—23 years ago. Is it under cultivation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. They went ahead and made individual allotments among themselves to the extent of cultivating particular pieces of ground?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Are there any orchards on it?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not know about the orchards.

Mr. MANN. Well, they put improvements on the land. A man, supposing he would have the piece allotted to him, went ahead and improved it. Now, who gets it? The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] says he does not lose it. Who gets it?

Mr. MILLER. In making this allotment recognition will be given to the improvements made on the land.

Mr. MANN. They are improving it as heads of families under the act of 1891, supposing they would have a larger allotment. You propose now to give only 5 irrigable acres to one individual.

Mr. MILLER. They have not been improving any large or considerable areas. I do not suppose any one of them has improved 5 acres. The department has stated to the committee that they would, in making these allotments, have regard to the improvements that have been made.

Mr. MANN. From the information I have, I understand some of them have improved more than 5 acres.

Mr. HAYDEN. This is a matter of administration. We asked the department if any injustice would be done, and were told that they would allot to members of the family the same land that has heretofore been allotted to the head of the family.

Mr. MANN. The father has no right to use the land of the child, belonging to the child, without making compensation for it. He must account for it, and he must support the child, besides.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is a practical matter that is now properly cared for on all Indian reservations.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the land is allotted to a child who afterwards dies, can that land be sold? I wish the gentleman would clear me up on that question.

Mr. CARTER. Under the recent Burke Act it can be done.

Mr. MURDOCK. Can any of the rest of this land be sold? Is that the only case in which land can be alienated?

Mr. CARTER. That is all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, under the law, if an Indian is allotted land, if he makes an application for a fee patent and is able to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that he is competent and capable of taking care of his own affairs, a fee patent will be issued to him, and then he can do anything he likes with the land.

Mr. MURDOCK. Before the expiration of the 25 years?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; at any time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then, all of these Indians can alienate the land, if they prove themselves to be competent?

Mr. CARTER. They must not only prove themselves to be competent, but they must also satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that the proper use is to be made of the proceeds of the land sales. He has the say as to whether they shall sell their lands or not, without reference to the question of competency. His decision is final. He does not have to allow the restricted Indian to sell his land at all, unless he so desires.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then, there is no 25-year restriction on this?

Mr. CARTER. This takes the status of all the restricted land of Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

SURPLUS TIMBER LANDS OF SPOKANE INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10845) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of surplus agricultural lands and timber on surplus timber lands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to pay to or expend for the benefit of the Indians entitled thereto, in such manner and for such purposes as he may prescribe, any moneys which have been or may be hereafter deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Spokane Reservation, Wash., arising from the sale and disposition of surplus agricultural lands and timber on surplus timber lands not required for reimbursement to the United States for expenses incurred in connection with the allotment, classification, sale, and disposition of the lands of said reservation.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] reserves the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire of some one having the bill in charge whether this bill restricts the department to the distribution of the present surplus fund, or does it extend to all the funds that will accrue from the sale of the standing timber, which is estimated to be worth something like $1,065,000?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I understand it applies to all the timberland proceeds now on deposit.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am making my inquiry as to whether it extends to the funds that will accrue from the sale of the timberlands which, according to the report, are valued at $1,065,000.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The bill originally would have so provided, but the committee offered an amendment providing that only such moneys as are "now on deposit" should be covered by the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose that "now on deposit" will mean at the time this bill passes and will have no effect on the future so far as the proceeds from the sale of timberlands are concerned. I have read the report, and I believe there is good reason why some special legislation of this kind should be passed so as to help these Indians with food and utensils and other furnishings for their benefit.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. One of the strongest reasons for the enactment of this bill is this: The Indians have, as will be noticed from the report, 240 head of cows and only 6 bulls, and they are old ones. They have other stock and they need to replenish their breeding stock.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that is to be replenished from this $20,000 or more on deposit?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr MANN. Mr. Speaker, of course, the original bill covered the money now on deposit and to be deposited hereafter?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Except money required—for reimbursement to the United States for expenses incurred in connection with the allotment, classification, sale, and disposition of the lands of said reservation.

Is there any reason for that language being continued in the bill if it is confined to money now on deposit?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I can only say this is a departmental bill, and I presume their attorneys thought that was necessary.

Mr. MANN. That would be necessary if it applied to money to be paid in hereafter; but if you confine it to the money on deposit at the time of the passage of this bill and leave that provision in it, nobody will know what it means and no money can be paid out.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I understand, however, that there is just a small amount due the department for sales that have already been made, and that covers the money now in the Treasury; and if that is true it would be necessary to provide for reimbursing the Government to pay that amount. In other words, if the Government had been paid fully——

Mr. MANN. Has this land been allotted, classified, sold, and disposed of?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The most of it.

Mr. MANN. Under this provision the Government will have to retain out of the money now on deposit all that it estimates will be required hereafter up to the final disposition of the lands, although that expense might properly be met by receipts from the disposition of land hereafter. I do not care anything about it, but I am simply calling attention to it.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will permit me, the timberlands of the Spokane Indians have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is true.

Mr. CARTER. But they have their allotments practically completed.

Mr. MANN. The point I was asking about was this: The original bill contemplated covering the money that is to be paid in hereafter.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And to require that out of that shall be reimbursed the expenses; but if the bill be amended so as to make it apply only to money now on deposit, then the department must reserve from that money enough to reimburse the Government for all of its expenses hereafter in connection with the sale of the timberlands, which looks like a ridiculous proposition.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That may apply to the money now on hand. I do not understand the gentleman to contend that the expenses would refer to any future money.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly. It says:

Not required for reimbursement.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Then it is unnecessary language.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that in line 3, page 2, if you will insert the word "hereafter" between the words "expenses" and "incurred" it will cover his objection.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection. I just called attention to the situation that might result.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Where does the gentleman suggest that amendment?

Mr. CARTER. In line 3, on page 2, after the word "expenses," insert the word "heretofore."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "which have been or may be hereafter deposited" and insert the words "now on deposit."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that instead of the words "now on deposit" he insert the words "on deposit at the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. MANN. In place of the words "now on deposit."

The SPEAKER. As an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. MANN. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment be so modified as to insert the words "on deposit at the time of the passage of this act" instead of the words "now on deposit."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is satisfactory to us.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "now on deposit" and insert the words "on deposit at the time of the passage of this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. There is another committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words—

"SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, in line 3, on page 2, after the word "expenses," I move to insert the word "heretofore."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "expenses," insert the word "heretofore."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SALE OF TIMBER ON UNALLOTTED LANDS OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10834) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats. L., p. 855).

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes," approved on the 25th day of June, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 857), be and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That the mature living and dead and down timber on unallotted lands of any Indian reservation may be sold, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the proceeds from such sales shall be used for the benefit of the Indians of the reservation in such manner as he may direct: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation, Wis."

The following committee amendment was read:

Amend the bill by striking out all after the word "be," in line 4, page 2, down to and including the word "direct," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians owning the timber."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This bill applies to all Indian reservations in the United States except that of the Menominee Indians?

Mr. CARTER. The original bill excluded the Five Civilized Tribes and also the Osage Indians.

Mr. MANN. But it applies generally?

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma allow me to explain to the gentleman from Illinois? Section 7 of the existing law as rewritten in this bill is the same as this bill with this difference. In the original section Minnesota and Wisconsin were excepted, and in the present bill Minnesota is not excepted and only the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin is excepted. The law that already governs every reservation in the United States, except Minnesota and Wisconsin, authorizes the sale of all timber on unallotted lands, both dead and green. The effect of this bill is to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to sell all the timber on Indian reservations in Minnesota, and also in Wisconsin outside of the Menominee.

Now, I would like to explain a little further. I have an amendment which I want to offer which is in the nature of a limitation on the authority as to what timber shall be cut on the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota will recall that some years ago there was authority given to sell dead and down timber on these reservations; that under that authority it was claimed that a great deal of the very best green timber was sold, and there was considerable scandal in regard to it. Is this a proposition to permit the same thing to be done over again?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no; there is no resemblance to that whatever.

Mr. MANN. Why not? Apparently that is exactly what this is.

Mr. STEENERSON. No. If the gentleman will excuse me, I would like to explain, if I have not already succeeded, what this bill does. This bill, as you see, simply includes Minnesota and Wisconsin in the general law. The general law already gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to sell timber as he may see fit, both dead and down and green timber, all timber. That is the authority that the Secretary has now except in Minnesota and Wisconsin. The Secretary of the Interior has sent this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs and requested that he also be given authority to sell this timber in Minnesota and in Wisconsin, reserving the Menominees. The matter that the gentleman from Illinois refers to is an old question that arose when they permitted dead and down timber alone to be sold as distinguished from green timber, but the law that we are now considering authorizes the cutting of all timber regardless of whether it is dead and down or green. That is what this contemplates, that the Secretary of the Interior may sell all timber on the reservations that are unallotted. The amendment I have prepared relates to the Red Lake Reservation, and simply fixes the minimum price at which timber under the law shall be sold, and makes certain other rules in the way of safeguards. The authority in the present law is broad, and authorizes the sale of timber without any qualification or limitation as to price or kind.

The necessity, as explained by the Secretary of the Interior in his communication and as I know personally myself in regard to the Minnesota reservations, lies in the fact that there is a large amount of timber that has been burned. Over 7,000,000 feet is burned and is decaying, and they can not sell it for the reason that it is impossible to remove it without cutting green timber. Therefore the Secretary of the Interior asks permission to cut green timber also. This timber is matured and a great deal of it has blown down, but it can not be utilized.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield further for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The timber that the gentleman refers to on the Red Lake Reservation, is it single trees killed by fire or areas of trees which have been killed by fire?

Mr. STEENERSON. In some places there are small areas of 2 or 3 acres. In some places the trees have been blown down so that they lie crisscross.

Mr. MANN. This refers to fire-killed timber. It is very unusual and unique for only single trees scattered around in a forest to be killed by fire amid great quantities of green trees.

Mr. STEENERSON. Not at all. It depends largely upon whether the trees are pretty near dead or not.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to say that on the Red Lake Reservation, as on other timber countries in the Northwest, we have had extensive fires, and as a result large quantities of timber in the Red Lake Reservation were somewhat injured, and anyone familiar with the lumber business knows that timber scorched by fire will deteriorate rapidly. It is not dead-and-down timber, but timber that has been scorched and burnt, and unless authority is given to the Secretary immediately great loss will be sustained.

Mr. MANN. I have a great deal of respect for the knowledge of my friend from Minnesota both as to forests and forest fires, but I would like to see some of that kind of timber.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will go with me, I will show him a great deal of it.

Mr. MANN. I accept the invitation.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman will learn more about forests and forest fires than he ever knew before.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota what the law is now that authorizes the sale of timber in the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no law whatever authorizing the sale of timber on the Red Lake Reservation except the law for dead and down timber; but to sell the dead and down timber is practically impossible. They offered 7,000,000 feet and could not get any offer, for it is impossible to get it out without cutting green timber. The scandal which the gentleman from Illinois refers to no one wants repeated. They are very careful. They do not want to bid on the burnt or down timber, unless they can get it out without cutting green timber, and that can not be done. So far as general information is concerned, I will say that I went up to the Red Lake Reservation a little over a year ago at the request of the Indians. In company with the forester of the Interior Department, Mr. Kinney, we traveled through this timber and looked through it, so I speak from personal knowledge, and know that if this authority is not granted a great loss will occur to the Indians by the loss of this timber which ought to be logged, and ought to have been logged last year. I am not speaking from hearsay, but from actual knowledge. I have seen the trees that have been fire killed. I have seen them blown down, in some cases several acres in one section, and still the trees could be utilized if, going in there, you could cut roads and cut the green timber that is adjacent. As I have stated, every Indian reservation in the United States that has unallotted land can be cut under this section 7 of the law referred to except Minnesota and Wisconsin. The Secretary of the Interior has sent in this bill as an administration bill and has requested the Committee on Indian Affairs to report, because of urgent necessity in saving this timber.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have agreed to support it, but I have prepared amendments that I propose to offer to this bill giving minimum prices and placing certain qualifications and limitations upon the authority granted in the bill, which I hope will receive favorable consideration, if the bill is considered at this time. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in speaking of mature living and dead and down timber in the State of Washington there is an Indian reservation with 5,000,000,000 feet of timber unallotted, and 600 allotments waiting decision, and 500 other allotments awaiting the O. K. of some allotting agency.

Mr. STEENERSON. What has that to do with this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A great deal.

Mr. MONDELL. This does not change the law in regard to the reservation of which the gentleman from Washington speaks.

Mr. STEENERSON. The law reads as follows:

SEC. 7. That the mature living and dead and down timber on unallotted lands of any Indian reservation may be sold under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the proceeds from such sales shall be used for the benefit of the Indians of the reservation in such manner as he may direct: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The only effect of the bill pending is to remove Minnesota from the exception, including Minnesota with the rest of the States. So the law as it now exists applies to the gentleman's State already. His State is not affected by the pending bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; but they do not sell any of the timber.

Mr. STEENERSON. I can not help that. This does not change the law in regard to the gentleman's State.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to interrogate the other gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the committee has proposed an amendment relative to the disposition of the funds arising from these sales, and I should like to have the gentleman's opinion as to the effect of that amendment. It appears that as the bill was introduced, and under the present law the funds arising from these sales are to be used for the benefit of the Indians of the various reservations in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. In other words, I imagine he could use these receipts at any time for any proper purpose.

Mr. MILLER. He could.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee proposes to amend so that hereafter these funds shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians owning the timber. The effect of that would be, I assume, to place these funds in the Treasury, so that they could not be used except by provision made by Congress.

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely.

Mr. MONDELL. It will give Congress control of all of these sums?

Mr. MILLER. It will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think that is wise and necessary?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman does, and the committee of which he is a member does. If you should take and convert into money all of the property belonging to the Indians of the United States and put that into the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, to expend as he might see fit, that would be according to how 100 or 5,000 agents might see fit; that would produce a situation which the gentleman from Wyoming would not at all commend.

Mr. MONDELL. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman, and I congratulate the committee of which he is an honored member on having come to this wise conclusion since it reported the bill of which this is an amendment, because the former legislation did put all of these great funds in the hands of the Secretary.

Mr. MILLER. That is entirely true.

Mr. MONDELL. To be used as he saw fit. I am glad that the committee to-day is wiser than the committee was two years ago.

Mr. MILLER. We are acquiring wisdom day by day.

Mr. MONDELL. That is hopeful.

Mr. MILLER. It was on my motion that that amendment was inserted. I will give the gentleman one additional reason, and that is that in Minnesota, which is now to be incorporated, under a treaty which we have with the Indians, the proceeds of timber have to go into a common fund.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why was the Menominee Reservation excepted?

Mr. STEENERSON. Because of special legislation that covers that, which makes this unnecessary.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is that special legislation?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, there is quite an elaborate system of logging by the Indians, and it would be too elaborate for me to explain at this time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota embraced in the provisions of the bill or excluded?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; only Red Lake is included. There is no unallotted land in the White Earth Reservation, and therefore it is not included.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. What stage have we reached now?

The SPEAKER. We have not reached anything. We have not gotten unanimous consent to consider the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to know the amendments which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] intends to present.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman from Minnesota to state the amendments he proposes to offer.

Mr. STEENERSON. The amendment I desire to offer is——

Mr. MANN. State what the amendments are.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will read it:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell the merchantable timber on the Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, subject to the following limitations: The term "merchantable timber" within the meaning of this proviso shall include white, Norway, and jack pine, spruce, tamarack, cedar, elm, oak, birch, poplar, and basswood, but shall not include maple and ash.

The reason for that is there is quite a large tract of sugar maples that the Indians do not want disturbed. They want it for a sugar bush, as they have used it there for generations, and they wish to use it for their own benefit.

On that part of said reservation comprising the peninsula between upper and lower Red Lake, lying west of the present east line of said reservation and north of Battle River, only the dead and down and not exceeding 25 per cent of the standing timber shall be sold, and each tree to be cut shall first be marked by a forest officer. On the balance of the reservation all the merchantable timber may be sold, except that on tracts where white and Norway pine and spruce may be growing not less than 10 per cent thereof shall be left for reforestation. All lumbering hereunder shall be according to approved forestry methods and such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Not more than 30,000,000 feet board measure in the aggregate shall be sold in any one year.

All saw timber shall be scaled on the bank by the Scribner decimal C-rule, and full scale shall be allowed for all timber that will saw out No. 3 lumber or better.

The following are the minimum stumpage prices at which any of the timber on said reservation may be sold: White pine, $10 per thousand feet; Norway pine, $8 per thousand feet; spruce, $5 per thousand feet; cordwood, 50 cents per cord; pulp wood, $1 per cord; poles 20 to 25 feet in length, 10 cents each; poles 25 to 30 feet in length, 15 cents each; poles 30 to 50 feet in length, 2 cents per running foot; fence posts 3 inches at top, 1 cent each; fence post 4 inches at top, 2 cents each; and fence posts above 4 inches at the top, 3 cents each; ties of all kinds, 5 cents each for No. 2 and 8 cents each for No. 1; piling, 3 cents per running foot. All ties, posts, and piling sold shall be counted and graded, and pulp wood and bolt wood shall be measured up to the standard cord.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has the gentleman any idea what the attitude of the committee is toward this amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; I have consulted with them. I introduced a bill to this effect lately, and those members of the committee whom I have consulted seem to be perfectly agreeable. As you will see, it is simply a limitation.

Mr. MURDOCK. I did not hear that expression from any member of the committee.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. MILLER are familiar with it.

Mr. MILLER. I did not understand the remark of the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wanted to know how the committee felt toward that amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Well, I had not seen the amendment until it was called to my attention a little while ago. There are some features of it that are highly commendable. I am compelled, however, to offer a suggestion that I think the rates specified are a little bit high. Now, under Republican times which we had up until last year you could have sold timber in Minnesota for $10, $12, and $16 per 1,000—white pine—but under the present condition of things I do not believe you could sell it for $6.

Mr. MURDOCK. It would accrue to the benefit of the Indians to have had it sold at those prices.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say in my conversations with the Indians a year ago they said they wanted higher minimum prices than that, and that is a compromise. I have a stenographic report of the hearings as to what their ideas of prices were; and if the minimum prices can not be obtained, why, the timber will not be sold.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota has read a page or more of typewritten matter and proposes to offer it as an amendment. It has not been considered by the committee, and I think the gentleman ought to ask that this bill be passed over until the committee can consider the amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman readily understands the bill as it was originally sent up by the department gives the Secretary of the Interior blanket authority to sell as he pleases—for any price he may see fit. My amendment is a limitation.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not like to object, but I think the gentleman ought to ask the House to let the matter be passed over until we are enabled to investigate it.

Mr. STEENERSON. As I say, in this pending bill there is authority for the Secretary of the Interior to sell timber as he may see fit. Now, my amendment makes a limitation upon that. He has less authority after the amendment is passed than under the original bill, and it seems to me if the committee is willing to grant the whole authority they would be willing to grant it with this limitation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that would be better legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SALES OF LAND, KLAMATH RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION.

The business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10848) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation," approved June 17, 1892 (27 Stat. L., pp. 52, 53).

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last proviso of the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation," approved June 17, 1892, reading: "Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians now residing on said lands and their children," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read:

"Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians and their children now residing on said lands, and for the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements, and for other purposes, for their benefit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman will have to offer a very good explanation to this bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I was not present when this bill was reported. In looking over the bill the only thing it purports to do is to permit a part of this money—he can now only use it for schools—to be used for roads and trails and other matters for their benefit. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who was present.

Mr. MANN. The statement of the department is:

If this law is amended as proposed, it will enable this department to undertake the building of a trail connecting the allotments and enable the Indians to properly reach the public schools which are available, and at the same time bring them into better and closer contact with the outer world, thereby opening a way for them to market their surplus products. The expenses incident to surveying the proposed trail will be borne by the counties of Del Norte and Humboldt.

And so forth. I do not know whether it is to the interest of the Indians to bring them in closer contact with the outer world or not. I suppose the counties want the trails built.

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman is wholly misinformed if he is of the opinion that this request comes from the counties. It comes from no such source. It comes from the Indians, expressed through their agent to the Indian Office, and by the Indian Office transmitted to the House Committee on Indian Affairs. Now, the facts, briefly, are these: These Indians are practically isolated by reason of the topography of the country there. They have no way to get to a market any of the products which they raise, no matter what they are. They are shut off and isolated. They have this fund. There is no immediate need of it for any purpose. There are schools in that vinicity available for these children; and every man in America who is familiar with the Indian question of education knows that the only way really and fittingly to educate Indian youths is to educate them along with whites in white schools, a condition which can be carried on at this place.

The expense of carrying on an Indian day school or boarding school at that place is very considerable. If they can avail themselves of the privilege of attending white schools, the cost will be infinitely less. It is the best proposition for the Indian—a proposition that means for their moral uplift, their betterment, and progress, and means also that they will have some chance to market something which they can sell. It is as true at that place as it is at any other that a man who has a piece of land on which to make a living never can make a living on it unless he can find a market for what he has to sell. And if this road, short as it is, can be consfructed in accordance with the designs of the Indian Office they will be able to get out in the world and sell the things they are trying to raise.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to ask the gentleman if he is not a little afraid that if we take the Indians' money and build a road with it, it will cause trouble on other Indian reservations?

Mr. MILLER. I do not think so. Wherever the Indians' money has been expended in the last two or three years in building roads in an Indian country it has brought back value to the Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. How much will it cost to build the road?

Mr. MILLER. Not nearly as much as the gentleman thinks.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman say "road"? This does not contemplate the building of a road. This is a trail.

Mr. MILLER. It may be termed "trail" in the report, but, as a matter of fact, it is an Indian road.

Mr. MANN. Let us see if the department says so. It says:

When bridges are necessary, they will be built of sufficient size and strength for wagon use, and the trail could be later widened for similar use.

Now, does that contemplate the construction of a wagon road?

Mr. MILLER. Maybe not the first minute the trail is constructed, but it does as time goes along and the necessity for it increases.

Mr. MANN. I have read what the department intends to do with this.

Mr. FERRIS. The department drew up this bill.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to say to the gentleman in this connection that I have the statute before me which provides for this, and the only addition to the statute is these words on the last two lines of the bill, namely:

For the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that on each side of the Klamath River a mile has been reserved for the Indian reservation. Down that river they can float with their boats, but can not come back with any produce because of the swiftness of the river. In going down and up the river they have to swim it two or three times with their mules; they have cattle and chickens and hogs, they can not even get them out to market except by heavy expense in driving them over the mountainous country. We are trying to assist those Indians. This will give them an opportunity to get in and out, take their horses in and out that they are raising, take their cattle in and out that they are raising, their hogs, poultry, and grain and produce, so that they may to some extent get the benefit of this money from the sale of their industry.

If the Members of the House only knew the topography of this country they could see that it was useless to give a man a right to the land when he can not go in and out, and therefore can get no benefit from the land.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman from California to say that the current in the river was so swift that boats could not come down but could go up.

Mr. RAKER. It is just the reverse. It is hard for them to bring stuff up in their little canoes. They can not bring their burros back, or their cattle back, or their products. The department has been very anxious for several years to have this improvement made. The county of Trinity, adjoining this reservation, and the county of Humboldt are spending large sums of money on a road to go to the main reservation, so that when these people come down the river or go up the river they can come on the public road on the eastern side of the Sacramento Valley, or go west toward the ocean, in order that they may dispose of their stuff.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not this a kind of expenditure that could be considered in a river and harbor bill?

Mr. RAKER. It has never been so considered at the present time, for this reason: It is practically the only river in California that flows from the mountains, where they are doing hydraulic mining upon that river. The hydraulic mining is an important industry at the head of this river, and there is a large plant at the head of the river, and the United States Government has not stopped the hydraulic mining.

Mr. MADDEN. So that everything that comes from the hydraulic mining goes into the bed of this river?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; goes into the bed of this river, and so far it is doing no hurt.

Mr. MADDEN. There is plenty of water yet to float boats?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes; and also to float many tons of the finest salmon that ever came from the ocean.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, in that connection I would like to read one part of the department letter which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] omitted to read, and that is this:

The Indians are heartily in favor of this project.

And they are. It is their own money, and they ought to have something to say in regard to its expenditure.

Mr. MADDEN. Do the trails go up the mountain or down the mountain? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. Oh, that is a detail that does not seem to me to be material. The important question is whether it gets there.

Mr. MADDEN. That question might determine whether or not you could make a workable wagon trail.

Mr. MILLER. The evidence is that a wagon trail could very easily be constructed.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman know what the height of the mountain is?

Mr. MILLER. I could not say as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to the amount that would be required to build this road?

Mr. MILLER. That is a pertinent question, but I do not now recall the amount. My recollection is, however, that it was stated that something like $10,000 could be used to good advantage in the construction of this road.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a surplus fund of $25,000 to the credit of these Indians. In the bill before us there is no limitation on the amount that may be expended for the construction of this road. I will ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] whether they do not believe there ought to be a limitation on the amount to be expended for this road?

Mr. RAKER. We took it up last year and also this year with the department. We asked only for an amount that will make the trail accessible. My recollection is that the amount needed is not over $6,000 for the trail. If the committee will recollect, this is all on an Indian reservation and is intended for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think there should be some limitation on the amount that could be expended on this road?

Mr. RAKER. I do not believe there should be.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would $6,000 be satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. RAKER. I am confident the department would expend only such an amount as would be necessary after the Bureau of Roads has found out the most practicable and cheapest trail.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will notice, the power that is given to the Secretary is not discretionary, but is mandatory, to use whatever funds may belong to these Indian tribes for the construction of these roads and trails. I believe that in order to safeguard the interests of these Indians there should be some limitation on the amount and that it should be left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to expend this amount for that purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Very well. Just one question right there. Suppose the Secretary expends for the education of these Indians $10,000 and for their maintenance $5,000. There would be only $6,000 left to expend on the road.

Mr. STAFFORD. But supposing the Secretary of the Interior takes this law as the mandate of Congress to build these roads and suppose the roads cost $26,000. Then there would not be any money whatever left for the maintenance and education of the Indians. We should safeguard the interests of the Indians.

Mr. RAKER. I see no objection to leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to expend such an amount as he may see fit, and I will vote for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] whether he has any definite information as to the amount that would be required for building these roads?

Mr. MILLER. As I indicated before, I do not have it in mind that our committee was advised of the exact amount, except in a general way; it was stated that not exceeding $10,000 would be needed for this purpose. I do not imagine that at the outset the expenditure would be that much for the construction of the original trail. It might be that the road would have to be put in better condition for the accommodation of vehicles and wagons, and it might cost upward of $10,000 in that event.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there not a law which gives authority to the officials of the county to lay out county roads?

Mr. MILLER. I think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. In a report on a bill to be considered to-day and reported from the committee of which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is an honored member, there was some reference made to the fact that the officials had power to lay out roads.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota if he would be willing to accept at the end of the bill this language: "Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 shall be expended for purposes other than education." That gives them one-fifth of all the money that they have to be expended on roads, and they ought to save four-fifths of it for educational and other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that they do not need four-fifths of it for educational and other purposes. They have no need for educational funds if these white schools are made available to them.

Mr. FERRIS. You do not want to spend it all for roads?

Mr. MILLER. No; I would not want to have it all spent for roads. In the bill suggested by the department there was the language, "for other purposes." The committee was not willing to allow that, so that that was stricken out, confining the discretion of the Secretary in the expenditure of this fund to one of two things—either the construction of roads or the construction of bridges.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think if they get $5,000, or one-fifth of their entire capital, that would be considered very good for one year?

Mr. MILLER. Suppose it would take more than $5,000?

Mr. FERRIS. Some one here ought to know what is actually needed, and so long as we do not know here we can not get at it until we get it to the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. MILLER. We do know this, and that is all that we need to know, in my judgment—that this fund is available and is not needed for any other purpose. The trail is needed; the department recommends it, and the Indians want it, and it is not too much to give the Secretary of the Interior the authority to use so much of the funds as may be needed for this purpose.

Mr. FERRIS. What kind of Indians are these, may I ask the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MILLER. They are practically full bloods.

Mr. FERRIS. They do not know what they want.

Mr. MILLER. I do not agree with the gentleman on that. Some of the ablest and best Indians I have ever met are full-blood Indians.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Oklahoma will yield to me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to his colleague?

Mr. FERRIS. If I have the floor. I did not know I had the floor.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, there are Indians and Indians. While these Klamath Indians are mostly full bloods, they are not the ignorant Indians the gentleman thinks. He will certainly admit that some of the full-blood Indians whom he himself has met were among the very ablest Indians he has ever seen.

Mr. FERRIS. In what direction?

Mr. CARTER. I call the gentleman's particular attention to some of the full bloods of the Five Civilized Tribes and to the Rev. Sherman Coolidge, a full-blood Indian, one of the ablest I ever met. The Klamath Indians and all the mission Indians have given less trouble to the United States than any other tribes of Indians in the United States, except perhaps the Navajos and a few other Arizona Indians. They have been less expense to the Federal Government. They have been able to get along with very little supervision by the United States Government. They have maintained themselves without very much assistance from our Government. They have held on to this residue of their former possessions and are a somewhat self-supporting people.

Mr. FERRIS. The time has come when the word "Indian" means nothing any longer. In Oklahoma we have Indians who are leading citizens—the cashiers of banks, lawyers, doctors, merchants, and chiefs—and in Oklahoma we have other tribes of Indians who know very little about business and who have, in fact, no business ability whatever. I do not know what the facts are in this case. If these are full-blood Indians, the chances are that they have little business ability if, in fact, any at all, and it does not make any difference whether they say they want a road or not. They should not be permitted to expend their last cent on roads and be left penniless for other necessaries.

Indians that are competent ought to be given their money; Indians that are without any business experience ought to have their affairs carefully supervised.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman that many of them have business ability. They have taken care of themselves since the white men came among them.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman knows about Indians, and so do I. Did the gentleman go out and visit them?

Mr. CARTER. I saw some Klamath Indians. All that I saw were full bloods, and every one of them that I saw spoke English and was educated.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I shall not object, but it is not sufficient to assume full-blood Indians have sufficient business ability to know how to expend the last remnant of their funds.

Mr. RAKER. In answer to the gentleman's suggestion I want to say that 99 per cent of these Indians are full-blood Indians. They are of the Klamath race. Many of them vote. Many of them own horses and cattle and are building up their homes. They are a high-class lot of people, and, as Indians go, they are ordinarily trying to be sober when the white men let them alone. I want to say that they know what they want. They want to get in and out, to and from their homes. They want to build up their homes. They want to have the same opportunity as the white man to send their children to school.

Mr. MANN. Then why do they not get busy and build this road themselves? Are they too lazy?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. Why do they not get to work?

Mr. RAKER. They can not get the money.

Mr. MANN. It does not require money. What it requires is muscle.

Mr. CARTER. They are just like the white men. They want to get the money to hire somebody else.

Mr. MANN. They ought to use their muscle and build the road themselves.

Mr. MILLER. But the building of a trail in that part of the country requires dynamite. Where dynamite is required, it takes money to buy dynamite; shovels are required, and it takes money to buy shovels. It takes plows, and it requires money to buy plows. It takes scrapers, and it requires money to buy scrapers. Who has their money? The United States Government has it. They want these improvements. Who says they ought to have them? The Indian Service, composed of white people. Some gentleman may put his judgment up against that of the Indians and of the Indian Service and say no, but I say yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker. I put my judgment against theirs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3403) to abolish the office of receiver of public moneys at Springfield, Mo., and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the office of receiver of public moneys at Springfield, Mo., shall, from and after the 31st day of December, 1913, be abolished and cease to exist; and that all the powers, duties, obligations, and penalties at that time lawfully imposed upon such receiver, and upon the register of the land office at Springfield, Mo., shall, from and after that date, be exercised by and imposed upon such register; and such register shall, in addition to the duties thus imposed, have charge of and attend to the sale of public lands within the State of Missouri, as provided by law and official regulation, and shall be accountable under his official bond for the proceeds of such sales, and for all fees, commissions, and other moneys received by him under any provision of law or official regulation: Provided, That all the fees and commissions now allowed by law to both such register and such receiver shall, after December 31, 1913, be paid to and accounted for by such register in the same manner and in like amounts in which they are now required to be paid to and accounted for by such receiver, but the salary, fees, and commissions of such register shall not exceed $3,000 per annum.

SEC. 2. That the secretary of the Interior may appoint or designate a clerk for the land office at Springfield, Mo., who shall receive such salary, payable from the appropriation for contingent expenses of land offices, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may authorize, and such clerk shall perform such duties as may be directed by the register, or by official regulation, and he shall, during the absence of such register or in case of a vacancy in the office of such register, exercise all the powers, perform all the duties, and be subject to all the obligations and penalties imposed upon such register by law or official regulation, but such clerk shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, execute to the United State a bond in such penal sum as the said Secretary may prescribe, with approved security, for the faithful performance of his official duties; and such clerk shall be accountable under his official bond for such proceeds arising from the sale of public lands within his district, and for such fees, commissions, and other moneys as may come into his hands under any law or official regulation or direction.

SEC. 3. That all official and public books, papers, plats, records, and property of every description found and remaining in the said land office on the 31st day of December, 1913, shall be delivered to the register of the said office, who shall become the custodian of the same, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman to state what will be the effect of this?

Mr. FERRIS. If I may be permitted, I will explain in a word what this is for and what it does. In a word, it abolishes the office of receiver of public moneys at Springfield, Mo., and leaves the remaining duties of the receiver and of the register of the land office to be performed by the register and the one clerk that the office now has.

There are in the State of Missouri 713 acres only of unentered land. There are in that State 4,474 acres of entered land which has not yet been proven up. They took in last year about $8,000 in fees. There is, however, some relinquishment business left to be done there, and this is the only land office in the State, so it is necessary for a time at least to keep this land office there. This bill works an annual economy of $500, gets rid of one useless officer, and the others ought to go within the next year or two.

Mr. MANN. Did the committee recommend the striking out of section 2 because that is already provided for by law?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; it is already provided for by law.

Mr. MANN. Have they a clerk there?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; they have a clerk. The committee recommended the retention of the clerk.

Mr. MANN. The register is entitled to keep one clerk?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The section stricken out made the clerk a deputy register in the absence of the register. The committee objected to that.

Mr. MANN. Why should not the clerk be authorized to do the business in the absence of the register?

Mr. FERRIS. I suppose the register must step out a few moments in the day and the clerk transacts the business in his absence.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but section 2 proposed to authorize the clerk to act as register in the absence of the register.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The committee strikes that out. Now, what authority will the clerk have without that provision in the bill to sign papers in the absence of the register?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, that question was considered in committee at some length, and the committee thought that it was not wise to raise a clerk of the land office who only gets $1,100 a year to the dignity of a receiver or register. As the gentleman knows, the receiver may have to sit and try contest suits and admit entries and administer the law that involves substantial and sometimes exceedingly valuable rights.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but this clerk receives $1,140. How much does the register's salary amount to?

Mr. FERRIS. It may amount to $3,000.

Mr. MANN. Yes; it may amount to that, but what does it amount to?

Mr. FERRIS. Approximately that, if you abolish the receiver.

Mr. MANN. The register is now receiving, or did receive last year, $1,289.96. Of course that is some more than $1,140, and yet I am not sure that it makes any great difference in the comparative merits of the two men; one may sign papers and the other may not.

Mr. FERRIS. The answer to that is that the receiver has a possible chance of getting $3,000 a year. They are appointed with the eye single to having some judicial ability, while the clerk is only appointed for his qualifications for clerical work.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the real reason for abolishing the office is to transfer the duties to another man, so that he may get twice as much compensation as he is geting now. The Government does not save anything, does it?

Mr. FERRIS. Five hundred dollars.

Mr. MANN. How?

Mr. FERRIS. The law provides that the register shall receive $500 and the receiver $500 out of the Treasury, and in addition they may receive the fees up to $3,000.

Mr. MANN. How does it happen that you did not provide that the register should receive the $500 heretofore paid the receiver?

Mr. FERRIS. Because we wanted to save the money.

Mr. MANN. That is the first evidence I have seen in this House in three years of economy on the Democratic side of the House. I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. I am glad the gentleman appreciates it. The gentleman should have long ago recognized the economies and virtues of the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman must also remember that this is in Missouri.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman, under existing law does it not require that when the available area of the public domain in a State falls below a certain prescribed amount, below 100,000 acres, that automatically the land office is discontinued?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the statute before me, but I think there is a provision that authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land Office to drop the office when it falls below a certain amount, but I do not understand that it is mandatory.

Mr. MILLER. I understand that it is mandatory.

Mr. FERRIS. It may be; but this is the only land office in Missouri. They seem to need it a little longer to clean up the odds and ends there.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Senate bill provides for a clerk to assist the register. The gentleman realizes that if the bill became a law in the form the Senate passed it the Government, instead of saving money, would be out anywhere from $500 to $1,500.

Mr. FERRIS. The House committee did not accept that provision in the bill and struck it out, and if the committee has its way it will remain out The purpose was to get rid of one officer and save $500. That is not very much, but it is that much.

Mr. MONDELL. The Commissioner of the General Land Office can give the register a clerk if he desires, even with the bill in its present form.

Mr. FERRIS. Only the one that he has now. I can not conceive of the General Land Office sending a clerk there that is not needed at all.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no law against it; but what the Senate bill did was to legislate a clerk into this office.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true, and the committee struck it out.

Mr. MONDELL. Under this bill the Government will save $500?

Mr. FERRIS. It will save it if the bill becomes a law in its present form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause:] The Chair hears none.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 4, page 1, of the bill insert, after the word "shall," the words "10 days"; also, in lines 4 and 5 of page 1, strike out the words "31st day of December, 1913," and insert in lieu thereof the words "passage and approval of this act"; strike out all of section 2 down to and including the words "or direction," on line 25, and insert the remainder of the section as a proviso at the end of section 1, after striking out, in lines 2 and 3 of the bill, the words "after December 31, 1913," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "10 days after the passage and approval of this act"; also strike out, on line 8, page 3, the figure "3," indicating the number of the section, and insert in lieu thereof the figure "2"; also, on lines 10 and 11, page 3, strike out the words "on the 31st day of December, 1913," and insert in lieu thereof "10 days from and after the approval of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GRANT OF LAND TO PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, POPLAR, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 656) granting to the trustees of the diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for the benefit of "Christ Church On-the-Hill," at Poplar, Mont., lots 5, 6, and 7, in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey by patent lots 5, 6, and 7, in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana, to the trustees of the diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, upon payment by them of the appraised value thereof, to be held by them, their successors and assigns, forever, for the use and benefit of "Christ Church On-the-Hill," at Poplar, Mont., said property to be used by said church for religious purposes in the town and State aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman from Oklahoma believe it desirable to insert in the bill a provision like that in the Caddo County commissioners' bill that we considered a short time ago, providing that if the land shall not be used it shall revert to the United States?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I think not. Church property is quite sure to be used at all times. It is not so ambulatory as land for fairgrounds, such as we had in Oklahoma. Then there is an additional reason: These people pay the appraised price for the land, and they ought to have the title to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I appreciate the difference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COUNTRY PARKS WITHIN RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 657) to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from other disposition and reserve for country parks, public playgrounds, and community centers for the use of the residents upon the lands such tracts as he may deem advisable, not exceeding 20 acres in any one township in each reclamation project or the several units of such reclamation projects undertaken under the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act.

SEC. 2. That subject to the provisions hereinafter contained every such tract of land so set apart shall be supplied with water from the Government irrigation system, the cost thereof to be charged to the remaining lands of the project as a part of the construction charge of such project, and shall be maintained and used in perpetuity by the people upon said reclaimed lands for a pleasure park, public playground, and community center.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out and effecting the objects of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into a contract with the organization formed by the owners of the lands irrigated within said project or project unit pursuant to section 6 of the act of June 17, 1902, stipulating and providing that the organization will maintain and use such of the lands so reserved for the purposes prescribed in this act as such organization may desire, and that upon failure to so maintain and use such lands, or in the event that same shall be permitted to be used or occupied for other purposes than those stipulated in this act, the control of the lands shall revert to the United States, and same shall be thereafter disposed of in accordance with the public-land laws applicable thereto.

SEC. 4. That any of such lands not contracted for in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act within 10 years from the time water is available for the same, or sooner, if the Secretary of the Interior may deem it desirable, shall be disposed of in accordance with the public-land laws applicable thereto, and the proceeds from the sale of a water right for the same shall be turned over to the organization representing the owners of the lands within such project.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out, in lines 2 and 3 of the title, the words "in the State of Montana."

Strike out, in line 4, page 1, the words "in the State of Montana."

In line 3, page 2, after the word "that," insert a comma and the following words, "subjected to the provisions hereinafter contained."

On page 3 strike out all of the words after the word "the," in line 7, down to and including the word "project," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "disposition of lands reverting to the United States under the provisions of this act, and from sales of water rights, shall be covered into the reclamation fund and placed to the credit of the project wherein the lands are situated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, in the first place, if we are going to pass a bill of this kind, why we should not confine it to the State of Montana, as provided in the bill as passed by the Senate. It is an experiment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, in 1902 we passed the reclamation law, and made it applicable to practically all of the Western States. If we should make this park proposition applicable to Montana, why not make it applicable to all of the other States named in the reclamation act? We of the Public Lands Committee could see no reason why that should not be done, and we amended it in that particular.

Mr. MANN. It is an experiment. Here it is proposed to withdraw a part of the land, which may be a very good thing; yet in another bill on the calendar—not from the gentleman's committee, from another committee—it is practically provided that we shall not get any money back for a long time and no interest. We have practically given away to that territory seventy-five to one hundred million dollars, and I do not think there is any intention to ever pay it back. There is no intention to ever pay any interest back, I know. The Public Lands Committee is now trying to give away the land.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman states that a little too broadly. The Public Lands Committee has merely reported a bill which authorizes the withdrawal of 20 acres from every irrigation project as a park or community center, where these people may get together for their picnics, their social gatherings, and so forth. It is not a bad thing. It really ought to be done.

Mr. MANN. These settlers on the irrigation project have a bill in the House now which will be soon passed, I take it, prepared by some very warm friends of theirs, proposing to extend the time of payment for the principal for 20 years and to pay no interest whatever. In addition to that, the gentleman now proposes to give them the land. The Government is the loser.

Mr. FERRIS. I confess that the first takers of the money, who had the money on this reclamation proposition, have, of course, had much the best of it, and probably always will have the best of it. My State has contributed six million and more dollars and has not had a cent for irrigation, so therefore we do not find a very good taste in our mouths in respect to these payments being extended indefinitely; so that it may not be considered to be a revolving fund, and cease to be used by the successors of these first takers; but this reaches another question altogether. It should not be debated now. It is, however, very important.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that the revolving fund is practically dead when this other bill passes.

Mr. FERRIS. I am afraid that is so.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will give close attention to that other bill. I would like to see some one in the House who was looking after the interests of the Government when it comes to irrigation projects.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I am as deeply interested in that as is the gentleman, but I presume the same hard-luck stories of the settlers that tugs at my heart will tug at the gentleman's heart and at the hearts of the rest of the Members of Congress and that we will pass the bill for them, although I very much doubt the propriety of it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman another question. At the bottom of section 3 it is provided:

And that upon failure to so maintain and use such lands, or in the event that same shall be permitted to be used or occupied for other purposes than those stipulated in this act, the control of the lands shall revert to the United States, and same shall be thereafter disposed of in accordance with the public-land laws applicable thereto.

Might not this land become very valuable in the course of time? Might it not be abandoned, and if disposed of in accordance with the public-land laws might not some one seize it?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to that is that under existing law we have ample power vested in the President, which means the department, to withdraw any and all lands at any time, subject to irrigation, and for a dozen other purposes. Therefore I think the authority given the Secretary of the Interior is ample to withdraw and dispose of these 20-acre tracts in the various projects according to rules and regulations which will not allow some selfish person to enter it and take it all.

Mr. MANN. Under this provision the Secretary would have no authority to withdraw this.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, yes—

The control of the lands shall revert to the United States and same shall be thereafter disposed of in accordance with the public-land laws applicable thereto.

Are not the withdrawal acts a part of that?

Mr. MANN. That is not disposing of the land. That is withholding it.

Mr. FERRIS. That is a part of the public-land laws, is it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it will not be disposing of the land.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I confess freely that if the gentleman thinks it has that effect, so far as I am concerned, it ought to be amended, because I do not believe we ought to set apart a 20-acre tract and allow it to be made valuable by improvements of other settlers and then allow some person to come in and get the benefit of the value that his neighbors created. I think it ought to be disposed of, if at all, under rules and regulations which would make it possible to get the real value out of the 20 acres in the event it will ever revert.

Mr. MANN. Why not strike that provision out?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the bill the gentleman from Oklahoma reported at the beginning of this session, which takes care of and provides for all land that has ever been once reserved. The Secretary of the Interior, under the general bill passed at the beginning of this session, outside of the homestead laws and the preemption laws and the desert-land laws, is authorized to put it up at public auction for bids as he sees fit.

Mr. MANN. Why not strike this provision out of the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, if it is necessary. The gentleman from Montana is correct. This Congress did early in the session pass a law which provided that the Secretary of the Interior might in each case inaugurate rules and regulations applicable to the case, so there is no necessity to retain that language and it can be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if this passes and one of these tracts reverts, under the law and under the provisions of this act it will be open to homestead settlement and the water rights pertaining to it will be disposed of at the same price as other water rights on the project are disposed of. Now, if the gentleman from Oklahoma does not think that is a good provision, then he must modify the bill. You can not effect that by the modification which has been suggested. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman: This is only a 20-acre tract on each project, or only a 20-acre tract in each township. There are something over 23,000 acres to a township, so it is 20 acres out of 23,000, or 1 acre to a thousand. The probability is that none of the tracts will ever be relinquished after the community has taken possession of it; but if it should, why should not it be disposed of just as the other tracts were disposed of?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out after the word "withdrawal" the words "in the State of Montana."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after the word "that," in line 1, insert "subject to the provisions hereinafter contained."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after the word "the," in line 5, all of the section down to and including the word "project," in line 7, and insert "disposition of lands reverting to the United States under the provisions of this act and from sales of water rights shall be covered into the reclamation fund and placed to the credit of the project wherein the lands are situate."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, on page 2, all after the word "States," in line 21.

Mr. FERRIS. There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 3 after the word "States," in line 21.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the reservation of public lands for county parks and community centers within reclamation centers, and for other purposes."

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 5 minutes to 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 5 minutes to 3 o'clock. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the House stands in recess until 5 minutes to 3 o'clock.

JOINT MEETING OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session and was called to order by the Speaker.

At 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the House the Speaker appoints the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] a committee to wait on the President in the Speaker's room and escort him into the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On behalf of the Senate the Vice President appoints the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

At 3 o'clock p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid applause on the floor and in the galleries.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Sixty-third Congress, I present to you the President of the United States. [Applause.]

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT (H. DOC. NO. 910).

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Congress, it is my duty to call your attention to a situation which has arisen in our dealings with Gen. Victoriano Huerta at Mexico City which calls for action, and to ask your advice and cooperation in acting upon it. On the 9th of April a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested by an officer and squad of men of the army of Gen. Huerta. Neither the paymaster nor anyone of the boat's crew was armed. Two of the men were in the boat when the arrest took place, and were obliged to leave it and submit to be taken into custody, notwithstanding the fact that the boat carried, both at her bow and at her stern, the flag of the United States. The officer who made the arrest was proceeding up one of the streets of the town with his prisoners when met by an officer of higher authority, who ordered him to return to the landing and await orders; and within an hour and a half from the time of the arrest orders were received from the commander of the Huertista forces at Tampico for the release of the paymaster and his men. The release was followed by apologies from the commander and later by an expression of regret by Gen. Huerta himself. Gen. Huerta urged that martial law obtained at the time at Tampico; that orders had been issued that no one should be allowed to land at the Iturbide Bridge; and that our sailors had no right to land there. Our naval commanders at the port had not been notified of any such prohibition; and, even if they had been, the only justifiable course open to the local authorities would have been to request the paymaster and his crew to withdraw and to lodge a protest with the commanding officer of the fleet. Admiral Mayo regarded the arrest as so serious an affront that he was not satisfied with the apologies offered, but demanded that the flag of the United States be saluted with special ceremony by the military commander of the port.

The incident can not be regarded as a trivial one, especially as two of the men arrested were taken from the boat itself—that is to say, from the territory of the United States—but had it stood by itself it might have been attributed to the ignorance or arrogance of a single officer. Unfortunately, it was not an isolated case. A series of incidents have recently occurred which can not but create the impression that the representatives of Gen. Huerta were willing to go out of their way to show disregard for the dignity and rights of this Government and felt perfectly safe in doing what they pleased, making free to show in many ways their irritation and contempt. A few days after the incident at Tampico an orderly from the U. S. S. Minnesota was arrested at Vera Cruz while ashore in uniform to obtain the ship's mail and was for a time thrown into jail. An official dispatch from this Government to its embassy at Mexico City was withheld by the authorities of the telegraphic service until peremptorily demanded by our chargé d'affaires in person. So far as I can learn, such wrongs and annoyances have been suffered to occur only against representatives of the United States. I have heard of no complaints from other Governments of similar treatment. Subsequent explanations and formal apologies did not and could not alter the popular impression, which it is possible it had been the object of the Huertista authorities to create, that the Government of the United States was being singled out, and might be singled out with impunity, for slights and affronts in retaliation for its refusal to recognize the pretensions of Gen. Huerta to be regarded as the constitutional provisional President of the Republic of Mexico.

The manifest danger of such a situation was that such offenses might grow from bad to worse, until something happened of so gross and intolerable a sort as to lead directly and inevitably to armed conflict. It was necessary that the apologies of Gen. Huerta and his representatives should go much further; that they should be such as to attract the attention of the whole population to their significance and such as to impress upon Gen. Huerta himself the necessity of seeing to it that no further occasion for explanations and professed regrets should arise. I therefore felt it my duty to sustain Admiral Mayo in the whole of his demand and to insist that the flag of the United States should be saluted in such a way as to indicate a new spirit and attitude on the part of the Huertistas. [Applause.]

Such a salute Gen. Huerta has refused, and I have come to ask your approval and support in the course I now purpose to pursue.

This Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstances be forced into war with the people of Mexico. Mexico is torn by civil strife. If we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, it has no government. Gen. Huerta has set his power up in the City of Mexico, such as it is, without right and by methods for which there can be no justification. Only part of the country is under his control. If armed conflict should unhappily come as a result of his attitude of personal resentment toward this Government, we should be fighting only Gen. Huerta and those who adhere to him and give him their support, and our object would be only to restore to the people of the distracted Republic the opportunity to set up again their own laws and their own Government. [Applause.]

But I earnestly hope that war is not now in question. I believe that I speak for the American people when I say that we do not desire to control in any degree the affairs of our sister Republic. [Applause.] Our feeling for the people of Mexico is one of deep and genuine friendship, and everything that we have so far done or refrained from doing has proceeded from our desire to help them, not to hinder or embarrass them. We would not wish even to exercise the good offices of friendship without their welcome and consent. The people of Mexico are entitled to settle their own domestic affairs in their own way, and we sincerely desire to respect their right. The present situation need have none of the grave implications of interference if we deal with it promptly, firmly, and wisely.

No doubt I could do what is necessary in the circumstances to enforce respect for our Government without recourse to the Congress and yet not exceed my constitutional powers as President, but I do not wish to act in a matter possibly of so grave consequence except in close conference and cooperation with both the Senate and House. I therefore come to ask your approval that I should use the armed forces of the United States in such ways and to such an extent as may be necessary to obtain from Gen. Huerta and his adherents the fullest recognition of the rights and dignity of the United States [applause], even amidst the distressing conditions now unhappily obtaining in Mexico.

There can in what we do be no thought of aggression or of selfish aggrandizement. We seek to maintain the dignity and authority of the United States only because we wish always to keep our great influence unimpaired for the uses of liberty, both in the United States and wherever else it may be employed for the benefit of mankind. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

At 3 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m. the President retired from the Hall of the House.

Thereupon the Vice President and Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The message of the President just delivered to the House will be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 2316, an act authorizing leave of absence to homestead settlers upon unsurveyed land.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any qualified person who has heretofore or shall hereafter in good faith make settlement upon and improve unsurveyed lands of the United States with intention, upon survey, of entering same under the homestead laws shall be entitled to a continuous leave of absence from the land settled upon by him for a period not exceeding five months in each year after establishment of residence: Provided, That he shall have plainly marked the exterior boundaries of the lands claimed and have filed in the local land office notice of the approximate location of the lands settled upon and claimed, of the period of intended absence, and that he shall upon the termination of the absence and his return to the land file notice thereof in the local land office.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "unsurveyed," insert the words "unreserved unappropriated public."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "marked," insert the words "on the ground."

ACTION ON PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes in which to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent for two minutes in which to make a statement. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right on this bill; that is all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves the right on this bill. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is recognized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to state to the House that the President informs me that it is of the utmost importance that action should be taken to-day in reference to his message just delivered. I wish to ask each Member of the House to remain here until the resolution can be passed through the House at a later hour this afternoon. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, by inserting, after the word "unsurveyed," in line 5, the words "unreserved unappropriated public."

The SPEAKER. The Chair neglected to inquire of the House if there is objection to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object. I would like to hear the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the law now provides that any entryman seeking a home on public land may initiate the right on unsurveyed land with equal force that he can upon surveyed lands. As the law now stands there is no provision whereby an entryman on unsurveyed land may have the usual leave of absence accorded settlers by law on surveyed lands. This bill merely gives to the settler on unsurveyed land the same right that a settler has on land that has been surveyed. The department drew the bill. It is a good bill. The settlers need it. It will help them retain their homes. It will do common justice. It is only treating these settlers as other settlers are treated. I do much hope no objection will be made. The department recommends its passage, and says there can be no earthly reason why the settler on unsurveyed land should not have the same right as a settler on surveyed land. The bill does that and nothing more.

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I see no objection to the bill, providing you do not enlarge the opportunities for homestead settlement by the law; and I would suggest that if the bill is considered it ought to be amended, after the word "States," on the first page, line 6, by inserting the words "subject to homestead settlement."

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think that the language in line 5, where we specifically say, "unreserved unappropriated public lands," would exclude all forest reserves and all reservations of the United States of any sort?

Mr. MONDELL. It would not exclude mineral lands that have not been reserved. There are many mineral lands that have not been reserved. The language "subject to homestead settlement" is language quite frequently used in the land laws, and it has the same application with regard to unsurveyed lands as the words "subject to homestead entry" would have if the land were surveyed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The committee has proposed to amend by inserting in line 5 the words "unreserved unappropriated public." Suppose that amendment were not inserted in the bill at all. What would the effect of the bill be?

Mr. FERRIS. The committee is of opinion that that had to be put in so that it would not apply to any particular reservation, whether forest or otherwise.

Mr. MANN. Would it apply if that language were not included?

Mr. FERRIS. We were afraid it would. For that reason we put in that language.

Mr. MANN. In that case the department that prepared the bill was not very careful, I take it.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, I take it that the department is like the rest of us, human, and sometimes errs, as we all do.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but we are talking about this case now.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. A bill is sent here, after having been prepared by the department—a bill which we are asked to pass—that would have authorized anyone to locate anywhere on any forest reservation in the United States that had not been surveyed and acquire a good title to it. That is a pretty bill for the department to prepare. I do not know how many other foolish things there may be in the bill, but I am afraid they have not all been corrected yet by our distinguished Committee on Public Lands. When the department can prepare a bill like that, they had better hire somebody who knows something about the land laws.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is a little drastic on the department, I think. The department makes mistakes, and so do we, and we are very glad to have the aid of the gentleman from Illinois in straightening us out. My experience is that present departments, as well as preceding departments, have always been honest, always patriotic, and always striving to do their full duty. I think they are doing their full duty, and I doubt if it is wise to be too drastic on account of an omission, if it is an omission, by well-meaning persons.

Mr. MANN. I do not profess to be very well posted on the public-land laws.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Does the gentleman include in his indictment of inefficiency the United States Senate in his remarks on this bill?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have frequently remarked that the Senate will pass anything. [Laughter.] These bills pass the Senate without any consideration at all. They do not even receive any consideration over there in committee. Some clerk calls up the members of the committee by telephone and asks leave to have a man say that the bill may be reported; and without knowing anything about it they authorize a report, and call it up and pass it without anybody in the Senate knowing anything about it, simply because some particular department prepared it; and we are asked to pass it here.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. Why should not the Senate pass a bill that has the approval of the White House?

Mr. MANN. I do not think this has the approval of the White House.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has no objection to the amendment I suggested?

Mr. FERRIS. No. If the committee had any thought that it would be construed to permit the homesteading of public lands not subject to homestead settlement we would be willing to accept the gentleman's amendment. But we put in the words, "unreserved unappropriated public land," in line 5, in order to cure that defect. We thought that would do it. We are not vain and always willing to improve our bills. We are all of one mind; we are only debating words.

Mr. MONDELL. That might include all the mineral land in the country that did not happen for the time being to be reserved.

Mr. FERRIS. The mineral lands are not subject to entry. Most of them are withdrawn anyway, I think. Mr. Speaker, is there objection to the consideration of Senate bill 2316? We have not passed that stage yet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

PUBLIC ROADS ON CERTAIN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9899) to authorize the laying out and opening of public roads on the Winnebago, Omaha, and Santee Sioux Indian Reservations in Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the legal road authorities, charged with the duty of laying out and opening public roads and highways under the laws of the State of Nebraska, having jurisdiction over any territory embraced within the Winnebago Indian Reservation, the Omaha Indian Reservation, and the Santee Sioux Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, are hereby authorized and empowered to lay out and open public roads within any of the said Indian reservations in conformity to and in accordance with the laws of the State of Nebraska relating to the laying out and opening of public roads, and that any public road when so laid out and opened shall be deemed a legal road.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Amend the bill by inserting after the word "Reservation," in line 7, page 1, the words "the Ponca Indian Reservation."

Page 2, line 4, after the word "road," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following proviso:

"Provided, That such road authorities shall, in addition to notifying the landowners as provided in the State laws, likewise serve notice upon the superintendent in charge of the restricted Indian lands upon which it is proposed to lay out a public road, and shall also furnish him with a map drawn on tracing linen, showing the definite location and width of such proposed road."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if he would be willing to have added to the committee amendment at the end of it the words: "And no such road shall be laid out until after it has received the approval of such superintendent."

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I think that would practically destroy the effect of the bill. The present laws provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall approve the opening of the roads, and the rule of the Interior Department is that no roads may be opened unless all the landowners approve; and there being sometimes as many as 8 or 10 heirs to a single piece of land, it makes it impossible for the people there to get roads established, and the superintendent might be induced to disapprove of the opening of a road, and therefore destroy the object of this bill. It is too much authority to put into the hands of one man.

Mr. MANN. If the superintendent is opposed to the opening of the road, why should the road be opened? The superintendent is representing the Government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The situation is this: About one-third of the lands on these reservations are owned by white people, and those are the only lands on the reservation that are taxable. It is impossible now to have roads even on section lines. Now, if these roads are opened under the provisions of this bill, they will be opened under the laws of the State of Nebraska, which will protect the rights of these Indians. They will be opened only after the board of supervisors has inspected the route of the road and approved of it and appointed a board to appraise the damages and pay for the land belonging to the Indians that is taken for the road purposes. The roads cost the Indians nothing and are paid for the people who have land that is taxable.

Mr. MANN. The superintendent can take all that into consideration; but he is representing the Government, which is endeavoring to protect the Indians. Why should he not determine whether the road ought to be laid out or not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. He would not be any more competent to do that than the board of supervisors that represents the people who own the land.

Mr. MANN. They do not represent the Indians, and he does.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes; they do represent the Indians. These Indians are citizens of the United States, but they do not pay taxes on their lands. The board of supervisors represent them exactly the same as it would any other taxpayers. There is not a thing in this bill that could possibly injure the Indian. His rights are safeguarded in every particular under the law. They can not take 1 acre of his land without compensation.

Mr. MANN. I can not see where his rights are safeguarded at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. It is impossible for them to take a single acre of his land without it being appraised and paid for by the county.

Mr. MANN. That does not always follow.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. And the law provides that the roads shall be laid out along section lines.

Mr. MANN. It does not always follow that the Indians will be paid for their lands. The appraisers might practically take their property away from them. If they need the road, why should not the superintendent O. K. the need of the road?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I think it would be all right, provided he did O. K. it; but if he did not approve it——

Mr. MANN. If he did not approve it, there must be some reason for his not approving it. I am not willing to have passed by unanimous consent a bill which the gentleman says will take the land of the Indians for a road when the man in charge of the Indians thinks it ought not to be constructed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will say to the gentleman that no one's land can be taken without the approval of the county board of supervisors, and they in turn appoint a board of appraisers to appraise the land, and the Indian is paid its full value.

Now, the question is whether all the people there are to be forever discommoded without roads, simply because some superintendent, who is usually a very impractical man, may oppose the road.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. These are allotted lands, are they?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. They are allotted lands.

Mr. MONDELL. They are held under trust patents?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. They are held under trust patents.

Mr. MONDELL. Therefore, even though an Indian might desire the road, and even though the superintendent or agent might be agreeable to the opening of the road, is there any way, without legislation, whereby a county road could be dedicated and provided for?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. There is absolutely no way practicable in which that can be done. Now, the fact is we have been operating under the rules of the Secretary of the Interior, and under those rules we have not been able to lay out but a few roads across the Indian reservation in that whole county.

Mr. MONDELL. You are not able to dedicate any of this land for road purposes, even though the individual Indian owning the land might desire to do it, because he is holding his land under a trust patent. Is not that the situation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is absolutely the situation.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, you must have legislation in order to enable the Indians to dispose of the land that may be required for roads.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is exactly true.

Mr. MONDELL. This Indian reservation lies right in a highly developed, rich farming section?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. That is true.

Mr. MONDELL. And these roads are necessary for the Indians as well as for the white people?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Absolutely.

Mr. MONDELL. And this legislation is to enable the Indian to dispose of his land?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. For road purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. Or for the county to condemn it, as they would condemn the land of a white man?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Exactly. He is placed exactly on the footing of a white man, and there can not possibly be any injury to the Indian. Furthermore, the Indians want this bill passed. They have indorsed it heartily, and have requested me to secure its passage so that they may get roads for their lands. At the present time any Indian who has a mind to do it can shut up a road, and the people can not get to their homes. There are very few roads across this Indian reservation that are legal roads.

Mr. MANN. Did the Indians approve this bill before or after it was amended by the committee?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. Did the Indians favor the original bill, or the amended bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The Indians did not see the amendments at all. I have no objections to the amendments. Of course I will accept the gentleman's amendment if he insists upon it, but I really think it would be a great detriment and injury to these people.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how it can be any detriment to these people.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. As a rule, the superintendents are not practical men and do not understand these problems very well, and you can not get a practical decision on that account.

Mr. MANN. I have heard statements made many times that the Indian superintendents were not practical men, but I am surprised to hear it from the gentleman from Nebraska, because usually those statements come from some one whom the Indian agent would not allow to rob his wards. I do not think that is the case of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I am glad that the gentleman does not think so, because that is not the case.

Mr. MANN. But I think the superintendent representing the Indians ought to have a veto power on laying out a road through the reservation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. If the gentleman insists on that, I will ask him to offer the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Is not that satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will have to accept it, but it is not satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to be put in that attitude.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I will accept it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had better let it go over. I do not want to compel any Member to accept an amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I think it will weaken the bill, but I will accept it because I would like to see the bill pass now. I feel that it would greatly injure the practical working of the law if the superintendent is always meddling in it.

Mr. MANN. This provides that they shall file with the superintendent a copy or map. Now, I do not see how it hurts the bill by having him approve it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. The board of supervisors and the commissioners who appraise the land ought to be sufficient guaranty that the rights of the Indians will be protected.

Mr. MANN. I do not have much confidence in the white settlers protecting the rights of the Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT HARRISBURG, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14242) to increase the limit of cost for the erection and completion of the United States Federal building at Harrisburg, Pa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision in section 2 of the public building act of June 25, 1910, for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the post office and courthouse at Harrisburg, Pa., be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to increase by $75,000 the limit of cost fixed by this act for said work; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into contracts for the completion of said enlargement, extension, remodeling, and improvement of said building within said limit of cost as hereby extended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAYTON. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief and as plain as I can. The Federal building at Harrisburg is entirely inadequate in which to transact the present Government activities. In 1910 there was authorized an extension to the building, and $125,000 was appropriated. It was then intended that the building should be enlarged by the addition of a wing, consisting of three floors, to the building. This building houses not only the post office but also the weather bureau of the Agriculture Department, the Federal court, the deputy internal-revenue collector, and in it are located chief inspectors' offices of two divisions of the Railway Mail Service.

When the Supervising Architect's Department drew the plans for the building and bids were called for, it was found that the funds available were not sufficient, and two stories were cut off. The contract was let. It is for the purpose of supplying sufficient funds to make the building complete; that is, to add these two stories, as they ought to be and as it was first intended they should be, that this additional money is now being asked for.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has adopted a rule that at this session of Congress only emergency cases shall be considered. This addition is now in course of construction, and the plans provide for an addition only one story high. It is in process of erection, and it will certainly cost the Government anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000 more by allowing it to be built under the present contract and afterwards in another contract provide for the space absolutely necessary, which must be provided. We should now build it as it was originally intended that it should be built and provide now while the building is in course of construction for the necessary space required and erect an addition that will be a credit to the building, to the city of Harrisburg as well as the Government of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement that may clear up some misunderstanding. The committee does not undertake at this session to report any omnibus bill. We are simply considering these matters that are matters of emergency—cases like this, where the building is in course of construction, and where more money is needed to finish it. Cases of that character are the only ones we are considering.

When gentlemen come before the committee with a case of that character and submit all the facts and the department requests it, the committee is reporting that class of bills and no others. We expect at some time to have a general bill, but we are not reporting ordinary bills at this time.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it has been true since the present chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has occupied the position, but I think it was true in some former cases that Senate bills passed the Senate and then came over here and passed here, whereas those of us who could not be the recipients of such favoritism had to wait until the omnibus public building bill could be passed. Now, the present chairman of the committee, I understand, says that no such bills have been passed and no such favoritism has been shown as that since he has been chairman.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not at all.

Mr. CLAYTON. And that the present bill is an emergency measure to carry on the construction of a building now in process of construction.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; an enlargement of the building.

Mr. CLAYTON. And that it would be an interruption of the work and expensive to the Government if this measure did not pass at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It certainly will.

Mr. CLAYTON. Under that statement, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SHOSHONE INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14869) authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Shoshone Tribe of Indians residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming may have or claim to have against the United States under the treaty between the United States and said Shoshone Tribe, ratified February 26, 1869, or under any other laws or treaties, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the rights of said Shoshone Tribe in and to said reservation and the proceeds and profits therefrom, and for determination of the amounts, if any, of the funds of said Shoshone Tribe which have been wrongfully paid by the United States to the Arapahoe Tribe of Indians residing on said reservation, and for determination of the amounts, if any, due to said Shoshone Tribe from the United States for their being deprived of the use and occupancy of said reservation; and for determination of the amounts, if any, due to said Shoshone Tribe from the United States for portions of said reservation, if any, which have been appropriated by the United States for said Arapahoe Tribe or individual members thereof; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Shoshone Tribe against the United States arising out of said treaty, and also any legal or equitable defense, set-off, or counterclaim which the United States may have against said Shoshone Tribe, and to enter judgment, and in determining the amount of judgment to be entered herein the court shall deduct from any sums found due said Shoshone Indians any and all gratuities paid said Shoshone Indians, or individual members thereof, subsequent to 1877. The Court of Claims shall advance said cause upon the docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge the rights, both legal and equitable, of said Shoshone Tribe arising out of said treaty, and all rights and equities of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and the final judgment and satisfaction thereof shall be a full settlement of all claims of said Shoshone Tribe against the United States. Such cause shall be commenced within one year after the passage of this act, and in such cause the said Shoshone Tribe shall be party plaintiff and the United States shall be party defendant; and the petition setting forth the cause of said Shoshone Tribe shall be verified by the attorneys employed by said Shoshone Tribe to prosecute their claims under this act under contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as provided by law, upon information and belief as to the facts alleged therein, and no other verification to said petition shall be necessary. The Attorney General of the United States is hereby directed to appear in said cause in behalf of the United States. Upon the final determination of said cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find reasonable to be paid to the attorneys employed by said Shoshone Tribe, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due to said Shoshone Tribe, or out of any sum or sums which may be placed to the credit of said Shoshone Tribe as a result of said cause: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court be in excess of the amount stipulated in the approved contract nor amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount and value of the judgment recovered in said cause: Provided further, That all sums of money which may be found to be due and recovered for the Shoshone Tribe of Indians under the provisions of this act, less attorneys' fees, shall be deposited to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States, which sum shall thereafter draw interest at 3 per cent per annum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give the House any idea as to the amount that may possibly be recovered by the tribe of Shoshone Indians in case the Arapahoes had no right to settle on their lands back in 1868?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, I do not believe that the possible amount of recovery under this bill could be more than $250,000. I have made some very careful figures in regard to the matter as to the expenditures made by the United States on behalf of these Indians. I will say frankly, however, that there are other members of the committee who do not agree with me in regard to that, and who think it might possibly run more than a half million dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the bill, it authorizes the Court of Claims to take jurisdiction to determine the amount that might possibly be owing the Shoshone Indians by reason of the Arapahoes having been given the right back in 1868 to settle on their lands.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; for the violation of that treaty.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department has in times past claimed that the Shoshones, under the treaty, tacitly approved of the location of the Arapahoes on this tract of land, and that they are barred from making any claim for the use and occupation of the land.

Mr. HAYDEN. That was at one time the contention of the department, but it is no longer the opinion of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. How recently is it that some attorney or some other person representing the Shoshones conceived the idea that this matter which was so long dead should be resurrected and revived and placed in litigation in the Court of Claims?

Mr. HAYDEN. I can not speak beyond my own service here. This matter has been up in this Congress and in the last Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. And prior to the last Congress?

Mr. HAYDEN. I could not tell.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman who introduced the bill give the information as to why this matter has been revived after so many years of sleeping?

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, in 1886 the Shoshones made their first real objection, and bills have been introduced in previous Congresses—in the House and in the Senate—by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and by the Senator from Minnesota. These Arapahoes came on this property, moved there by the military force, in 1877. The gentleman, I presume, understands the history of this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the report carefully.

Mr. LOBECK. I have a map here which I shall be very glad to show to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. From the report made on the bill the gentleman from Wisconsin will find on page 4 that the Shoshones objected to the placing of the Arapahoes on this reservation at the time they were placed on the reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not find any such memorandum in the report.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman will find that stated. These Indians were placed on this reservation in the winter of 1877–78.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly direct my attention to the phraseology wherein I can find any express objection on the part of the Shoshones to the Arapahoes being placed on this reservation?

Mr. MONDELL. I read from page 4:

In his report of February 21, 1878, James I. Patten, United States Indian agent, Shoshone and Bannock Agency, Wyo., said, in referring to the proposed removal of the Arapahoes to the reservation, that there was a large majority of the tribe, including Washakie, the chief, and nearly all of the leading men, who strongly objected to their coming and to dividing the reservation with any other tribe.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read that, but it does not state that there might not have been tacit approval on the part of the Shoshones.

Mr. MONDELL. Washakie was the chief of the Shoshones, and he protested on behalf of the tribe at the time the Arapahoes were placed on the reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reading right on from where the gentleman left off I will direct his attention to the following language:

That the Shoshones did agree and were at that time willing to make peace with the Arapahoes, but wanted them placed on a reservation apart, giving as their reason that the reservation at that time was none too large for the use of the Shoshones.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. That is, they had no objection to making peace with this tribe. The gentleman will recall that the Shoshones, from time immemorial, have been friends of the white man. No Shoshone has ever fought our Government or our people. On the other hand, the Arapahoes in former times were constantly at war with the Government and with the settlers on the frontier. These two tribes are very dissimilar in characteristics, and they were known enemies. There were many of the Shoshones who objected to having the Arapahoes brought anywhere near their neighborhood. The chief, Washakie, a very fine old man, and a splendid example of the Indian chief, said that they had no special grievance against the Arapahoes which they might not forget, but they did not want them placed on the reservation. I suppose the placing of the Arapahoes in some other part of the State would not have been objectionable.

Mr. STAFFORD. But they were placed on the reservation and they made no objection——

Mr. LOBECK. Oh, yes; they did.

Mr. STAFFORD. For years and years.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the statement in the report of one of the Indian commissioners.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no. I have just read the protest against their being placed there.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs later stated they tacitly approved of it.

Mr. MONDELL. I will state to the gentleman that I have lived in Wyoming since 1887. I have been familiar with the situation on that reservation since 1887. During that period there has never been a time that the Shoshones have not objected to dividing their reservation with the Arapahoes. The two tribes have gotten along fairly well of late years, but there has been a constant objection on the part of the Shoshones to dividing their reservation with the Arapahoes.

Mr. MILLER. May I be permitted to say also on that point, when the Arapahoes were brought there they were brought in the fall of 1877 and the Shoshones were distinctly told that it was not contemplated that the Arapahoes should be kept there longer than until the next spring, and specifically it was asked that they permit them to stay there during the winter, during which time the United States would provide a reservation elsewhere and a home, and therefore on that account they did not seriously object to their going there.

Mr. STAFFORD. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to this language:

The department has considered that the Arapahoes had equal rights with the Shoshones to the lands on the reservation, assuming that the Shoshones had impliedly consented to the Arapahoes being located on the reservation in accordance with article 2 of the treaty of July 3, 1868, supra, by acquiescing in the arrangement.

What is the treaty? The treaty gave the right to the United States to locate other tribes of Indians on the reservation with the approval of the Shoshones. Now, if the Shoshones have by tacit agreement approved the location of the Arapahoes, they have lost their rights.

Mr. MILLER. But they did not approve of it either by a majority or a minority.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the time this matter was in question?

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely, they did not approve it.

Mr. CARTER. Exactly what we wanted to go to the Court of Claims for.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1877 said:

In accordance with their earnest request, made to the President during the recent visit of the delegation to this city, permission was given the Northern Arapahoes to join the Shoshones on the Wind River Reserve in Wyoming. In a formal council held last month by Agent Irwin with the Shoshones their consent to the arrangement desired by the Arapahoes was obtained, and the removal of the latter is now in progress.

Of course, it is easy to say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in making the report was talking through his hat. It may be true; I do not know; but here is the formal report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at the time this matter was alive, in which he stated that they were bringing the Arapahoes into the Shoshone Reservation after a formal council with the Shoshones and with their consent.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman find any record of any written consent of that kind?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I have not found any, because I have not gone to the record.

Mr. MILLER. I will simply add the consent to which reference is made is the consent that the Arapahoes stay there for a few months until another place could be found for them.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will refer to the report of Agent Patten, he will see that the Shoshones objected to the Arapahoes being placed there.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I see that after the Arapahoes were placed in the Shoshone Reservation that Agent Patten reports that they ought not to have been put there. I think there is a good deal of force when the statement of that side of the case appears to be that, so far as we know, there is no record evidence of the truth or correctness of a statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1877. But I would like to ask some one who knows, How much is this property worth which is now involved or which we are engaging to pay the Indians?

Mr. LOBECK. The entire property at the present time is about 600,000 acres, of which about 100,000 acres have been allotted, and the Arapahoes are allotted three-fourths of that amount. Taking that portion of the land which is suitable for irrigation purposes, the balance of the land is mountainous and is used for pasture, and the Arapahoes and the Shoshones use it together.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the Arapahoes have been allotted 450,000 acres of land?

Mr. LOBECK. There have been about 100,000 acres of land allotted, of which the Arapahoes have received three-fourths.

Mr. MANN. That is, 75,000 acres that is irrigable land?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes; that is all irrigable land.

Mr. MANN. What is that irrigable land worth?

Mr. LOBECK. It is difficult to state what it is worth.

Mr. MANN. Well, what has it been estimated to be worth? You are going to the Court of Claims about it.

Mr. LOBECK. It is worth in the neighborhood of $5 or $6 an acre.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is worth a good deal more than that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, any irrigable land on that reservation is worth more than the sum the gentleman stated, but any recovery under these proceedings should be based on the present value of this land.

Mr. CARTER. The bill limits the recovery to the value at the time of the taking.

Mr. LOBECK. Probably if the gentleman will listen for about two minutes to the story of how these Arapahoes got on this land I can show him on this map.

Mr. MANN. I have listened to this several times before, but I am prepared to do so again.

Mr. LOBECK. Originally the Shoshones had this big tract of land, occupying a portion of it in Colorado and Wyoming. When the Union Pacific was being built through their original country the Government moved them to a small reservation of about 600,000 acres by the treaty of 1868.

In 1877 the Arapahoes had been in war with the United States and were prisoners of war at Fort Robinson, Nebr. The military were to move them either to Oklahoma on the south or into Wyoming, if to Wyoming the idea being to move them at the junction of the Sweet Water River and the North Platte River. Under direction of Col. McKenzie they were moved over to the present Shoshone Reservation and were to be kept there under an agreement with the Shoshones for one winter, because they had agency stores and places to take care of them, and did not have them at the junction of the Sweet Water with the North Platte Rivers. They have never been taken away from there. The treaty made in 1868 provided that no Indians could be moved onto that land unless by the written consent and the signatures of the majority of the Shoshones. Agent Irwin was sent out there from New York in the fall of 1877 to make peace with Chief Washakie in order to allow them to stay there. He made that trip from New York and return to Cheyenne in 13 days, and taking the time that it took in those days to travel from New York to Cheyenne and to Fort Washakie and back, I do not see how he could do it. But he reported that he made peace. In a later letter, February 1, 1878, it was said the Arapahoes should not live there for all time. These Indians have lived there for a long time. There is a confluence of small rivers which makes the Big Horn River, and the Arapahoes were located on the eastern part of the reservation. That is mostly irrigable land. The upper portion here is mountainous land, and the Arapahoes and the Shoshones have had joint usage of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House as to how much land the Arapahoes have actually occupied to which they permitted the Shoshones to have a claim for compensation?

Mr. LOBECK. They have allotted something over 75,000 acres, and then they have jointly used with the Shoshones the mountain and pasture land, or on the upper portions of the reservations toward the mountains.

Now, the idea is to bring this matter to the Court of Claims for an adjustment, because moneys have been allowed to the Arapahoes that belong to the Shoshones. A small portion of land was sold surrounding Big Horn hot springs—up here [pointing to the map]—and a small tract at Lander, Wyo. And whatever gratuities have been given to the Shoshones since that time—1877—shall be deducted. What we ask is to have this matter brought before the Court of Claims to decide whether the Shoshones have a right to a claim or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House as to the provision for attorneys' fees? I notice there is quite a liberal provision made here for that. It is 10 per cent of the amount recovered. If it is $500,000, the attorney's fee would be $50,000. Can the gentleman inform the House as to whether that 10 per cent would be regarded as exorbitant, and also as to whether the Shoshone Indians have taken any formal action for employing attorneys and prosecuting these claims?

Mr. LOBECK. They have only done so in so far as the Shoshones have signed an agreement with a Nebraska firm to present their case. The court is to decide the amount, but it is not to exceed 10 per cent. The legal firm paying all expenses of litigation, which was not thought to be exorbitant, and the department agreed to that. This bill has the approval of the department.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOBECK. I will.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the gentleman give any estimate as to what that amount will be? I have not examined the report. What will the 10 per cent amount to?

Mr. LOBECK. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] stated a while ago that he thought possibly the Shoshones might have a $250,000 claim. I do not think it is going to be exorbitant, and if it should be a very large amount I do not think the court would allow it. It can not be more than 10 per cent.

Mr. WILLIS. And it can be less than 10 per cent?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. And under your estimate it can not be less than $25,000?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman in explaining the bill said that this amount might be $500,000.

Mr. LOBECK. There is no telling what it might be.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be 10 per cent of the amount recovered by these attorneys. I will say that the law permits, and has always provided, that the tribes of Indians could employ an attorney if the terms of the contract for payment were approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and you will see that this provides for that very thing on page 3.

Mr. STAFFORD. In that provision you provide not only for paying the attorneys out of any funds that may be recovered in said case, but you also provide for all sums of money which may be found to be due and recovered for the Shoshone Tribe of Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That applies only to the judgment recovered.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will read:

> Upon the final determination of said cause the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as the court shall find reasonable to be paid to the attorneys employed by the said Shoshone Tribe, and the same shall be paid out of any sum or sums found due to said Shoshone Tribe, or out of any sum or sums which may be placed to the credit of said Shoshone Tribe as the result of said cause.

Mr. LOBECK. Read further.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The amount recovered actually by the judgment, and they are not paid any amount that may be in the tribal fund.

Mr. LOBECK. Read the next paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I submit to the chairman of the committee whether he does not think that we should protect the interests of the Government in view of this very questionable case, and that there should be some limit as to the amount that the Government may be required to pay for the use of this land, or whether we should leave it to the discretion of the Court of Claims without limitation to find any reasonable value for this land that has been used these many years, all arising, perhaps, from the activity of some claim agent who perceived there was some basis for litigation and who gets active and desires the Shoshones to get some reparation from the Government?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It must be 25 per cent of the amount recovered from the court of appeals.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is mistaken. It is 10 per cent.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Ten per cent, I mean, and not to exceed that amount, under the contract heretofore made with the Indians and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. That contract is binding, and whether or not we put it into the bill these men could recover. It is a contract between the Indians and the Government on one side and the attorneys on the other side, and this gives them not to exceed 10 per cent. That was for the purpose of protecting the Indians and for the purpose of protecting the Government. The judgment could give them only 5 per cent, if it is a large amount; and possibly they will do that, and they will take into consideration the amount, and the amount of service performed. As a matter of fact, these attorneys have to come a long way for these matters and pay their own expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman, as a conservator of the Government, believe that we should submit to the Court of Claims, without any reservation whatever, the determination of the value of the use of that land in all these years in this questionable transaction?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will answer that question by asking one. Is not that the way matters of that kind are settled in courts of chancery and in courts of equity?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a question whether the Shoshones have any valid claim whatsoever, and now you are directing the Court of Claims to find the value of this stale claim, which may amount to half a million dollars or a million dollars. I say we should try to protect the interests of the Government and place some limitation on the amount that may be recovered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] a question. I see there are no amendments to this bill as reported. Did the committee consider this bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The committee considered it and reported it favorably.

Mr. MANN. Did it provide any amendments to it?

Mr. LOBECK. It was an original bill, and the committee made some amendments to that, and this is a new bill to take the place of the bill as amended. It was considered by a subcommittee thoroughly.

Mr. MANN. Can anyone give me any information as to the amount involved here?

Mr. LOBECK. That depends on what is meant by the "amount involved."

Mr. MANN. I have asked that question repeatedly and have not received an answer. I am not willing to pass, by unanimous consent, a claims bill like this without consideration, when nobody knows how much is involved, whether it is $500,000 or $5,000,000 or $15,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object. Somebody has asked for the regular order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, from the statements of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] and of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], I understood that there were about 400,000 or 500,000 acres of land in controversy. The aggregate amount involved would, of course, depend upon the value of this land, and on that, as the gentleman knows, one man might place a very high valuation and another man might place a very low one, so that I do not see how we could determine, even in an approximate manner, what value the court might give to it. At any rate, I would not like to hazard a guess on this important matter, which the courts might eventually pass upon.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think there should be some information as to the value. We certainly have nobody to tell what is the value of the use and occupancy for 50 years or so, or whether the land now is worth $5, or $10, or $50, or $100 an acre. It seems to me we ought not to pass the bill, because, so far as I can see, the Indians have no legal rights here. If you were confining the Indians to their legal rights, the amount involved would not make any difference. But you do not confine them to their legal rights, and then you say you do not know how much it is worth.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. You took their farms. The Government put those Arapahoe Indians there and took their homes away from them. Now, you say they have no claims here and no legal rights. Is the gentleman from Illinois just in making such a statement? You have taken their lands without their consent and placed them there, and now you say they have no rights.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, that is what they always say when the Indians are trying to rob the Government. But since I have been here I have never known a case where the Government beat the Indians, and I know a great many cases where the Government did pay a lot of old claims of Indians where I thought there was no justice or equity in them. I think we ought to know before we pass a claim of this sort something of what is involved in it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I will yield to anybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman realizes that it is utterly impossible in a case of this kind to determine in advance just what the amount of the judgment might be.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] did say what it might be. He said it might be $250,000.

Mr. MONDELL. It might not be anything, and then again it might be a very considerable sum. I do not know how anyone could say what it will be.

This is the situation: There are about 825 or 830 Arapahoes who have been given, or will be given, land in severalty on this reservation which the Shoshones claim. Under this bill if the court held that the Shoshones were entitled to those lands, they would be entitled to recover for the lands which the Arapahoes occupy and receive, because, of course, those lands will not be taken away from them. They will recover whatever the Arapahoes have received as their proportion of the sum received from the sale of the ceded portion of the reservation.

Now, no one can tell in advance how much that will be. If the claim of the Shoshones is valid that the Government had no right to give the Arapahoes a part of this reservation, then it is a question of giving them an opportunity to prove how much is due them from the Government. The gentleman would hardly say in giving a man an opportunity for his day in court, "I will not do it unless I know how much he may be able to recover."

Mr. WILLIS. I had definite information. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] said it would be $250,000. What more do you want? The gentleman ought to be satisfied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] a question? Do I understand that this bill is in the form in which it was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. MILLER. That is rather an embarrassing question. It is my recollection that we made two amendments to the bill, as it passed the committee, which do not seem to be in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A new bill was reintroduced with all the amendments embodied in it. This bill is in the form in which it passed the committee.

Mr. MILLER. The committee are strongly of the opinion that a bill in substantially this form ought to pass.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the chairman of the committee ought to ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over for two weeks, to see if we can not obtain some limitation as to the amount that can be recovered for the use of the land, and also some limitation on the amount of attorneys' fees.

Mr. WILLIS. There has been a good deal of question about attorneys' fees. I want to suggest that in line 2, page 4, you insert an amendment that shall read:

Provided that in no case shall the fees decreed by said court exceed $25,000, nor be in excess of the amount stipulated—

And so forth. That would limit the fees. It seems to me there ought to be some such amendment; because from the statements made here, the attorneys' fees might amount to $100,000.

Mr. MILLER. They would not be as much as that.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the suggestions here, will not the chairman of the committee or the author of the bill ask unanimous consent that it be passed over for two weeks.

Mr. LOBECK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CADDO COUNTY AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL FAIR ASSOCIATION, OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9829) granting the Caddo County Agricultural and Mechanical Fair Association of Oklahoma the right to purchase a tract of unused remnant ceded lands for fairground and park purposes.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read in lieu of the original bill. The entire bill has been stricken out and a substitute reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to sell to the Board of County Commissioners of Caddo County, Okla., at the price of $1.25 per acre, a parcel of land, or any part thereof, being that portion of the southwest quarter of section 14, in township 7, north of range 10, west of the Indian meridian, Oklahoma, lying south of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, containing 111.40 acres more or less: Provided, That said association shall, within 90 days from approval hereof, apply to purchase under this act, and that the sale shall be upon the express conditions that if the land be not used for park or fairground purposes within one year from date of conveyance to said association, or shall at any time thereafter cease to be so used, the title thereto shall revert to the United States upon the fact of such nonuse being ascertained and declared by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I understand that this land, which this bill seeks to vest in the county commissioners of Caddo County, adjoins the county seat?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. At one end it does.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been reserved from settlement by the department?

Mr. FERRIS. It never has been subject to entry in any form. The land was ceded to the Government of the United States in 1900 at $1 an acre.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that the price carried in this bill, $1.25 an acre, is much below the market value of the land.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true, but the land reverts if at any time it is not used for these public purposes. It has never been used for any purpose, and this bill proposes to give the Government 25 cents an acre more than it paid for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. To whom will it revert?

Mr. FERRIS. To the Government of the United States. All that is necessary is for the Government of the United States to declare the nonuse.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is, in case it is not used hereafter for the purposes intended, it will revert.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any fear that it will ever revert after it is given to these commissioners for this purpose?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman knows that fair-ground propositions sometimes play out and do not make a go of it. In that event it might come back, and if that should happen the Secretary of the Interior would take it back.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the market value of this land?

Mr. FERRIS. I should say from $25 or $30 to $40 an acre, perhaps. The land has never been used for any purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. FERRIS. There is an amendment to the title.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain unused remnant lands to the Board of County Commissioners of Caddo County, Okla., for fairground and park purposes."

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. A few minutes ago the House passed the bill (S. 3403) to abolish the office of receiver of public moneys at Springfield, Mo., and for other purposes. Since then it has been found that a proviso which should have been printed as a part of section 2 was printed as a part of section 1. I ask the Speaker what is the proper parliamentary course to pursue to correct the error?

The SPEAKER. The right request to make is to vacate all the proceedings back to the amendment stage of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The SPEAKER. Back to the amendment stage. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings by which Senate bill 3403 was passed back to the amendment stage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proviso attached to section 1 as it is printed in the House bill remain as an amendment adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, after the word "regulation," insert the following: "Provided, That all the fees and commissions now allowed by law to both such register and such receiver shall, 10 days after the passage and approval of this act, be paid to and accounted for by such register in the same manner and in like amounts in which they are now required to be paid to and accounted for by such receiver, but the salary, fees, and commissions of such register shall not exceed $3,000 per annum."

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. FERRIS. My request is that the amendment be considered and passed precisely as it was in the bill. The printing clerk printed the proviso to section 1, whereas it should have been to section 2. The enrolling clerk says that they can not engross it because it does not show that the amendment has been passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

POSTAGE ON SEEDS, CUTTINGS, AND BULBS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 4980, an act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1914.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants shall hereafter be embraced in and carried as fourth-class matter and for the same rates of postage: Provided, That all packages thereof containing 8 ounces or less shall be charged for at the rate of 1 cent for 2 ounces or fraction thereof: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, by order, fix the time within which all parcels of the fourth class shall be delivered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, when this bill was before the committee the chairman of the committee was unavoidably absent, and there were some Members who did not believe there should be any discrimination in sending seeds through the mail, between that and other merchandise. Since the bill has been reported it has occurred to me that this question of singling out seeds for special rates is subject to severe criticism, and I have had in mind for a long time the disparity that exists in the present parcel-post rates on merchandise. For instance, the law charges 1 cent an ounce up to 4 ounces. If a package weighs more than 4 ounces and up to 1 pound it is charged the 1-pound rate. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he does not think it advisable that there should be some zone system of charges applying to packages less than 1 pound in weight? The present zone charges apply to a pound and over, and there are the weights between 4 ounces and 16 ounces which bear the same rate as for packages weighing a pound. If we should pass this bill there might be considerable difficulty in ever having a uniform parcel-post rate extended to all packets under the 1-pound limit.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, in reply to my friend from Wisconsin I will say that under section 428 of the postal laws and regulations seeds, scions, bulbs, and matters of that sort were carried through the mails heretofore at 1 cent for 2 ounces. When the postal act of 1912 was passed there was an express provision in that act that it should not apply to seeds, bulbs, and so on, as provided for in this section. In other words, seeds, bulbs, and products of the farm of that character were excepted from the operation of the parcel-post law. While it applied to all products of the factory and farm, it did not by that special provision apply to seeds, bulbs, and so forth. In the recent postal law there was an amendment placed on the bill by the Senate, in which the House concurred, that placed this character of farm products under the provisions of the parcel-post law. The effect of that was to give seeds, bulbs, and scions a double rate. In other words, we had not bettered, but made worse, the conditions.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there can be no question whatever as to the parcel-post rates on packages weighing 1 pound and over that it was a distinct advantage to seedsman because the rate was lower than the former rate of 8 cents a pound.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman will realize that matter of this sort is carried generally in parcels weighing from 1 to 4 ounces. Above 4 ounces you have doubled the rate by the section on the subject in the last bill. Now, when that is done you have doubled the cost of postage. This act is to have the effect of restoring the old law as to packages under 8 ounces. That is, it is 1 cent for every 2 ounces up to 8 ounces, and above that it takes the parcel-post pound rate. I think there ought to be no objection to this measure.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not answer my query whether he does not believe there was a wide difference between the rates of 4 ounces and 16 ounces by the parcel-post rates. I have no objection to placing a low rate on the smaller packages for seeds and other parcels of merchandise under 1 pound.

But here under the parcel-post arrangement you have a 4-cent rate for 4 ounces, and above 4 ounces you jump to the pound rate. Should not that same rate be applicable to smaller-weighted packages?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, possibly that is true. This bill, however, on the part of the Senate provides only for a rate up to 8 ounces, and I will say to the gentleman that practically all the seeds carried through the mail are under that rate. When you commit to the operation of the parcel-post law this section in respect to seeds and bulbs, which have heretofore been excluded from it, and fix the rates, you place it in a condition where the Postmaster General, in the exercise of the discretion conferred on him by the law, may adjust both the rate and the zone. I think there will be no trouble about it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, under the rate applied by the Postmaster General, after the Parcel Post System had been adopted, and after Congress had refused to put seeds and bulbs, and so forth, under the parcel-post rate in the parcel-post bill, these packages of seed, sold generally for from 2 to 3 and 4 and 5 cents each, were admitted under the second-class rate at a very low rate of postage, and a very large trade was worked up and existed under that regulation. Seedmen have taken their orders this year for 90 per cent of the seeds and bulbs that go out, relying on the lower rate of postage. When Congress, without notice to them, adopted this amendment of the Senate to the Post Office appropriation bill, these men found themselves in this position: If they fulfill their contracts on these small weights, they have to pay double, and in some cases four times, the postage they would have paid under the former rate, and if they do not get relief by this bill they lose a very great deal of money. The course of business will be interrupted. Of course everybody realizes how important it is that these seeds and bulbs be sent out to the farmers throughout the country at a low rate of postage. I think for this season especially it is important that this low rate be adopted, and then the Post Office Committee, when it comes to study the question in regard to the future, can amend it and the gentleman's idea about pound-postage rates, and so forth, can be adopted; but just now it is important that the low rate be established on these low weights of seeds and packages of that kind, 90 per cent the whole trade of which is in these lower-weight packages.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, until the gentleman stated that the spring seed had not been sent out, and that 90 per cent was withheld, I was under the impression that the spring distribution had taken place.

Mr. ALLEN. No; it has not.

Mr. STAFFORD. And being under that impression, I was inclined to ask unanimous consent to have this bill go over for two weeks, but in view of the fact that the seed houses are withholding 90 per cent of the spring seeding, I would not wish to levy that great burden upon them.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the case in my district, where there is a number of these large seed shippers.

Mr. STAFFORD. I still believe there is great discrepancy between the 4-ounce rate and the pound rate. Under the circumstances, with the exception that that committee will correct this discrepancy, I will not interpose any objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it not a fact that the rate is fixed on 8 ounces instead of 4?

Mr. STAFFORD. As to what?

Mr. KINDEL. As to bulbs and seeds.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the existing law, before the Senate in a hurry, which is not surprising, passed an amendment to next year's Post Office appropriation act, seeds and bulbs enjoyed the rate of third-class matter, namely, 1 cent for every 2 ounces. Under that amendment we extended the parcel-post rate to seeds, bulbs, and cuttings, and the like, and that would compel the seeds in small packages up to 4 ounces to pay the rate of 1 cent an ounce, and for 8-ounce packages the old rate would not be applicable at all. As the gentleman knows, under the parcel-post rate the limit is 4 ounces at 1 cent an ounce for mail distributed throughout the country.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPEAL OF SECTION 3480 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 751) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed so far as it affects payments for services in the Army of the United States prior to April 13, 1861.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. The bill on its face does not indicate what this section is. I think we ought to have some explanation of the bill. I notice the gentleman who has reported the bill by my side, and I would like to have him make some explanation of it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported from the House Committee on the Judiciary and contains a provision for the repeal of section 3480 of the code. That section is one that was passed in the heated period immediately following our Civil War and provided as follows:

SEC. 3480. It shall be unlawful for any officer to pay any account, claim, or demand against the United States which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, 1861, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion, or in favor of any person who during such rebellion was not known to be opposed thereto and distinctly in favor of its suppression; and no pardon heretofore granted, or hereafter to be granted, shall authorize the payment of such account, claim, or demand until this section is modified or repealed. But this section shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of claims founded upon contracts made by any of the departments, where such claims were assigned or contracted to be assigned prior to the 1st day of April, 1861, to the creditors of such contractors, loyal citizens of loyal States, in payment of debts incurred prior to the 1st day of March, 1861.

There have been three changes made in this law modifying its effect. A bill was introduced in the House by Judge Clayton, the chairman of our committee, covering the same ground that is contained in the present bill. For the sake of a more speedy action, however, the committee determined to take up the Senate bill which had passed and act upon that, laying aside the one that had been introduced by Judge Clayton, and that is the bill that is now before this House. It intends to remove a disability from those officers, graduates of West Point, who during the Civil War took part in one way or another with the Confederacy. I may say to the House that the bill covers the names of the most distinguished men on the southern side in that controversy, names like Lee and Wheeler and Jackson, and the claims that would be affected are those of such men or their descendants. This was a punitive statute growing out of the feeling that then existed, a feeling which I, perhaps, as a northern man may be permitted to say happily no longer exists in our country. [Applause.]

When men like Lee and Wheeler were pleased to don the uniform of the United States soldiery and take their places under the Stars and Stripes, and go forth and bear their share in the struggle in the Spanish War, surely it does not appear to be an act of good grace for us to continue this punitive measure upon our statute books which affects the descendants at least of those very great men. [Applause.] And it is for that reason, moved and actuated in the committee and on this floor to-day by a sentiment and a feeling of patriotism, that we ask this House unanimously to adopt this section, so far as it affects, as the act expresses it, "payment for services in the Army of the United States prior to April 13, 1861." I have a list of those who are affected, or would be affected, by this, and it comprises the best men that figured in the Civil War from the South. The act itself makes no appropriation, it makes no payment, it simply removes this disability which was inflicted at a time when the feeling of the country very properly prompted such expression, but which to-day, in the light of fact that these men and their descendants have taken part in the service of the Government, wearing her uniform, fighting under her flag, ought not to remain as a punitive statute upon the laws of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

MEXICO.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker [applause], I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution No. 251, a joint resolution justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the House joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report, which I send with the resolution, be read also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to have the report read also. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What was the request?

The SPEAKER. To have the report read along with the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Consideration has not yet been granted?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. We have not consent to consider it yet.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better read the resolution first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, temporarily at least, to the reading of the report.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (No. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reading of the report?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any occasion for reading the report until we see whether the resolution is to be considered or not. Therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the proposition as to debate desired?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that, of course, it is desired on this side of the House to put this resolution through as speedily as possible, so that it may pass both bodies to-night and become a law, if possible. A reasonable length of debate, of course, ought to be had, and I have no doubt the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] will agree to a reasonable length of debate. But I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if he would allow, reserving his objection, the report to be read, so that it may be considered at this point?

Mr. MANN. I think not. I take it the resolution will be considered and the report can be read the first thing then. I do not know what the purpose is of having the report read. I had understood that the Committee on Rules was prepared to report a rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They are.

Mr. MANN. Is there any understanding as to the limit of debate if the rule is reported, may I ask?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There will be no limit of debate under the rule except that limitation which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] will have after the bill comes before the House, to move the previous question when the House is ready.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman what is the expectation in reference to the length of debate?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I thought that half an hour would be sufficient for the resolution, and, if anyone desired to oppose it, half an hour would be sufficient against it. In other words, half an hour on a side.

Mr. MANN. Well, we talked a while ago on this side, before the minority members went into the Committee on Rules, that we ought to have 20 minutes' debate on the rule and two hours on the resolution, at least, on this side.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is 4 hours and 40 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman mean two hours on a side?

Mr. MANN. I meant two hours on this side. I do not know how much time the gentlemen may want. I am frank to say that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that, of course, we would not attempt to put this resolution through to-night if it was not for the very serious condition on the border. With the message of the President of the United States having been delivered, our troops may be fired on at any moment.

Mr. MANN. I am not at all alarmed at that. I do not think that will happen, but the President of the United States said to us that he would like our advice. Certainly before we commit the Government to war we ought at least have time enough to draw our breath. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will remind the gentleman from Illinois that we are facing a condition to-day where the legislative branch of the Government is always expected and required to sustain the Chief Executive of the Nation. [Applause.]

I would not insist on the immediate consideration of this resolution and its going through to-night if it were not for the fact that the President of the United States himself has stated that it is of the utmost importance to the Nation that it should be passed.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the President comes to us to ask our advice, that is one thing; if he comes to us to tell us what we have got to do, that is quite another thing. I am always willing, if possible, to sustain the President in our foreign relations, and yet I place my duty to my country above my allegiance to the President. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that if it would be agreeable to take this resolution up without a rule, by unanimous consent, of course recognizing the fact that we are ready to report, then would he be willing to consent to take an hour and a half on that side and an hour on this side for debate on the question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield? Will the gentleman take care of me?

Mr. MANN. We will take care of you.

Mr. MURDOCK. Well, I am for the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned I am willing to take an hour and a half on this side and give the gentleman an hour on that side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what arrangement has been made as to time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what opportunity there will be for amending the resolution—what opportunity there will be for an amendment to the resolution during that two hours and a half?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. There will be opportunity for amendments.

Mr. MANN. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the request that interferes with the right of amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is like any other resolution. You have a perfect right to amend it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentlemen will have an hour and a half, and they can offer amendments in that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD]?

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the reason for giving one hour and a half on that side and only an hour on this side? [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that we are facing an emergency. The purpose is to satisfy the minority. We, of course, are trying to conserve time. It would probably take more time to bring in a rule and have a roll call than to concede the half hour additional time to the gentlemen on this side.

A MEMBER. Bring in a rule!

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, no Republican, no Progressive, would for one moment, if there is a just cause for war, let his party affiliation stand between him and the performance of his duty by his country and by his flag.

[Applause.] And there is no reason why, in a division of this time, it should be divided between partisans in this House, because this is not a partisan question. There is no reason why, if you are going to have a division of time, there should not be an equal division between the two respective sides, especially in view of the fact that there are so many more Members on this side of the House who may want to address themselves to the resolution on account of the numbers and majority than there are on that side of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I hope this will not be a partisan question. I feel it is the duty of every man who occupies a seat on this side of the House to sustain the President of the United States. [Applause.]. As to whether gentlemen on that side of the House desire to make it a partisan question, it is for them to determine, and not for us. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will not interfere with this arrangement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I still do not see any reason why this concession should be made on that account.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is to save time.

Mr. SISSON. But some gentlemen on this side of the House may want to address themselves to this resolution—some gentleman who may not agree with the gentleman from Alabama in the position which he takes. I do not know exactly what position the gentleman from Alabama may take, but this is a matter of grave importance, and it seems to me that whether men agree with me about it or not, under the Constitution the right to declare war is in Congress. I read the resolution a moment ago, and it seems to me that the resolution itself is a declaration of war. And if it is a declaration of war, then the question of whether or not we are justified in going to war is a matter that Congress ought to have the right to discuss. [Applause.] I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENRY rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] objects, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 484 (H. Rept. 559).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 251, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, upon the President's message with respect to the conditions in Mexico.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has this resolution been reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. HENRY. I assume that it has—the resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I assume that it has been reported to the House.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is the resolution I have just reported.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. The gentleman offered a resolution and asked unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is in the basket.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The resolution has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] as to how much time his side will desire to consume in the discussion of the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, if an agreement can be reached whereby there shall be a fair amount of discussion allowed on the resolution itself, I think we can agree——

Mr. HENRY. On which resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL. On the resolution offered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think 20 minutes to a side on the rule will be sufficient.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that 20 minutes on a side are all he is entitled to if the previous question is ordered. We were prepared to agree to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to two hours and a half debate. If we can agree to this rule without the consumption of time, we will see that gentlemen have the time they desire.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hour and a half that was offered?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; before the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think we can agree that no time shall be taken up in roll calls on the rule or on the previous question if we can have 20 minutes on a side for the discussion of the rule.

Mr. HENRY. The gentleman, as I understand it, then, contends for 20 minutes on a side on the adoption of the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On the adoption of the rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The rule is a very simple one.

The SPEAKER. Unless the previous question is ordered, of course the gentleman from Texas is entitled to an hour.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. [Applause.]

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, the rule is just as plain and simple as the English language can make it. Its only purpose is to bring before the House for immediate consideration the joint resolution which has just been reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. After the adoption of this rule, then it is within the power of gentlemen on this side, in control of the joint resolution, and those on the other side of the House, to make an agreement as to the time that shall be consumed in debating the Flood resolution. So the only object of this resolution is for the purpose of getting prompt action on the joint resolution. There is nothing further about it to explain; there is nothing else to consider, except its adoption or rejection. In my judgment the adoption of the Flood resolution does not necessarily mean war. It is only sufficient that we sustain the President in this great crisis. I join in here yielding him ungrudgingly the power he asks to-day to maintain our national honor.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. The proposition is that there shall be 20 minutes on each side on the rule?

Mr. HENRY. The rules provide for 20 minutes on each side, the previous question having been adopted.

Mr. MURDOCK. The 20 minutes under the rules?

Mr. HENRY. Under the general rules.

Mr. MURDOCK. And after the consideration of the rule is finished, then there will be an agreement in regard to debate on the resolution?

Mr. HENRY. That is left to the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee to adjust, if they can. I understand they can probably agree as to time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order a resolution making a declaration of war. Let us not be deceived nor deceive ourselves. The herald of a storm is usually a cloud of dust. This resolution is the herald of war, with all its direful consequences, immediate and remote. The adoption of this resolution commits our country to a war against Victoriano Huerta, now acting as President of the Republic of Mexico. This Government has not recognized Huerta as the President of that Republic, and ours is practically the only first-class Government that has withheld such recognition. Huerta has been recognized as the provisional president of Mexico by the Governments of England, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, and practically all the first-class powers of the earth. Mexico, not the United States, is responsible for Huerta.

We are asked this afternoon to declare war upon this man Huerta. Why? Because in Mexico American citizens have been ruthlessly murdered, American women unconscionably outraged, American property destroyed, without regard? Oh, no. Only because a subordinate of this man Huerta caused the arrest of some American sailors in Tampico, as related here from this rostrum within the hour by the President of the United States. These sailors were detained for not to exceed an hour and a half by those who caused their arrest. They were then, by order of a superior officer to the one making the arrest, discharged, and were escorted to their ship.

Apologies were made by those in immediate authority in Tampico and an apology was made by Huerta from the capital of the Republic of Mexico in the City of Mexico. This was not satisfactory to Admiral Mayo and the Government of the United States. The firing of a salute was demanded. This demand was not acceded to by Huerta. These are the reasons given by the President for asking authority to use the armed forces of the United States against Huerta. Does the President state a cause for war? Are the Members of this House, representatives of the people of this Republic, who were told a few moments ago by the President that he came here to get their advice, ready to advise the President that he has made out a case, a casus belli, and that he is therefore authorized to use the armed forces of the United States, both upon land and sea, in making war upon Victoriano Huerta, the man? Have the people of the United States such a quarrel with Huerta that we, even upon the request of the President, must adopt a resolution that is a declaration of war on him alone?

Mr. Speaker, I ask the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (No. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I care not how the resolution may conceal it, its effect will be war; war with all its consequences; war with its toll of killed and wounded; with its toll of anguish and tears; and, I repeat, why are we declaring war? Do Members answer because the salute demanded from Huerta by the President was not fired by Huerta, whom the President refuses to recognize as president of Mexico? Is that a sufficient cause for war?

Mr. Speaker, there would be some excuse for the action asked for by the President a few moments ago if he had included as a cause of war against Mexico all the murders, all the unspeakable outrages of women and girls by Villa and his followers in northern Mexico. But this bandit, murderer, and rapist, who has answered all our appeals in the interest of our people with insolent insult, is not mentioned. Why?

Does the President condone all these offenses and merely make war on Huerta, who is bad, but no worse than Villa?

Mr. HENSLEY. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No. I have not time. In the face of all these outrages perpetrated against Americans in Mexico the President only asked a salute from Huerta to the flag of the United States—a salute by a man whom he refuses to recognize. And because of the refusal of the man Huerta to comply with the request of the President we are asked to make a declaration of war here this afternoon—war, the consequences of which no man can see—war, the cost of which no man can measure in blood and treasure and in all the horrors that are incident to war.

But, Mr. Speaker, if you pass this resolution, if you make this declaration of war, it will be a war of my country, and, right or wrong, I will be for my country and for support of the war. But I oppose the resolution, I oppose the declaration of war, and if you force the war upon the country I will stay here [laughter] and insist that you gentlemen furnish means for the prosecution of the war without stint until its close. The War with Spain is over, but the consequences are still upon us. The actual hostilities in Mexico may not last for a year or two years or three years, but the consequences will abide with us for years and years.

Mr. Speaker, I say again, if this resolution included within its terms a demand for reparation from Mexico for all the outrages that have been perpetrated on the American people there would be some excuse for its adoption, but it demands nothing of the kind. It simply makes a declaration of war on Gen. Huerta in the manner demanded by the President.

We crave the favorable opinion of mankind on our action in dealing with the powers of the world. Do we justify the favorable judgment of the world by taking the action urged to-day by the President?

What can we say to the world in defense of such a cause for war as the President has stated? Yea, more; what can we say to the mothers, wives, sisters, and sweethearts of our own country in justification of this war? What will be its consequences, immediate and remote? What is our ultimate aim and our final purpose? Is it to remove the provisional president of the Republic of Mexico, Gen. Huerta, by force of arms? If so, when we have removed him, whom shall be put in his place, and how? What will the war decide? That we can lick Mexico? We know that now.

Consideration of some of these questions before we act upon a war resolution will be helpful to all who are so deeply concerned in the grave consequences that shall follow the result of our action here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it seems very difficult to satisfy some of our Republican friends in the House. Until almost this very moment we have been hearing criticisms of the President of the United States from these gentlemen, because he has not undertaken to deal with the situation in Mexico with a strong hand. Now, when an outrage has been committed against the dignity of this Nation and the President proposes to put an end to that sort of thing, still there are Republican gentlemen who are not satisfied.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter. When in the mind's eye we picture sailors of the United States being marched up the streets of Tampico under arrest, like thieving criminals, by one of Gen. Huerta's subordinates, we can not regard this as a trivial matter. And when the President of the United States comes into this Chamber and tells us that this affair is the culmination of a series of outrages, I think the time has come for all to stand by the President. [Applause.]

Some of us entertained the hope that this House would be so solidly behind the President that discussion of the resolution would not be necessary. I can not at all agree with gentlemen who make light of the arrest of our sailors. It is a most serious offense which can be wiped out by nothing short of complete acknowledgment and apology. It was said by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that Gen. Huerta had apologized for this outrage upon our flag. But how did he apologize? He apologized by saying that after all our American sailors had no right to land there at all. He apologized by justifying the arrest almost in the same sentence. He apologized by saying, "I am sorry for what occurred, but after all your sailors had no business there." He had taken these men out of a boat flying our flag. He had marched them up the streets of Tampico in disgrace, and then offered to apologize by saying, "I am sorry for this thing, but after all I was right."

I thank God, Mr. Speaker, that we have a President of the United States who will not accept that kind of apology. [Applause.]. If Gen. Huerta had had the manhood to admit that his subordinates were in the wrong, that would have presented an entirely different situation. If the President as the representative of the American people is to permit such indignities to be heaped on the sailors of our Navy, if the President is to permit a paymaster and sailors of our Navy to be arrested, marched up the streets of Tampico in disgrace, and then is to accept that sort of apology, there would be no guaranty that this sort of thing will not happen to-morrow and again and again in the future at the will of Huerta and his subordinates.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the time has come to put an end to these outrages in Mexico, and it is surprising that the very gentlemen who have been crying so loudly for intervention, the gentlemen who have been criticizing the President for pursuing a policy of peace, still find excuse for criticism. These gentlemen are against the President. Right or wrong they are against the President. Mr. Speaker, I had not supposed that partisan feeling would carry men so far, and I venture the prediction that these gentlemen will find out very soon that such attitude toward the President will find little sympathy among the people. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, this resolution needs one thing more than anything else. In the face of the world it needs a unanimous vote in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.] When my country meets a crisis, I have one rule—follow the flag. [Applause.] We have tomporized, Heaven knows, long enough with Victoriano Huerta. The time has come to take him in charge. [Applause.] He is a dictator who came into place and power through violence. He has a brigand's disregard of the responsibilities and the amenities of nations. He has a brigand's reliance upon and hope in mere personal audacity. The same qualities in the man which did not prevent him from insulting us will save him, when we apply a penalty, from humiliation. We are not going to humble Huerta. You can not humble the Huerta kind, but what we are going to do is to send around the world to all mankind the message that everywhere, in Mexico as elsewhere, the American flag must be respected. [Applause and cheers.] I am not only surprised, I am pained, that there should develop on the floor of this House, in any party, opposition to this resolution. Compel from Huerta respect for our flag and murder and rapine in Mexico against our citizens will cease. I am tired of the policy of watchful waiting.

Mr. MANN. So are we.

Mr. MURDOCK. We have seen the President of the United States come here to-day with a proposition to end that policy, to take hold in Mexico with vigor and rigor, and I am for him in this work, and this body, on the Republican side as well as on the Democratic side and among the Progressives, ought to back him up to a man. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am for the adoption of this rule at this time, because I do not believe there should be any watchful waiting on the part of Congress in this matter. I shall vote when it comes to the resolution itself to sustain the President of the United States in the action he has taken [applause]—not because I believe the passage of this resolution means war, but because it is my deliberate judgment that the passage of the resolution is the only thing now that can prevent war with Mexico. [Applause.] As the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has said, there has been enough of watchful waiting so far as the Mexican situation is concerned, and it is not a matter for us to consider now whether the arrest referred to by the President was an affront important enough to warrant Admiral Mayo in demanding a salute of our flag, because the President of the United States has made Admiral Mayo's demand his own. Neither should we consider whether the President of the United States exercised the greatest wisdom in making that demand his own, but we are confronted with the fact that the President of the United States has made it, and it is our duty to either sustain him or else by the defeat of this resolution say that the fleet shall be turned back. That the President is discredited by his own country, that Congress will not sustain him in his efforts to restore order and bring peace to Mexico; that Huerta may insult our flag with impunity, may destroy American lives without fear of punishment; that Congress believes that a policy of do nothing should continue, until other nations who are interested there will say that if we are not prepared to fulfill our obligations they will see to it that their rights are protected regardless of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is the duty of every Representative in this Congress, that it is the duty of every patriotic American to sustain the President of the United States in the action that he has now taken, not in the belief that it means war, but with the conviction that only by sustaining him now is there any hope of preventing war. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am for the rule, and I am for the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I had hoped that we should never again see the war clouds gather around our country, but I am for sustaining the President of the United States in the action that he has taken in reference to Mexico, and I am for sustaining the honor of the flag that has carried us for more than 100 years in our course of liberty and the rights of the people. If it becomes necessary that we shall have war in Mexico I hope that flag of ours will come through the fire of battle stronger and purer than ever in the history of our country. War is an awful thing, and I hope when this resolution shall have been passed and shall have become the law, that it shall not mean war in that country, but rather that it will be the means of preventing war. Those people on our border are our neighbors; we have endeavored to get along with them peacefully and in order, but if the time has now come when we must separate that friendship that has been existing so long, then I pray for the victory of my country and for the triumph of the principles which we advocate. Let us not forget as a great Nation we should do justice. Let us even be more than just. We hope that any clash of arms may be averted. Our country has been patient, and many of our citizens believed we were too lenient; but the administration has endeavored, if possible, to prevent any trouble. In a crisis which involves our country's welfare we should know no politics; and our people in the past have been patriotic, and have sustained the hands of the President. It will be done now. The people are not less patriotic now than they have ever been, and all will unite in an effort for the things that are for the best interest of our people. Let us pass this resolution with the hope that war may be prevented and the honor of our country preserved. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that we will have only one speech on this side, and I ask him to consume his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the incidents which the President narrated to us had occurred with England or Germany or France or any other great power there would be no resolution like this pending here now. [Applause on the Republican side.] But because Mexico is weak, we think that we have the moral right to declare practical war against her in the high hope that success is easily accomplished. And I would not do that under the plea that we are supporting the flag toward Mexico; that I would not stand for if it were Great Britain or Germany. [Applause on the Republican side.] Who would think that the incidents that have been narrated are a cause for war between two great powers? Have we forgotten ourselves that we propose to practically declare war without stopping to think or wait? The President did us the honor to say he came to us to ask our advice, and then he said:

> I have come to ask your approval and support in the course I now propose to pursue.

That is not asking the advice of Congress; that is giving his orders to Congress to sustain what he says he is about to do; and you on the other side of the House, without waiting, without deliberation, without care, propose to pass a resolution which is in effect a declaration—aye, more than a declaration of war. It is a declaration that the United States has become the ally, the helpful ally, of the murderous crew in the north of Mexico now engaged in murdering men and outraging women. [Applause on the Republican side.] The whole purpose of this resolution is to so discredit the present President of the Mexican Republic that he will fall an easy prey to the insurrectionists from the north. Cause for war! Why, the United States, like every other civilized country, ought to pause when an insult is offered for which apology has been given, and not say that we go to war because we do not like a man. The President said:

> If armed conflict should unhappily come as a result of his attitude and personal resentment toward this Government, we should—

And so forth.

I fear that the personal resentment is largely the resentment of the President of the United States because Mr. Huerta has not bowed before his demands. Huerta has been President of the Mexican Republic now for more than a year. I do not condone the method by which he secured that position, nor am I willing to declare war against him because President Wilson does not happen to like him. [Applause on the Republican side and laughter on the Democratic side.] That is the real reason for the resolution. I am not to be deterred from the position which I take by slighting remarks or laughter, because I believe that we owe to the American flag a higher duty than demanding a salute from Huerta. We owe to the American flag that it shall stand for right and justice and peace in all the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr HENRY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY. Would the gentleman, as the leader of the Republican Party in this House, advocate and support a resolution to recognize the Huerta government?

Mr. MANN. Well, when that question comes up I will pass upon it. That is about as near a question as the gentleman can come. I will do the thing that I believe to be right. I would not object if the President of the United States would stop the rapine, would stop the outrages, would stop the murders, would stop the destruction of property and lives in the northern portion of Mexico. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] some one else to whom he wishes to yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have I any time remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. No; the time has expired.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution may mean war, or it may mean peace. Let us hope that the ultimate result that will be achieved by the passage of this resolution will be peace and good order in the Republic of Mexico and the establishment of friendly relations between our two Republics. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But whether it means peace or whether it means war, there are times that come in the history of nations like there are times that come in the life of man, when honor must be maintained, no matter what be the cost. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Your country is facing that condition to-day. No man can say that our great Government has not dealt with the people of Mexico and the governments that it has attempted to establish with the greatest patience and the greatest consideration. We have probably allowed conditions to go further in Mexico than we would have allowed them to go if we had been in contention with one of the foremost nations of the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

War never comes from one incident, and never has. For more than a year we have been facing a state of turmoil, a state of disorder—I may not go too far if I say a state of anarchy—in the Republic of Mexico, that has threatened the lives and property of the citizens of the United States. With great patience we have endeavored to allow that country to work out the problem of peace and the problem of government. We have hoped from day to day that a peaceful settlement might be reached, but I will say to you that peace never comes to the door of the coward; that peace without strife never comes to that nation that is not willing to protect its citizenship, sustain its property interests in a foreign country, and, above all other things, compel a decent respect to the flag of the Nation [applause on the Democratic side]; the flag that is the emblem of our civilization, the flag that is the emblem of our past, the flag that stands for all the honor and glory of our country, the flag that makes it safe for an American to put his foot on foreign soil, the flag that protects our homes and our firesides. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That flag has been dishonored in a foreign land, on foreign soil. The President of the United States comes here to-day and, though he has not asked you to declare war, asks you to sustain him in using the military forces of our Government to require a decent respect for that flag and an honorable consideration for the rights of your Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I regret the position that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has taken this afternoon for his party. Sixteen years ago yesterday I saw a resolution passed through this House complying with a message from a great President, one of the greatest Presidents of the gentleman's party, and I am proud to say that although before that time there may have been dissension, there may have been turmoil and dispute between the two sides of this House, when the President of the United States asked the Congress to hold up his hands for the honor of the American flag this side of the House sustained him as well as that side. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, was the motion on the previous question carried?

The SPEAKER. That was adopted 40 minutes ago. That was on the rule.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if we can reach an agreement as to time?

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, yes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to see if I could arrange with the gentleman from Illinois about the time for debate on the resolution. I suggest that as he has agreed to an hour and a half on his side, I will make the same proposition to him that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made at the beginning of this matter, that we take an hour on this side and that they take on that side an hour and a half. How much times does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] desire?

Mr. MURDOCK. I want 10 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Then I will take the 10 minutes off the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I will take 50 minutes, and give the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] 10 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois 1 hour and 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, that will give this side the time it wanted before. I do not care how much other time is taken.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is to have 1 hour and 10 minutes, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] 10 minutes, and we 50 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent that the debate shall proceed for 2 hours and 10 minutes; that is, that it be limited to 2 hours and 10 minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Fifty minutes to be controlled by himself, 10 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], and 1 hour and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Chair desires to find out who is going to control this time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The ranking member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the minority side [Mr. COOPER] is, I think, in favor of the resolution, and I shall yield him some time out of my time.

Mr. COOPER. I am in favor of the resolution, and that is the reason why I resign the control of the time of the opposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know, under that situation, if unanimous consent is granted, whether or not either of the gentlemen can yield the floor for the purpose of amendment?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, undoubtedly.

The SPEAKER. That was agreed to in the former conversation.

Mr. GARDNER. It was not embodied in this request for unanimous consent, and there is a general rule of this House which provides that when a Member has the floor and in debate yields it, he can only yield it for debate, and that if he yields for amendment, he must yield the floor. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I am correct, I shall object to the request for unanimous consent unless in that consent there is embodied an agreement which will enable any Member who wishes to do so to offer an amendment.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman is correct about the rule he refers to.

The SPEAKER. Yes; he is. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, if unanimous consent were granted, as has been requested, either the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] or myself could yield to anyone for the purpose of offering an amendment, and, of course, no one else could get the chance to offer an amendment. Either of the gentlemen having charge of the floor would have the right to yield for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question about the matter of amendment. There is no desire on this side of the House to cut off the right to offer an amendment. That can be understood. If gentlemen desire to offer amendments they shall have the privilege of doing so in their own time.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the request that if anybody desires to offer an amendment he may do so in his own time.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, would it not be possible to incorporate in this request for unanimous consent the privilege of offering amendments?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it would be a good deal safer.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to broaden the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] so that those who speak may have the right to offer amendments in their own time, to be voted on at the conclusion of the debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent to broaden the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] so as to include the proposition that those who speak may have the right to offer amendments, to be voted on at the end of the debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should be glad to know if there are any amendments to be offered. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] an amendment to offer?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I have an amendment, which I have drawn and have in my pocket. To be frank with the gentleman, I have not yet made up my mind whether to offer it or not. It will depend very much on the explanation of the word "justified" in the resolution, which may be given by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inform the gentleman—evidently he did not hear it—that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] has signified his intention of offering an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] that he ask unanimous consent that all amendments may be offered and be pending now before the debate begins.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Gentlemen may not be ready with them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not know whether he wants to offer his amendment or not?

Mr. GARDNER. I shall be willing to have it read, but it depends very much on the explanation of the word "justified" which may be given by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] whether I offer it or not.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent to broaden the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], by putting into the request for unanimous consent the proposition that any gentleman who has time to speak on this resolution shall have the right to offer an amendment, and that the amendments shall all be voted upon at the end of the debate. The whole request, then, is this: That the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] asks unanimous consent that this debate be limited to 2 hours and 10 minutes, he to control 50 minutes, that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] have 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] have 1 hour and 10 minutes, and that any gentleman who gets time to make a speech may have the right to offer an amendment, and that all the amendments shall be voted on seriatim at the end of the debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] is recognized for 50 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I shall at this time occupy only a few moments upon this resolution. In his lucid manner the President this afternoon demonstrated the necessity of some action being taken on the part of this Government to resent the insults which have been inflicted upon our flag by the de facto government of Mexico. [Applause.] There can be no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that red-blooded American citizens all over this country uphold the President in the stand he has taken. [Applause.]

This resolution is not a declaration of war. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says, it is the only step that can be taken now to prevent war. This resolution has been carefully drawn with the purpose of preventing war. There is nothing in it that can fairly be construed as a declaration of war, the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will.

Mr. GILLETT. Under this resolution would the President have the right to blockade a Mexican port?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think so, in so far as its effect upon Mexico is concerned.

Mr. GILLETT. Is not that an act of war?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I think not. I think there are circumstances under which the President can blockade a port without such action constituting an act of war. I think the President could do that without this resolution.

Mr. GILLETT. Could the President stop a French, English, or German vessel going into one of the ports of Mexico?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Not going into one of the ports; no.

Mr. GILLETT. Then how is he blockading it?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The resolution gives the President practically the authority that he has now.

Mr. GILLETT. Can he prevent vessels going in? Is not that a blockade, to prevent vessels from going in?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He can not prevent a vessel from going in, but he can take charge of property discharged from vessels that do go in, after it is landed.

Mr. GILLETT. Then he can prevent vessels going in.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. He can not prevent vessels going in, but after those vessels have discharged their cargo he can take charge of the cargo, and so far as the de facto government of Mexico is concerned, he can establish this blockade. I think that is clearly established by international law.

This resolution is not a declaration of war. It simply approves the steps that the President has taken in order to maintain the honor and dignity of this country. The resolution was carefully worded. Here is its language:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States of America to enforce demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

It uses the word "justified," and does not authorize the President to do anything; it justifies the action he has taken. It puts behind the President the action of the Congress of the United States; and I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the action of the Committee on Foreign Affairs would have been the same if this insult had been given to this Nation by Great Britain or had it been by the world in arms, as well as the faction-torn country of Mexico. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; I have not the time to yield. The time has come when the honor of the American flag must be upheld by the American Nation. The President took that position, and against that position is placed the pettifogging critics of the President. The Committee on Foreign Affairs have sustained the President, and the people of this country will do the same; and if this is the issue upon which we are to go before the people this fall, I predict that the gentleman from Illinois will have a very much smaller number of associates in the next Congress than he has in this. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman's resolution says that the House of Representatives and Senate justify the employment of the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Does that mean that we justify the course of the President in getting us into the situation where we now find ourselves?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think the President has gotten us into any situation that we need be in the least ashamed of or unwilling to stand for.

Mr. GARDNER. Very likely not.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Answering what I presume to be the gentleman's question, I will say that it justifies, so far as this resolution is concerned, simply the President's action in reference to the Tampico incident and the insults given our Nation of a similar character.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman misses my point. Is this intended to justify his future course if we employ armed forces, or is it intended to justify both his past and future course?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do not think it has to do with the past course except the things specified in this resolution. It justifies his future course in whatever he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes specified in the resolution.

Mr. GARDNER. I understand that, and if I vote for this resolution, will the gentleman from Virginia understand that I am voting to justify the President's course in the Tampico incident?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Then, I can not vote for it.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman says there is nothing in the resolution that can be construed as a declaration of war. I have prepared an amendment which I want to read. It is this:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as a declaration of war.

Does the gentleman care to comment on an amendment of that kind at this time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. No; I do not.

But even if it does mean war, is there anything else we could do? The flag has been flouted; the country has been insulted; an apology has been demanded which is recognized all over the civilized world as the only apology which would appease an honor-loving nation. This has been refused, and every brave man in this land and every brave nation in the world believes that we should have that apology or should take some action against the parties responsible for the insult.

On the 9th of April a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested by an officer and squad of men of the army of Gen. Huerta. Neither the paymaster nor anyone of the boat's crew was armed. Two of the men were in the boat when the arrest took place, and were obliged to leave it and submit to be taken into custody, notwithstanding the fact that the boat carried, both at her bow and at her stern, the flag of the United States. The officer who made the arrest was proceeding up one of the streets of the town with his prisoners when met by an officer of higher authority, who ordered him to return to the landing and await orders; and within an hour and a half from the time of the arrest orders were received from the commander of the Huertista forces at Tampico for the release of the paymaster and his men.

Two of the men arrested were taken from the boat itself—that is to say, from the territory of the United States; but had it stood by itself it might have been attributed to the ignorance or arrogance of a single officer. Unfortunately, it was not an isolated case. A series of incidents have recently occurred which can not but create the impression that the representatives of Gen. Huerta were willing to go out of their way to show disregard for the dignity and rights of this Government and felt perfectly safe in doing what they pleased, making free to show in many ways their irritation and contempt. A few days after the incident at Tampico an orderly from the U. S. S. Minnesota was arrested at Vera Cruz while ashore in uniform to obtain the ship's mail, and was for a time thrown into jail. An official dispatch from this Government to its embassy at Mexico City was withheld by the authorities of the telegraphic service until peremptorily demanded by our chargé d'affaires in person. Such wrongs and annoyances have been suffered to occur only against representatives of the United States.

These insults under circumstances in which they were given are unbearable. [Applause.]

It may suit the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Illinois to advise their countrymen to submit to these insults. I am glad, however, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs, this House, the President, and the people of this country are not willing to allow this insult to go unavenged. [Applause.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this resolution. I approve the course of the administration in its dealing with the Mexican situation.

For three years this Government has looked on Mexico with pity and anxiety, at all times extending and offering its good offices to bring about peace and good will among the people of that country.

Holding the very commanding position that we do among the nations of the Western Hemisphere, and because of our proximity to Mexico and the events that have transpired there, the task of restraining ourselves from intervening has been a hard one. But that higher purpose, so aptly expressed in the President's message when he said—

> I believe that I speak for the American people when I say that we do not desire to control in any degree the affairs of our sister Republic; our feeling for the people of Mexico is one of deep and genuine friendship, and everything we have done or refrained from doing has proceeded from our desire to help them, not hinder or embarrass them—restrained and controlled the patriotic impulses that ofttimes arose to avenge some act committed on American citizens or American property.

During the past 13 months the President and his able Secretary of State, so anxious have they been to see happiness and peace restored to Mexico, although they have used every means to bring about settlement between the contending forces there, have been in this House and in the other end of the Capitol criticized and at times ridiculed. And to me it is to-day strange that some of you on that side of the aisle who have most grossly criticized the "watchful waiting" policy of the administration and pleaded for intervention, now are opposing this resolution because you say "it is a declaration of war." The fact about the matter is you will not be satisfied, you would not be satisfied no matter what policy the administration had adopted. You strive to gain a partisan advantage. But, sirs, the American people will not be fooled. They have been and they are now with the President in his handling of this very delicate question, because they know he is prompted by patriotic impulses. [Applause.]

I have great respect for the leader of the minority [Mr. MANN]. I have seen him on more than one occasion surrender what might be taken by some as a party advantage for the country's good. But to-day the stand he takes on this resolution does not measure up to his past record in this House and serves only to lessen his patriotism and influence in the eyes of the country. From his remarks no one could tell whether he was against this resolution, because it did not go far enough or because it went too far. And although heretofore on this floor he has criticized the President's policy with respect to Mexico as weak and vacillating, his vote on this resolution to-night will answer whether he meant what he said.

I do not believe that this resolution is in itself a declaration of war, for its very wording only "justifies the President in employment of armed forces to enforce the demands of this Government upon Huerta and for unequivocal amends for the affronts and indignities committed against us by Huerta."

Of course, it means a declaration of war, so far as compelling Huerta to make amends, and for that purpose the President will be justified in going to the extreme against him and his adherents; but no authority is granted by the provisions of this resolution to go beyond that. The declaration is aimed at only Huerta and his representatives, and not against others of the Mexican people. I doubt not that the carrying out of the provisions of the resolution, unless Huerta "makes unequivocal amends," will shortly call for a resolution "declaring for war."

By this resolution you only justify the President in the action he has taken and signified taking to compel an apology from Huerta's deliberate acquiescence in an open insult to our soldiers. That is its intention; that is all it means.

I ask you who are against this resolution what more would you have your President do? Is it pleasing to you to see our soldiers humiliated and insulted? No Member of this House dreads war more than I do. I think it is all that Sherman said it was when he said, "War is hell." Peace to me is much more desired, and surely no Member here doubts that the President and his Secretary of State much more desire peace to war. Their utterances state it, their actions prove it. This is an age of peace, and we are all for it as long as it can be maintained with honor, but rather than surrender our national honor for peace I prefer war.

I am not that kind of an American who can view with complacency and approval the action of an unfriendly de facto government deliberately and defiantly arresting our soldiers clad in the uniforms of this country and marching them through the streets of a foreign city to the jeers of a foreign people. The sight, had I witnessed it, would not have appealed to me, but rather I think, in case my Government had failed to make and enforce compliance with demands for an apology, would have humiliated me as an American citizen. This is only one of a series of recent incidents, the President states, that have heaped insult upon insult, and to my mind shows that the crumbling power of Huerta is almost gone, and he, realizing it, rather than fall before the victorious armies of the constitutionalists, and risk his own life in their hands, defies us, preferring to take his chances with us.

The crisis is now formidable, not because we want war, but because we love peace.

In view of these outrages to our people and the insult to our soldiers, forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. The period has arrived when the United States must support its national character and station among the nations of the world, or submit to the most shameful degradation.

God knows the American people sympathize with poor, bleeding, prostrate Mexico. Rich in climate, unlimited in natural resources, with the Panama Canal at her very feet, her people ought to be the most contented and prosperous on the globe, but with all her advantages she is prostrate and unable to catch progress and opportunity as they march by.

And why? Because the people of Mexico lack confidence in their leaders. In my opinion, if it were not for the assumption of authority, the vanity, the intolerance, and stupidity of Huerta, the people of that afflicted country to-day would not be in suffering and sorrow.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if what the President has done means war, if what he can do under the provisions of this resolution means war, then I am for war. And from that section from which I come, I believe, indeed I know, that as much as my people desire peace they are unwilling to see the soldiers of this Nation, once torn in civil warfare, humiliated and insulted by soldiers of an unfriendly power in a foreign land.

And when I look upon that flag, the glorious emblem of American liberty, I know that there is not a red line in its folds that would not be made more crimson by the blood that the people of the South stand ready to shed in its defense. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, for a little more than 13 months Victoriano Huerta has been provisional President of the Republic of Mexico, so recognized and acknowledged by every important civilized Government save ours. During that period a number of bands of freebooters, cutthroats, and murderers, largely organized for rapine and plunder in northern Mexico, have been warring on the Federal Government of Mexico. During the campaigns which the murderous chieftains in northern Mexico have been carrying on our people by the score have been murdered, our people by the thousands have been compelled to leave their homes, their farms, and their enterprises in northern Mexico because the country has been overrun and ravaged by these revolutionary forces. Hundreds of millions of dollars of property have been destroyed and the lives of many of our people and of foreigners whom we have taken under our jurisdiction have been wiped out. During all these occurrences through these awful months our administration has adhered to what the President has called a policy of "watchful waiting." Now and again pathetic appeals have been made by our Government to the bandit chiefs whose followers have been murdering and pillaging all over northern Mexico. When those appeals have not been completely ignored, they have been replied to with an insolence that ought to have brought the blush of shame to the cheek of every American citizen. Some of us have insisted that this condition in northern Mexico should be brought to an end. We have insisted that our people there and those whom we have assumed to protect ought to be protected. We have demanded that the strong arm of this Government be used, if need be, to preserve order and maintain peace in northern Mexico, but the administration has refused to allow a single armed man to cross the border, and has accepted as final and conclusive the miserable humiliating replies which have been sent to us by the Villas and Carranzas.

During all this time the federal government in Mexico has been measurably preserving order, nowhere under its flag, so far as I have dependable information, has a single American suffered in his life or in his property. During all of that period the conduct of that government toward our Government has been proper and conciliatory, so much so that up to within a few days last past, even our administration, pledged, as it was, to a determined animosity against the government of Huerta, has never found the slightest reason to find fault with any of our international relations with that Government. Last December our President in a message to Congress said that this government in Mexico was a "hateful power"; that it was a "mere military despotism"; that it never would be recognized or dealt with by our Government; that it was "tottering"; and that it would soon fall. But it has not fallen, even though we have armed its enemies, and the arms that have been furnished those enemies have been used to murder our citizens and to commit outrages without number in northern Mexico. Now, advantage is taken of a few incidents down at Tampico and Vera Cruz, which under any other circumstances or with any other nation or at any other time would be entirely overlooked, to bring forward a resolution to justify the President of the United States in using the armed forces of the United States for the purpose of crushing out that individual in Mexico, whom the President hates and whom he has declared shall be driven from power. This resolution does not pretend to give the President authority to protect American lives or American property. It does not propose that any armed forces of this Nation shall be used for the purpose of protecting our people, but that the President may compel Victoriano Huerta to do as he wills he shall do. What is hoped for is that, under this resolution, a blockade of all the ports of Mexico can be made, and thus the federal government of Mexico, deprived of the opportunity of securing arms and munitions of war, will be overcome by the hordes of Villa, who we are furnishing arms. The murderous hordes that have left destruction and ruin and desolation in their wake. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] said the resolution does not necessarily mean war. I agree with him that it is perhaps the hope of the administration that actual war will not be necessary against the federal government of Mexico, because the hope is that we may by blockades so weaken the power of the federal government in the City of Mexico as to give Villa an opportunity to strangle Huerta and his government.

And when that is accomplished how have we improved the situation further than to justify the statement of the President, made months ago, that the government in the City of Mexico presided over by Huerta will fall?

If the administration is really desirous of maintaining our honor and dignity, of protecting our people and their property, it should make its demands not upon the federal government presided over by Huerta, but upon Carranza and Villa. If we are to use force it should be used on the northern border, where our flag has been insulted, our citizens plundered. But this will not be done, for the jingo appeal to patriotism in this resolution is not for the purpose of avenging wrong and insult or ending disorder in Mexico, but to satisfy the administration's morbid obsession to make good its prophecy that the Huerta government would fall.

The federal government in Mexico, except for the questionable cases now brought forward to bolster up our bluff of force, has admittedly preserved a correct and proper attitude toward every demand and representation of our representatives, even in the face of multiplied evidence of the hostility of our officials. On the other hand, the rebel forces in northern Mexico have either ignored our demands for reparation and redress for the murders committed and the property destroyed or have replied to them with insolent and contemptuous evasion or refusal. But our administration is apparently willing to submit to any indignity at the hands of the bandit chiefs, to allow any number of lives and any amount of property to be sacrificed by the bandit forces in northern Mexico, as it pursues its vengeful course toward the destruction of the present federal government.

If Huerta yields to our unreasonable demands, his government must lose prestige in the eyes of the people. If he does not, the plan seems to be to blockade the ports of Mexico, and thus, by shutting off sources of supply for the federal government while still affording supplies of war material to the constitutionalists over our border, enable the rebels to win. Truly this is a noble game for a great and powerful and alleged friendly people to play.

I will vote, if it is necessary, for a resolution under which the President may use the armed forces of the United States for the protection of the lives and property of our citizens, but I decline to vote to give the President the opportunity to make widows and orphans and pile up an awful debt in an unjustified, wicked war upon a single individual whom the President wants eliminated from the situation in the capital of Mexico. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. POU). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM.]

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively and been much impressed by the remarks made on the floor of this House in defense of Gen. Huerta. I wish I could be convinced that the character of this man, the dictator of Mexico, is such, or his acts have been such, as to relieve him in part of the odium and stigma which will ever attach to his name in the contemplation of those who view with healthy regard free government, orderly established and maintained for the benefit of the whole people. I fail to see how gentlemen acquainted with his career, having regard for the ethics of civilized society, can with good faith arise in this Chamber and essay to defend a man with such a record and argue that our Government should recognize him as the head of that unfortunate Republic to our south.

HUERTA'S RECORD.

Let us for a moment consider his record. He espoused the cause of Madero and became his able general. Madero was the man he aided in placing at the executive head of his native land, and when he sought to get rid of him by unwarranted and unlawful methods he but added infamy to the burden of his mistakes. While a general in Madero's army, while enjoying the confidence of his chief, while in charge of the forces supposedly upholding the Madero administration, while presumably engaged in the duty of protecting and defending the President he had voluntarily chosen to support, he so completely abandoned himself to his own ambitions as to cause the arrest of that President and throw him into prison. And while Madero was in his custody, a helpless, hapless prisoner, he permitted him to be murdered under conditions so foul and atrocious as to provoke a wave of moral revulsion throughout the whole civilized world.

How could our Government with respect for its own honor and regard for the feelings of the people of Mexico be expected to recognize a president of that character?

WHY OUR RECOGNITION IS NECESSARY TO HUERTA.

Let us admit, for the purpose of discussion, that Huerta is a "strong man," that as chief executive of Mexico his administration would have assured respect for foreign lives and foreign property. Would it have been expedient to have recognized him, if not morally or legally justifiable to do so? What influence would such action have upon the future? What would have been its certain results in other South American Republics? These are considerations which should engage our attention. These are phases of the problem we can not afford to ignore.

Gen. Huerta wanted our recognition solely for one purpose. He cared nothing for the sanction it gave his acts. He cared but little for its moral influence upon his standing before the civilized world. He wanted it alone for the purpose of borrowing money. With our indorsement behind him he knew that he could borrow money from foreign sources, and just now money is the lifeblood he must depend upon for the perpetuation of his administration. He knew that to borrow the necessary large sums of money outside of Mexico he must pledge some property or property rights of the Mexican people, because no foreign Government would loan to him these large sums without such a pledge. He knew that no foreign Government would accept such a pledge as collateral for a loan unless that Government had our tacit consent to the making of the loan. He knew also that our Government could not be said to have tacitly consented unless we recognized him as the legal head of the Mexican Government. Once recognized by our Government he could pledge and borrow to his heart's content. Without this recognition he could not borrow except upon speculative terms, for though he might pledge as much as he wished, the foreign Government loaning him would be unable to convert its security into money in case he should default in payment. Without our recognition of his administration there was always danger of our stepping in and saying to the foreign Government, "Hands off, this property you propose taking belongs to the Mexican people. They did not pledge it to you. It was pledged to you by one having no authority to do so."

That was the situation. That is the situation to-day. That is why our recognition of Huerta is so absolutely essential to his success.

INEXPEDIENCY OF RECOGNITION.

Now, why is it inexpedient for us to recognize men who secure office in the criminal and unconstitutional manner resorted to by Huerta? Suppose we were to recognize every ipso facto president who, by some means or another, manages to secure the executive office of some South American Republic. How long would any of these Republics be free from the danger of revolution? Once recognized these self-constituted presidents are indorsed to borrow. Once enabled to borrow, Heaven alone knows how long they may succeed in fastening themselves leechlike on the unhappy people who are the victims of their designs. Recognition, under such circumstances, is merely placing a premium upon crime.

Now, in view of this situation, is it the part of wisdom for us to say to the politically designing and ambitious of South America:

"No matter how you gain the presidency, no matter whether you are a traitor or not, we will recognize you in the office once you have attained it."

I ask the question, but the answer is so plain it requires no reply. Such would be a policy of most costly expediency. And yet there are those who come here and endeavor to defend Huerta, who affirm that it is none of our affair how the office was obtained and who argue that recognition would be the easiest and most expedient policy in this particular case. I deny this and maintain that it is our duty to stand upon higher ground, that we should say to the world that we will not recognize any man who obtains office by such foul and unlawful means.

OUR OBLIGATIONS TO CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT.

In my opinion the President made a wise move in behalf of constitutional government in the Western Hemisphere when he refused to recognize an individual who secured office by means not in conformity with the constitutional provisions of his land. If we recognize and, by recognizing, aid every de facto government in South America, when shall we see the end of these mushroom administrations, springing up over night, deriving their right to govern not from the will or authority of the people but from an appeal to arms, whose only claim to our recognition is founded on temporary conditions over which they have control solely for the time being?

We have endeavored to set a commendable example for the republics of the world. So well has that example impressed them in some respects that when they secured their independence their form of government was modeled after our own, and they sought to secure by the same manner in which we accomplished it the right of the people to govern themselves. Experience has taught us that the peace of the world is maintained only by orderly government, firmly established. If we subscribe to a policy which results in encouraging revolutions, uprisings, and conspiracies against the lawfully established governments in those Republics to our south, we are estopped from protesting against any inconvenience to us which may arise from the disturbance of natural, normal conditions in that land. It is our duty, as well as to our interest, to discourage and discountenance every effort to secure changes or reforms in government other than through those legal constitutional channels established for the purpose and to which men should appeal for the remedying or redress of unsatisfactory conditions.

When the whole people of South America, including those ambitious, designing spirits, who are the chief trouble makers, come clearly to understand that we will not recognize their claims unless they obtain office through proper, lawful means, we will have most effectually discouraged these sporadic outbreaks of rebellion.

Hardly a year passes without witnessing several revolutions in the smaller Republics of Central and South America. European Governments have not been too careful in considering how claimants for their recognition in these Republics secured office, because usually it has been to their financial interest to maintain amicable relations with the actual de facto Government of the country. Nor have Governments of Europe been restrained from recognition by the fact that such recognition was calculated to promote disorder eventually. Unfortunately, many of those living under monarchical government are obsessed with the idea that such form of government is the only true method of administering the affairs of civilized man in collective society. Consequently they have prophesied the inadequacy of republican form of government and have welcomed the opportunity to draw illustrations for these prophecies from the very conditions which their policy manifestly begot.

Then, too, it proves no reflection upon monarchical government when the republican Governments of South America fail to possess the requisite strength to maintain their permanency. As the greatest republican Government in the world, it is short-sighted policy on our part, however, to encourage conditions fostering suspicion and disbelief of that theory of government of which we are the leading exponent.

Undoubtedly it was for these reasons that we declined to recognize the pretensions of the present de facto Government in Mexico. That Huerta's actions partake of the character of offenses we should discourage is evidenced by his telegram to President Taft of February 18, 1913:

I have the honor to inform you that I have overthrown this government, the forces are with me, and from now on peace and prosperity will reign.

Your obedient servant, VICTORIANO HUERTA,
Commander in Chief.

HUERTA'S RESENTMENT.

I doubt not that it was a surprise to the present dictator in Mexico that the American Government did not accord him the recognition which he expected and relied on. His claim that our Government's attitude does not reflect the real sentiments of the American people is a sour-grape consolation barren of real satisfaction. Powerless to resent this fatal blow to his pretensions, not daring to openly antagonize us, obviously the most natural channels of his wrath would be in a carefully studied policy of petty offenses designed to discommode and irritate us while covertly giving vent to his spleen. With a generosity born of the knowledge of our own strength and ability to take care of ourselves, and for the further reason that none of these acts up to this last involved assault upon the honor of our Nation, we ignored and appeared not to notice these petty aggravations. Under conditions of such subtle tormenting we conducted ourselves with a patience and restraint which excited the wonder of the world.

But it seems in the face of such remarkable self-restraint on our part that our forbearance has been construed as fear. Laboring under such misconception Huerta and his adherents have permitted their resentment to develop into contempt, a contempt that has evidenced itself by more than one outward expression. As a final insult to our Nation, when a small boat from the American fleet, flying the American flag from both its bow and stern, landed to procure supplies at Tampico the soldiers and representatives of Gen. Huerta placed under arrest the marines who landed, and after boarding the boat and arresting two others marched them through the streets of the city regardless of their humiliation. Though they were soon released, Huerta refuses to make full amends for the indignity shown the American flag and uniform. He declines to formally salute our flag in accordance with international proprieties governing such an offense, and thereby express to the people of Mexico and the world regret for the action of his officers.

OUR FORBEARANCE.

We have been exceedingly patient and considerate toward the warring elements in Mexico. Though this forbearance has cost our citizens millions of dollars; and though the press of European nations have persistently protested that we should interfere, restore order, and present our bill to the Mexican people, we have not done so because of a genuine affection for the unhappy people of that country. It is this regard for the people of Mexico that has restrained us when rapine and death and robbery have been visited upon the unfortunate citizens of our land tarrying in Mexico. We have believed that eventually the better elements in Mexico would triumph, restore law and order and constitutional government, and that the Republic to the south would assume its place among the law-abiding, liberty-loving peoples of the earth. We have kept our toes out of the way as much as possible. We have watchfully waited and hoped for the day of ending.

As the result of our anxiety to bring peace again to Mexico, our President sent a representative there suggesting the reestablishment of constitutional government—a government formally approved by the votes of the Mexican people. Not only was our representative refused reception in the spirit in which he was sent, but his suggestions were ignored. Despite this, we were still patient, controlled our temper, and were willing to await the outcome.

OUR DUTY TO OURSELVES.

If we are to maintain the respect of the world, we must say, firmly and deliberately, that we will not tolerate such an indignity to our flag. There is only one way in which Gen. Huerta can atone for this insult, and that is by showing our flag the respect he denied it. Let him salute our flag with 21 guns, and let that salute echo around the world, that the people of every land may know that though we are a patient and tolerant people, we deeply love and cherish the symbol of our Nation and will not overlook him who dares insult it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And then, Mr. Speaker, consider our moderation. Trying to act justly and wisely, despite the aggravation and insult to which we have been subjected, we do not declare war against Mexico, but say to Gen. Huerta, "You can atone for this insult by saluting our flag."

We have confidence in our President, and under this resolution we say, "You are justified in the action you are taking."

Mark you, we do not say to the President, "You are 'authorized' to use the armed forces of the United States," because the use of the word "authorized" would be declaring war, and it is not our intention to declare war; we do not want war, but we do most emphatically insist upon respect for both the flag and uniform of the United States from Huerta and his adherents and every other people.

Somebody has said that if England or Germany had insulted our flag we would not have answered them. I tell you, gentlemen, we should have answered them long ago. We would never have put up with from Germany or from England, or from any other country, what we have tolerated from Mexico. And why? Because we knew that unfortunate Republic was torn asunder with revolution and strife; because we knew her people, many of them, were in poverty; because we knew it was our duty to be patient and forbearing and lend every office possible toward bringing about peace in that unhappy country. And for those reasons we have stood all that it was possible to stand.

And now we say to Gen. Huerta and his adherents, "Salute our flag, treat us right, show our Nation the respect which it is deserving, and everything will be satisfactory. If you do not, we shall stand behind the President for the blockade of your ports, for the administration of such punishment as will in the future insure proper respect for the American uniform and the American Stars and Stripes." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask how much time there is remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] has 26 minutes remaining.

Mr. HEFLIN. How much time has the other side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 60 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 7.30 o'clock.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] objects.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has 26 minutes remaining.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I would like the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to use some of his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I wish first to read a telegram which came to me last night from a prominent citizen of Massachusetts, a gentleman well known in the movement for international peace. He says:

BOSTON, MASS., April 19, 1914.

Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT,
Washington, D. C.:

Incredible that for trivial point of punctilio announced this great Christian power on Sunday should threaten war on a feeble people, with almost irresponsible government. It would be abdication of international reason and leadership. Christendom would stand aghast. Consider England's noble course over vastly greater Dogger Bank indignity and Germany's over Casablanca. Urge this strongly to-day. Large meeting of Boston citizens last night unanimously condemned this wild war talk.

That is signed by Edwin D. Mead. This gentleman is probably a "peace-at-any-price" man. I do not want to be known as such. If my country should be invaded, if your country and mine should be attacked, if some responsible government should offer a wanton and intentional insult to my country and the American flag, I would be ready, although my hair is gray, to fight for my country. [Applause.]

But, of course, you will all admit that nothing of this kind is at stake in the present emergency. To me, and I trust to you all, this situation is very instructive in many respects. It shows how uncertain your peace is. We have always believed that war is declared by the Congress of the United States; that the right to call upon the armed forces of the United States to defend our flag is reserved to Congress. We find now that this is not true. We see from this incident that a petty officer somewhere in the world can embroil us in war, and that we are only called upon to sanction and to ratify what that officer has already done, because it is those men who are committing us to a policy of war, and all we can do, I say again, is to ratify their action.

Is this not true, I ask you, in the present instance? The commander of the American forces at Tampico demanded the firing of 21 guns. The Mexican authorities apologized for the mistake that a petty officer had made. In fact, they apologized twice. It was done first by the commanding officer and then by Gen. Huerta himself; and then, in addition to that, they offered to fire 5 guns. But even that was not sufficient. Twenty-one guns are asked to be fired, in accordance with the judgment formed in a minute, in a second, you may say, by the commanding officer down there, and our country and this Congress is asked to stand by the judgment of that one man.

It seems to me this is highly instructive; and I tell you, gentlemen, this situation to-day is the strongest argument that could possibly be made for the demands of the friends of peace, namely, that the peace of the people should be better secured; that it should not be dependent upon the whims of a ruler or the momentary impulse of a Naval or Army officer; but that it should be anchored by international agreements to arbitrate differences.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Can the gentleman give me a few minutes more?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The peace of the world should be founded upon the rock of law, so that it might not be disturbed by any incidents of a trivial nature such as the Tampico affair.

Now, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in the one minute left to me I want to offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker. The President himself said that he did not wish this to be understood as a declaration of war. I believe in his sincerity. I also believe in the sincerity of the Secretary of State when he advocates the cause of peace. And therefore, if you want to make sure that this is not a declaration of war, it is absolutely necessary for you to insert the words I am going to mention as an amendment to this resolution. I propose that after the word "employment," in the third line of the resolution, the words "within the limit of his constitutional powers" be inserted.

The passage of this resolution would mean the approval by Congress of what the President is doing, but yet the President would act only within the authority already granted him by the Constitution; and the only additional authority, by the way, that could be granted would be in a declaration of war passed by Congress. [Applause.] Therefore, if you want to make sure you do not declare war, it is absolutely essential that you adopt this amendment, and probably your resolution might have easier sailing if you accede to my suggestion in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, I offer as an amendment, after the word "employment" to insert the words "within the limits of his constitutional powers."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] offers an amendment. Under the agreement as announced by the Chair the amendment will be considered as pending, and will be voted on at the conclusion of the debate.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS].

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the President of the United States has the constitutional right to do what, an hour ago from that stand, he said he was going to do. But he has come here and asked that we justify his action. It is an international question; and for the simple reason that I believe America should stand with solid front before all the world, I believe it is our duty here to sustain and to justify the action which the President proposes to take.

I am for this resolution for another reason: For years in Mexico, and especially in the northern part of Mexico, but I believe in all parts of Mexico, a most deplorable state of affairs has prevailed. American interests have been injured, American citizenship has been violated, American property has been destroyed, our Government has been flouted and our flag insulted, women have been outraged, children have been slaughtered. War is carried on in utter savagery and the country given over to the lawlessness and brutality of strolling bandit bands. Prisoners of war are taken and set up against an adobe wall and executed. I think the time has long since come when this country, as a great Christian nation, should have laid its strong hand upon such horrible conditions and put a stop to such a state of affairs in the interest of a common humanity.

I do not believe that the incidents which are at the base of this proposition would, if considered alone, be sufficient cause. I believe that only a strained, fantastic, punctilious notion of honor would require us to use force in such a case; yet, as the culmination of a long series of outrages not only against American citizenship but against humanity, the duty is placed upon this Nation of restoring order and peace, at least to the extent that those revolutionary bands must conduct their warfare according to civilized rules. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I propose to vote for this resolution, believing that when it comes to international questions it is the solemn duty of the American Congress to support the President of the United States, whoever he is, in the discharge of his constitutional duty. [Applause.]

I am supporting the President in a difficult situation. I would favor war only as the last resort. The President wants war no more than I do. The country wants no war. The resolution is not a declaration of war. It is rather a declaration that the patience of this Government is worn out, and will serve as a caution that transgressions upon the dignity of the United States Government and her citizenship will be tolerated no longer.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, this is a solemn occasion—too solemn for partisan politics, and yet some gentlemen on the Republican side have lugged into this discussion the claptrap rubbish of political desperadoes, so thirsty for the fountains of political power, so hungry for a return of the emoluments of Republican control, and so dead to the demands of patriotic duty that they are willing to embarrass the administration, slander the President, brook indignities upon our soldiers and insults upon our flag in order to make political capital, to gain partisan advantage. [Applause.] Away with such disgusting, measly, and contemptible politics.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the self-appointed captain of the home guard, in his effort to bolster up the remaining remnant of the old boss-ridden party of privilege, has exhibited bad judgment and displayed an un-American spirit in his attack on the President to-day. The country will condemn his course. The minority leader of the Republican Party in this House [Mr. MANN] in his effort to play politics has tried to commit his party to a policy that would damn it in the estimation of right-thinking men and patriotic citizens all over the country. [Applause.] He undertakes to excuse his blunder and his un-American conduct on the unfounded assumption that the President wants to go to war because he has a personal grievance against Huerta.

The gentleman now seeks to shackle the feet and manacle the hands of a Democratic President when our dignity and honor are at stake, when our soldiers are humiliated and our flag insulted by the ungodly and brutal tyrant of Mexico. [Applause.] The gentleman now makes mean insinuations about the motives that prompt this peace-loving, patriotic, Democratic President to uphold the dignity and honor of the American Union. How different was the conduct of the gentleman from Illinois 16 years ago when Mr. McKinley, a Republican President, requested Congress to appropriate money to be used in the event of war with Spain. Here is what the gentleman said then:

> This country, upon the suggestion of the administration, is now justified in spending its money as necessary, its blood as may be called upon—> for the purpose * * * of upholding the honor and the dignity of the country.
>
> And so forth—
>

Mr. Speaker, would you believe that this Republican Member of Congress who 16 years ago was willing to spend the money of the Government, aye, and the blood of her soldiers, upon the mere suggestion of a Republican administration, in "upholding the honor and the dignity of the country" would to-day reverse his position when a Democratic President asks Congress to stand by him in his efforts to uphold the honor and the dignity of that same glorious country? [Applause.] And yet that is the unenviable attitude of the gentleman from Illinois. Some of these same Republicans have criticized the President because he has refrained so long from taking a hand in Mexican affairs. They have denounced his policy of watchful waiting and urged that he should put an end to the terrible conditions in Mexico; and now, when our country, without any fault on her part, is insulted by the self-constituted authority of a murderous and drunken tyrant, the President is criticized and abused by men who in their desire to serve their party prove faithless to their country. [Applause.]

The President has been using every good office in his power to bring about peace and order in Mexico. He has been hoping and praying that right would prevail and constitutional liberty would triumph. [Applause.] But, Mr. Speaker, his good offices have been rejected and his policy of watchful waiting has been interpreted to mean fear and cowardice; and now, as the climax of Huerta's brutality and infamy toward this Government, American soldiers, carrying the United States mail, are arrested and placed in Mexican prisons, and the tyrant ruler in authority over the officers who committed that crime against the Government of the United States and insulted our flag has flatly refused to make proper apology for the great wrong that he has done.

Mr. Speaker, now that the President of the United States—the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy—has found conditions serious enough to send battleships to Mexican waters, it is the duty of every Member of Congress and of every patriotic American citizen to stand faithfully by him as he goes to uphold the dignity and the honor of this, the greatest Government on the globe. [Applause.]

And let me say to gentlemen who would embarrass the President and give comfort to the enemy who has insulted the flag, in your contemptible game of politics you are dallying with a dangerous question. The President of the United States is enthroned in the love and confidence of the American people, and whatever he does now will be done from a sense of duty and to the highest and best interest of liberty-loving people in Mexico and to the honor and glory of the American Republic. [Applause.] And then, Mr. Speaker, the flag that represents the manhood and the womanhood of the greatest race of people on the globe, that represents the courage and Christian virtues of a peace-loving, patriotic people, will command the respect and admiration of civilized people the world over. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas and others have said that they were for this resolution because they want to follow the flag. Now, we all want to follow the flag; and I do not like this assumption of a superior and exclusive patriotism; but the question to-day is not, Shall we follow the flag? but the question is, Where shall that flag go?

It is our duty as Representatives in Congress not simply to make a show of patriotism and do what is popular, but it is our duty, and perhaps quite as patriotic, to determine calmly and judicially whether it is right to declare war to-day. Shall we yield to the easy and popular fervor of war, or shall we control ourselves and weigh the justice of our cause?

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says that it is a question of honor. The President disclosed to us exactly what the question of honor was. He described the arrest of the boat crew, which he said was the culmination of other insults, and he pointed out two others, and I assume that he made his case as strong as he could. Both of them were trivial, and yet upon those grounds he says it is a question of honor for us to go to war; that in no other way can our dignity be maintained.

Mr. Speaker, we are a great and rich and powerful Nation, and compared with us Mexico at her best is weak and she is now torn by civil war. When a great, strong man thinks he is injured by a child, and a maimed and crippled child at that, would it be a question of honor for him to extort from the child an extreme apology?

Huerta, against whom personally this resolution is directed, apologized. No harm at all was done to our men. Is it a point of honor for this great Nation to demand from him a further apology? If 21 guns had been fired, answering 21, our honor would have been satisfied and there would have been no war, but we could not allow them to be fired and answered one by one and because of that distinction there must be war. On such technical trivial grounds as that this great Republic of the United States is asked to declare war against poor, suffering Mexico. Between two equal Nations it might be thought cowardice not to insist on extreme etiquette, but against weak Mexico no one would charge us with timidity. All would see it was magnanimity, not fear.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution declares war. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] claimed that it was not war, but he admitted in answer to my questions that it justified a blockade. We can not stop vessels from going to Mexico, as I understand is the intention, and so cut Huerta off from supplies from the outside world without an act of war. This means war with all its horrors and responsibilities. I had hoped the day was forever past when this country would engage in war for a mere punctilio from pride or passion. I had hoped we had become sincere leaders in the noble cause of international peace and arbitration and looked on bloodshed over points of etiquette as barbarous and outgrown, particularly with our weaker sisters on this continent, and now for us to declare war against a weak, distracted nation, which can not possibly strike back on such a pitiful pretext, fills me with regret and disappointment. It seems to turn back the wheels of progress a generation.

The gentleman who preceded me [Mr. HEFLIN] said he regretted to have politics enter. The only political reference I have heard was by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], who said the elections next fall will justify this resolution. That may well be, Mr. Speaker.

War always excites fervor and enthusiasm and is helpful to the party in power. It may be wise to pass this resolution for the elections next fall, and so sustain the weakening administration; but we ought to have the courage and wisdom to look to the future and not simply to temporary popularity. The question is, Will history approve this action? I venture to predict that whatever may be the immediate results, history will censure and condemn the men who to-day, on this pitiable pretext, vote for war against distracted Mexico.

What is the real reason for this action? Why is it that we are in this condition? It is because the President, instead of following out his own precept enunciated to-day, that we have no right to mix in the domestic affairs of Mexico, long ago declared that there was one man in Mexico, no matter whether the Mexicans wanted him or not, who should not be President.

It was a wrong, untenable position—a position which the United States had no right to take, a position which we had no right to enforce upon Mexico. It is a mingling in her domestic affairs, to which no proud nation would submit, and which no self-respecting nation ought to assume. We are the older brother. We ought to exercise friendliness, kindness, toward this suffering nation to the south of us. If we were to take the position that their country was torn by conflicts, that Americans were killed, that property was devastated, that anarchy was imminent, and that some strong power must enter and bring about permanent peace for the good of all, that would at least be comprehensive and intelligible. But it seems to me unworthy of a great, powerful nation which aspires to be a leader in civilization and humanity to declare war against a weak and powerless neighbor on grounds of mere technicality and offended pride.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, several Representatives who have preceded me have, without qualification, spoken of the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs as "a declaration of war." It is not a declaration of war. If it were I should not have voted in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I am a member, to report out the resolution, nor would I vote for it here on the floor of the House. This is what the resolution is: It declares that the people of the United States, through the citizens they have elected to represent them here in Congress, justify the President in resenting the insults to the Stars and Stripes, resent the slights and indignities offered to the honor of our country. Is there anyone here who does not justify the President in so doing? Is there one Representative here who will say that the honor and dignity of our country need not be maintained; that insults to our glorious flag need not be resented? Sir, I hope not!

Representatives have declared here this evening, as I have said, that this is a declaration of war. Why not adopt the simple plan of looking into the resolution itself for its real meaning, its intent?

In the copy of the resolution I hold in my hand there are 7 lines of typewriting containing less than 70 words, and every word in every line was carefully studied by our committee this afternoon, and I say there is nothing in any of them which befogs the very clear meaning of them all.

Exactly what does this resolution declare? War? Let us see. I quote:

> The President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States—

To do what, Mr. Speaker?

> to enforce demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by—

By whom, sir? By the Republic of Mexico? By the Mexican people? No!

> Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

That is all. There is no confusion there. It is all very plain and explicit, as it should be. This Government has suffered "affronts and indignities," has suffered them during a period of more than a year, during which time the people of this country have exercised patience and forbearance. The time has come when patience has ceased to be a virtue; that time came when the Navy of the United States, the uniform of men in our armed forces—aye! when the flag of our country—were insulted.

To-day the Congress tells the President that it "justifies" him in using armed forces against the man and his representatives—Gen. Huerta and his army—who have been guilty of these affronts. The President will teach Huerta and his army a needed lesson in respect, decency, and good manners. That is not war; it is wholesome discipline. It is necessary; our flag is a sacred emblem; Huerta must not raise impious hands against it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANTOR and several other gentlemen rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to any further requests. If we can not have time to discuss it now, we can not discuss it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects to any further requests.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a good deal of the discussion upon this resolution has dealt with a side issue which is in no sense involved in the sound construction of the measure. The language of the resolution is:

> That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States,

And so forth.

Many gentlemen on both sides of the aisle have objected to the use of that word "justified." They have felt that it implied an indorsement, a vindication, a verdict of approval of everything that had been done in Mexico, or perhaps even of what might be done in the future; and they hesitated, and not unnaturally, to indorse unreservedly every act that had been done or that could be done across the Rio Grande. But what does "justified," in fact, mean in this resolution? Of course, we must here seek, not for the popular meaning of the word, but for the meaning which is given it in international law. The definition which is given to the word "justify" in the law books is:

> To show to have had a sufficient legal reason for an act.

This resolution was very carefully drawn, I understand, by the law officers of the State Department, and, of course, they used that word in the sense in which it is used among international lawyers.

There is a further reason why the word can not receive its ordinary popular meaning: This resolution clearly points to the future, and it is obvious that "justification" in the popular sense deals with events which are already passed. There can, therefore, for these two reasons, be no doubt that the President in coming before us to-day is simply asking us to show to the world—to adapt the language of the definition—that in what he is about to do in Mexico he will, beyond the shadow of a doubt, have "a sufficient legal reason for his acts." He wants to be able to say to the world that, although in fact he probably has the right under the Constitution—by virtue of the clause which makes him Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy—yet in a potentially great question of this kind he also has every shadow of justification and of authority with which the Congress can clothe him. Can we, as patriotic men, rightfully or properly refuse him this thing which he has just come in person to ask us to give him?

Nineteen years ago, when last there was a Democratic President in the White House, a somewhat analogous question was presented. Mr. Cleveland sent a message to Congress on the 17th day of December, 1895, asking that Congress should do his will in connection with the Venezuela boundary dispute that was then pending. I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 18, 1895, the following day, setting forth the debate upon the resolution which gave effect to the President's wishes. The entire debate took something less than three columns of the RECORD. At the end of that time the Democratic President was given by the Republican House precisely what he had asked for without one dissenting vote.

The announcement of that splendid result was received with loud applause on both sides of the House.

In questions of this sort a man's preferences ofttimes must be subordinated to the judgment of the Executive, which is charged primarily with the administration of foreign questions. It has often and truly been said in this House that party lines stop at the frontier. This resolution is not a declaration of war; indeed, it is carefully so framed as to avoid any such implication. It is, on the contrary, a step designed by the President in the light of his best and most mature judgment to avoid war. This he has told us to-day with his own lips. I believe it is the clear and manifest duty of every man in this House to stand with and by our President. We should present a united front to Mexico and to the whole world. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MACDONALD].

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, if the resolution which we are now considering should be brought in here reading, "That the President of the United States is not justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against the Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives," I dare say that there would not be a single affirmative vote recorded upon the floor of this House. [Applause.] That is in effect just what we are doing when we vote against this present resolution. The President of the United States is charged with the high duty of guarding for the people the honor and dignity of the Nation. He is the President of the United States, not merely the leader of a party, and I believe no one will deny him credit for the highest patriotic motives and his ability and willingness to perform his duties with a full recognition of the solemnity of that responsibility. I believe that the action asked for by the President will do more to prevent war than any other step that we could take, and it is in that belief that I am desirous of recording my vote and my voice in favor of this resolution. [Applause.] A great deal has been said here about the smallness of the adversary. It is well known to gentlemen upon the floor of this House that there are forces extant in the world to-day that are greater than any organized government, and we do not know what forces of this kind are moving in Mexico which add embarrassment to the situation of the President and his advisers. We do know that he comes to us to-day, in a crisis that affects the welfare and honor of the people of this country, and demands, as he has the right to demand, the united support of the American Congress, and I, for one, hope that the message will be carried to Gen. Huerta that to a man the American people are standing behind the President. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and following the precedent of the leader of the minority, who allowed several a few moments ago to make this request, and when there were several others of us on our feet desiring to make that request, he objected.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why does not the gentleman ask now?

Mr. ELDER. I will attend to that in a moment. I was making the request a moment ago, when the leader of the minority, after allowing some Members, then objected; and as the leader does not make the objection now, I shall make it for him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, I made objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana objects.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I regret and resent the fact that there has been a certain amount of partisan politics injected into this very serious discussion. The question at issue is far away and above any political consideration or any question of party advantage. I, for my part, have believed it my duty as a man not bound by party ties to stand by the President of the United States whenever I could, simply because the President of the United States is in power and has the responsibility of representing the whole United States, the dignity of its people, and has the opportunity to push forward policies that lead to the betterment of our country by carrying on the march of progress and reform. My loyal support has been given the more freely because of the respect I have for the man, in addition to the respect due the office. At this time I regret exceedingly that I can not agree with the President. In all other great questions I have believed with him, and therefore have supported him. He has had my respect and my loyalty and will still have both, but I should be false to my deepest convictions if my respect and my loyalty could swerve me at this juncture.

I, too, stand for the national honor, and I stand for the national honor in its highest possible sense, because I stand for international peace. I stand, and shall stand, against the crazy, old, barbaric idea of going to war on slight pretext, even though that pretext may be clothed in the stolen habiliments of national honor, or may be premised upon a defense of the flag when that flag is not in jeopardy. I would never for a moment deny the last drop of my blood or the Nation's blood to save this country from foreign aggression; but to believe that the national honor of the United States is in the keeping of any foreigner, and especially in the keeping of a man who has been authoritatively called a "bandit," is beyond my comprehension.

This man Huerta, who has been branded as a bandit, a traitor, and a murderer by our Government, has been asked to make an apology, an apology as head of a responsible nation, and this demand has come to us through a subordinate in the Navy. What absurd logic is this that we are called upon to indorse. The man whom we do not recognize as the responsible head of the Mexican Government has apologized, the man who committed the offense of arresting American sailors has been punished, and now because, forsooth, a little more gunpowder will not be burned than this particular naval officer thought ought to be burned, we are declaring war. This resolution means war, and nothing short of it. This is no declaration of peace. This is not a declaration against one man. It is to every man who knows Mexico a declaration of war against the whole people of Mexico, and nothing else; for the moment we put armed forces into Mexico all the tides of racial antipathy will rise, all the old historic bitterness will be revived, and we shall find that we shall have to take the country and rule it. It is all very well to say this resolution is in the interest of peace, but I, who have been in Mexico and know the people of Mexico, know how jealous they are of the aggressions of what they are pleased to call us—the gringos. Before we get through with the spanking of this man whom we do not recognize even as spankable, we shall have upon us all the horrors, all the heartbreaks, all the waste and loss that will come of war. I believe as firmly as I stand here that by voting for armed intervention in Mexico we are condemning to death many of our own citizens who, without the passage of this resolution, would live happy lives. I can see no use or excuse at this time for picking trouble, for declaring war, on any such a petty or trivial basis as has been given. [Applause.] The honor of our flag is no more in the keeping of Mr. Huerta than it is in the keeping of a Papuan cannibal who might have eaten an American missionary who had a flag in his valise. The honor of the flag is involved in preserving a just peace in the world, in minding our own affairs, and in promoting the welfare of our own people along the lines of self-governing democracy and equalized economic opportunity. This is no case, in my opinion, to authorize intervention, to authorize the murder of American citizens in a useless war, for a useless war is murder, for which we collectively and each of us must assume responsibility.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to no Member of this House in love and devotion to my country's flag. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have hoped that it might always float high in the heavens—an emblem of peace and an inspiration to the oppressed of every land. The honor of my country is just as dear to me as it is to any Member of this House. I shall be as prompt as anyone to defend my country's honor. But what is the situation that confronts us? Read the resolution that has been reported to this House from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It says:

Resolved, etc., That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

The resolution does not contemplate the enforcement of demands against Mexico.

All the powers of the United States are to be brought to enforce our demands upon one individual. And yet, what is the situation in Mexico? Huerta has 18 of the 27 States of Mexico giving him their allegiance besides the 4 territories and the Federal district. There are 12,000,000 people of the 18,000,000 population of Mexico who acknowledge allegiance to him. Does any Member of this House believe that you can begin a conflict with Huerta without embroiling all those who acknowledge allegiance to him? It is preposterous to think so. This resolution means war. It means tearing from the loving wife the devoted husband, from the babbling children the indulgent father, and to the old parents who depend upon their son for support and livelihood in their declining years, possibly—yes, probably—the sacrifice of that son's life. And all for what? I doubt whether many of the Members here present realize the full solemnity of this hour. The unseemly laughter that has been manifested at times during this debate would indicate to me at least that the sacrifices that this resolution will entail are not fully appreciated on this floor. Yes, sacrifices of blood, of limb, of life itself. For what? It is claimed that Huerta has offended us repeatedly. Has he been more culpable in that regard than Villa or Carranza? What are the facts with regard to Mexico? If the newspaper accounts are correct, I recall when this Government requested information from Carranza as to what had been done with Benton, an English citizen, who was murdered by the so-called Constitutionalists. And what was the reply from that faction in Mexico?

"Attend to your own business. Mind your own affairs. If England wants information we will give it to her. He was her citizen. It is none of your business what we do with nationals other than your own." And we meekly pocketed the affront. Villa and his bandits have raped and looted and murdered American citizens. But no effort has been put forth by the administration to "get Villa." No; the embargo against the admission of arms and ammunition into Mexico was removed so as to make his path to murder and plunder easier and more effective. There has been no protest from this administration against the acts of violence performed by these worthies. But Huerta must be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that this "blockade," of which we have heard so much, may not result in war. But I can see no other outcome if this resolution shall be adopted in its present form. Why, what did the distinguished leader of the majority on the floor of this House say to-day upon that very subject? Listen to his statement:

With the message of the President of the United States having been delivered, our troops may be fired on at any moment.

That was his language on the floor of this House this afternoon. We may not desire war, but, Mr. Speaker, the federals of Mexico are just as fond and just as proud of their flag and their country's honor as we are of our flag and our country's honor. Does anyone believe that they will submit to a blockade of their ports without resentment? Why, such a belief is simple fatuity. They will fire upon us the moment we begin that blockade. In fact, such a blockade is nothing less than an act of war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Sir, when the Army appropriation bill was under discussion on February 26 last, I predicted that if the administration persisted in its policy of "watchful waiting" armed intervention would result inevitably. Scarcely two months have rolled by since then, and we are on the very verge of intervention. Had we refused to interfere in the internal affairs of a friendly nation all of this difficulty would have been avoided.

But the administration rather preferred to favor Villa and Carranza—at least to the extent of giving them aid and comfort by removing the embargo on arms. I feel the pending resolution will pass. I feel it means war. And I feel that before the war is over the very arms and ammunition that have been sent into Mexico from these United States will be used to destroy the lives of hundreds of our young men in the impending struggle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I approach this question not as a Republican or a Democrat, but as an American. I come from a fighting race. [Applause.] I would do anything on earth to preserve the honor of the American flag, even to giving the last drop of blood that I have in me.

The resolution that we have before us means war. Now the question is, Do we want war? And are we to have war with anything less than a nation? I have never been able to bring myself to believe that anything short of a nation could insult a nation to such an extent as to provoke that nation to a declaration of war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The question we have before us is, Shall we declare war against Gen. Huerta? not Shall we declare war against Mexico? Shall we preserve the national honor? Has the national honor been insulted? Have we anything to protect in the shape of national honor in this case? Our men were arrested on the streets of Tampico, it is true, by a subordinate officer of the Mexican army. But a superior of that subordinate directed the release of these men, and the man who made the arrest was arrested himself and punished for the arrest that he had made.

Now, the question is, after they apologized for the insult, so called, Are we still to believe that the national honor has not been appeased? There is no man living who has more respect for the American flag than I. All the people of my family who were able to defend it in the days of its direst need fought the battles for the preservation of the Union. [Applause.] And I would be willing, as I said a moment ago, to give the last drop of blood I have in me to preserve its honor and to preserve the honor of the Nation. But war means widows; it means orphans; it means devastation, destruction of property, maimed men; it means the shedding of the blood of our best youth, and bleaching their bones on the plains of Mexico. Are we ready for such a conflict for such a trivial cause? Are we ready for the reasons alleged to send our boys to the plains of Mexico and allow their bones to lie there bleaching in a southern sun? Are we ready to make widows and orphans and cripples everywhere throughout this land?

I say preserve the honor of the Nation by every means at our command, but we have no cause for war here; no cause whatever. I believe that we ought to sustain the President in everything he tries to do for the preservation of the honor of the Nation, and I would be the last man to criticize him for anything he does or leaves undone. But I believe that this matter can be settled without war, and that the adoption of this resolution at this time is not only not necessary but not justified. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, 78 years ago to-night, along the banks of the little stream San Jacinto, in what was then northern Mexico, there were encamped some 740 grim and determined pioneers who had fresh in their minds the memories of the Alamo, with all its slaughter and its horror, and on the opposite side, or right near them, there were encamped more than 1,400 Mexican soldiers under the leadership of Santa Ana, a dictator then, as there is a dictator now. The next day, on April 21, 1836, with the words "Remember the Alamo" on their lips and the homes and the lives and well-being of their wives and families burdening their hearts, those 740 Texans charged the ranks of the 1,400 Mexicans and forever wiped out Mexican sovereignty over the territory north of the Rio Grande, and then and there was born the Republic of Texas, soon to become the Lone Star State of Texas. [Applause.]

Those men then stood and fought for American ideals, for American manhood, and laid the ground for a broader citizenship and at the same time reclaimed an empire from the dominion of outlaws and bandits. They had fresh in their minds the fall of Travis, Bowie, Crockett, Bonham, Fannin, and other heroic defenders of the Alamo—

Thou new world's glorious Thermopylæ.

They fought like men, like Americans, facing unrestrained perpetrators of crime, rapine, arson, and murder.

To-day we are called upon to confront the same enemy. We know of the crimes, the murders, the wanton destruction of lives and property all over Mexico in which American citizens and citizens of the world have suffered in every conceivable way, but as yet there is no Alamo to freshen and quicken our demand for vengeance and reparation. We have not yet a battle cry "Remember the Alamo" nor "Remember the Maine." No warship has yet been blown up with its hundreds of brave souls sent into eternity. But we know all that has gone on, and the people know. It is not necessary for the President to present a prayer for vengeance or for us to pass a resolution here that will unnecessarily inflame the public mind.

It is our duty to preserve the peace of the world and the well-being of the men, women, and children, both American and foreign, who are sojourning in Mexico. Shall we wait for wholesale bloodshed to pass a resolution letting the dictator know our purpose? Shall we refuse to turn our hand to determined and definite preparation for any situation that may arise till our sailors, our marines, our officers are slaughtered in a Mexican massacre or a ship is sent to join the Maine in the ocean's depth?

We have the same fundamental grievances, thought not so pronounced, as had the Texans on April 21, 1836, at San Jacinto, or as had the Spanish-American Army of 1898; but, thank God, those fundamental grievances have not yet been crystallized into one concrete act of wholesale destruction or murder.

It is not necessary for the resolution to recite the insults and the awful conditions that prevail. This resolution leaves the only remaining hope for peace, as a door that is open.

Consider, gentlemen, the attempts Huerta has made to embroil us in foreign complications. Will we wait for him to make his cessions to those who would get a hold on the Pacific? I am glad to give the President more power; I am glad to hold up his hands, and to couch the resolution in words that make it yet possible for the Huerta organization to elect peace, if willing to have peace. I know that a blockade by the Navy is an act of war, and that the blockade can not continue long without a clash at arms. But it is plain to me that it is our duty to preserve order in Mexico, and that if we do not do our duty in this matter some other nation will act on its own initiative and the complications will be more pronounced.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the leader of the minority is on the floor. Just a few minutes ago, after allowing something like a dozen Members to extend their remarks, he then objected to the remaining few who were on the floor. I notice that he now sits silent in his seat and allows one of the Republican Members to extend his remarks. However, I shall not object.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not object to the extension of remarks of those who spoke.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I have been against intervention in Mexico all along. I am against intervention in Mexico now. Nevertheless, I should be willing to vote for a resolution approving the use of our armed forces to extricate us from the situation in which we now find ourselves. But the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee tells us that this resolution justifies the President's course. In reply to my inquiry as to the significance of the word "justify," as used in this resolution, the chairman of the committee stated on the floor of this House that any man who votes "aye" must be interpreted as voting to justify the President's course in this Tampico incident. I am ready to approve his use of our Army and Navy under the forced situation in which we find ourselves. I will not justify his course in the Tampico incident. I believe that of late he has been so criticized for his course in foreign affairs, in which, by the way, I supported him, that he has lost his usual good sense of proportion. It seems to me that in Mexico the President has strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I wish Mexico were a little nearer our size. In that case I should feel more like indulging in heroics, as does my friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], the leader of the Progressive Party, but there is no occasion for heroics in dealing with poor little Mexico. I can not agree with those gentlemen who feel that there is nothing for us to do except to approve the President's course now that our fleet is on its way to Mexico. If that doctrine is conclusive, what becomes of the exclusive right to declare war which the Constitution gives to Congress?

I propose to offer a resolution as a substitute for that which is pending. It differs from the resolution proposed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs principally because it does not undertake to justify the President's course in handling the Tampico matter. My resolution, without declaring war, lends the President our moral support if it becomes necessary to employ force to maintain respect for our flag. I send my resolution to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. POU). The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a resolution as a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution for approving the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States of America in maintaining the dignity of and respect for the flag of the United States of America.

Resolved, etc., That a situation has arisen with respect to our relations with certain persons in Mexico under which it may be necessary for the President to employ the armed forces of the United States of America to maintain the dignity of and respect for the flag of the United States, and such employment of armed forces within the limits of his constitutional powers is hereby approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The substitute will be considered as pending under the agreement, and the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE].

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, before I begin the remarks I wish to make I should like to read a passage from Senate Executive Document No. 35, of the Thirtieth Congress, first session, pages 9 and 10. It is an extract from a letter of Mr. de Souza, Brazilian minister of foreign affairs, to Mr. Leal, Brazilian chargé at Washington, dated May 31, 1847.

I should say also that this letter is quoted by John Bassett Moore in his great Digest of International Law—I think the second volume—in discussing the extent of the exemption from local jurisdiction enjoyed by warships in foreign territorial waters:

A few years since a marine of the English squadron was seized by the customhouse guards at Bahia in a boat of the brig of war to which he belonged, coming from a merchant ship, to which he had gone without license from the customhouse, and, agreeably to the law, he was confined in a customhouse vessel, to be kept there until he should have paid the fine incurred by him. The commander of the brig went on board the vessel and took him away—

Up to this point there is some approach to a parallel between the incident at Tampico and that described in this letter—

But the English commodore, on being informed of the circumstances, immediately caused the marine to be sent back to the customhouse vessel, and dispatched his next officer, in full uniform, to make an apology to the inspector of the customhouse, alleging that their officers were ignorant of the provision of the law and offering to pay the fine. This ample apology was received and the fine was remitted.

There is no incident in the Tampico affair that would correspond to the exercise of authority by the British officer in invading the Brazilian vessel. No officer of the American squadron at Tampico did that. What Admiral Mayo did do was to demand an apology, assurances that the offending Mexican officer should be punished, and a salute to the flag. The apology was made, the offending Mexican officer is said by those in authority to be under arrest, waiting trial, but the salute was not fired.

I wish that this matter had been left in the hands of Admiral Mayo, that it might have been a local incident. [Applause.] I regret that it was taken up through diplomatic channels and made an international affair.

Now, there are some things about this resolution that it seems to me ought to be discussed. I would not say one word that would either give comfort to Huerta or embarrass the United States in case war is inevitable. When war comes there is only one thing for an American to do, and that is to stand by his country [applause], but the question now is whether war is inevitable and whether this resolution will tend to bring it on or will tend to bring about a peaceful solution. The resolution itself is ambiguous.

Either it is intended to confer on the President of the United States authority that he does not now have or it is not intended to confer upon him such authority. If we intend to authorize him to do more than the powers given to the President by the Constitution permit him to do, there is only one thing that can be meant. The President has power to make such use of the armed forces of the United States as is necessary in the ordinary affairs of the Government. He has power to do everything, practically, short of making a declaration of war. If that is wanted, it must come from Congress. If that is not wanted or granted by this resolution, the President has all the power that he will have when the resolution has been passed.

Mr. Speaker, I very much favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] which would make the resolution read as follows, the phrase added by the amendment being in italics:

Resolved, etc., That the President is justified in the employment, within the limits of his constitutional powers, of armed forces of the United States to enforce demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, would it disturb the gentleman to ask him a question?

Mr. TEMPLE. Not at all.

Mr. GORDON. Why is any action of Congress necessary to authorize the President to exercise the powers already conferred upon him by the Constitution?

Mr. TEMPLE. That is a question I would like to have the President of the United States answer. [Laughter and applause.]

The President came to us saying in his message that there is no doubt that he could do what is necessary in the circumstances to enforce respect for our Government without recourse to the Congress and yet not exceed his constitutional powers as President; but he does not wish to act in so grave a matter except in close conference and cooperation with both the Senate and the House. If he has no doubt that he already has the power that he is now asking for, that he has all the power short of making war, then this resolution must be intended to be understood as a declaration of war. But we are assured by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], that it is not a declaration of war. We are told by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that this resolution may mean war and it may mean peace. That is my objection to it [applause], that it may mean war and it may mean peace. It is ambiguous, and this is no time for doubtful utterances.

The resolution that was adopted at the time of the disturbances in Cuba did not say that the President was justified in the use of the armed forces, and so forth. That resolution authorized and directed the use of the armed forces of the United States Government. Is that what is meant now? If we do not mean that, the President already has all the power that he can be supposed to have under this resolution. If it is a declaration of war, then we ought to authorize and direct the use of the armed forces. If it is not a declaration of war, then we ought to insert the language suggested by Dr. BARTHOLDT, that the President is justified in the employment of armed forces within the limits of his constitutional powers. It should be one thing or the other. We should send forth no ambiguous declaration. Who will respond in the day of battle when the trumpet sends forth an uncertain sound? The effect of this resolution justifying the President in the use of the armed forces will be to reopen negotiations with Huerta. The President can say to him, "I now have the Congress behind me to insist upon the salute."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. TEMPLE. And Mr. Huerta can reply to the demand with more quibbling. This is more of the policy of watchful waiting. If we intend war, this resolution does not mean business. If we do not intend war—and I, for one, do not want war—this resolution is unnecessary. The President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He has all military powers short of the power to declare war, and the Congress will hardly delegate to him that authority. It is Congress, and only Congress, that can declare war. Why ask Congress to share the responsibilities of the Executive? It has not been supposed that the President of the United States lacked the nerve to exercise his responsibility. Ordinarily he is willing to assume all the responsibilities that the Constitution or the laws have put upon his shoulders. Why not now? Will not the effect of this resolution be ambiguous? Will not men say that, whether we intended it or not, we have in fact declared war? Is there not a difference of opinion in the House itself as to the effect of this resolution? How, then, can we expect others to understand it clearly and without mistake? Let us insert the language suggested by Dr. BARTHOLDT, and thus make it plain that this resolution is not a declaration of war, or let us declare war plainly and begin it in earnest. [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields back three minutes and asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Sixteen minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, if the United States shall become involved in war with Mexico or any other nation, I stand ready to vote every dollar necessary to carry on that war.

Every patriotic citizen would approve the act, and no one would stop for a moment to inquire as to the right or wrong of the matter after the war had begun.

We are a country-loving, patriotic people, and millions of American citizens would not hesitate to offer themselves, their money, their lives, their all in the defense of the Nation and the Nation's honor.

But this is not the question before us now; that is, what we would or would not do in case of war.

The real question is whether or not we shall declare war.

We should consider the matter carefully, having in mind both the honor of the Nation and the effects that will come to our country.

National honor may consist as well in refusing to wage war without just cause as in engaging in war for good and sufficient reasons.

The resolution now under consideration reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States of America to enforce demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

The clear meaning of this resolution is simply this: That such affronts and indignities have been committed against the United States by Gen. Huerta and his followers that would justify war, and it authorizes the President to use the armed forces to enforce his demands.

This is, in effect, nothing less than a declaration of war, for we are told that as soon as the resolution is passed our war vessels will blockade the ports of Mexico.

What facts are offered as a justification for a declaration of war?

I shall let the President state the facts that have caused the introduction of this resolution:

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

"Gentlemen of the Congress, it is my duty to call your attention to a situation which has arisen in our dealings with Gen. Victoriano Huerta at Mexico City which calls for action, and to ask your advice and cooperation in acting upon it. On the 9th of April a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested by an officer and squad of men of the army of Gen. Huerta. Neither the paymaster nor any one of the boat's crew was armed. Two of the men were in the boat when the arrest took place, and were obliged to leave it and submit to be taken into custody, notwithstanding the fact that the boat carried, both at her bow and at her stern, the flag of the United States. The officer who made the arrest was proceeding up one of the streets of the town with his prisoners when met by an officer of higher authority, who ordered him to return to the landing and await orders; and within an hour and a half from the time of the arrest orders were received from the commander of the Huertista forces at Tampico for the release of the paymaster and his men. The release was followed by apologies from the commander and later by an expression of regret by Gen. Huerta himself. Gen. Huerta urged that martial law obtained at the time at Tampico; that orders had been issued that no one should be allowed to land at the Iturbide Bridge; and that our sailors had no right to land there. Our naval commanders at the port had not been notified of any such prohibition; and, even if they had been, the only justifiable course open to the local authorities would have been to request the paymaster and his crew to withdraw and to lodge a protest with the commanding officer of the fleet. Admiral Mayo regarded the arrest as so serious an affront that he was not satisfied with the apologies offered, but demanded that the flag of the United States be saluted with special ceremony by the military commander of the port.

"The incident can not be regarded as a trivial one, especially as two of the men arrested were taken from the boat itself—that is to say, from the territory of the United States—but had it stood by itself it might have been attributed to the ignorance or arrogance of a single officer. Unfortunately, it was not an isolated case. A series of incidents have recently occurred which can not but create the impression that the representatives of Gen. Huerta were willing to go out of their way to show disregard for the dignity and rights of this Government and felt perfectly safe in doing what they pleased, making free to show in many ways their irritation and contempt. A few days after the incident at Tampico an orderly from the U. S. S. Minnesota was arrested at Vera Cruz while ashore in uniform to obtain the ship's mail and was for a time thrown into jail. An official dispatch from this Government to its embassy at Mexico City was withheld by the authorities of the telegraphic service until peremptorily demanded by our chargé d'affaires in person."

It has been stated in this debate, and has not been denied, that the Government of which Huerta claims to be the head has caused no American citizen to suffer loss of life or property.

The bands of freebooters and cutthroats under Villa and Carranza and their adherents have inflicted many serious indignities upon our citizens.

Yet there has been no action taken to have reparation made in these matters, but the simple arrest of a few marines, although an apology was readily offered, is sufficient to cause us to declare war upon Huerta.

Do not be misled as to the cause of this action.

I know that there has been a strong feeling that our Government should take some action to protect our citizens in Mexico.

President Wilson evidently does not believe that Gen. Huerta has been responsible for any such indignities to American citizens or their property, because he makes no reference to them in his message.

I have heard it said frequently that our Nation should intervene in Mexico and put a stop to this warfare that is being waged there and restore order and good government.

The President does not think so, and he does not base his present action on such premises. In his message to-day he said:

> Mexico is torn by civil strife. * * * I believe that I speak for the American people when I say that we do not desire to control in any degree the affairs of our sister Republic.

This statement was received with loud applause from Senators and Congressmen.

Again, he said:

> The people of Mexico are entitled to settle their own domestic affairs in their own way, and we sincerely desire to respect their right. The present situation need have none of the grave implications of interference.

I have called attention to the fact that this resolution is not before us because of any indignities heaped upon American citizens either on account of loss of life, limb, or property. Neither is it prompted by any broad, humane spirit that grows out of a desire to restore order in Mexico, because the President expressly states that we should not interfere with the right of Mexico to settle her own domestic affairs.

The President was giving his reason to Congress for asking approval of his purpose to proceed against Huerta. It was his duty to present all the facts and make as strong a case for himself as possible.

He has failed to make his case. I can see that war will come; and I had earnestly hoped that the President would state reasons that would thoroughly justify our action.

REASON ASSIGNED FOR RESOLUTION.

What reason is assigned for presenting this resolution?

The President asks us to "justify the employment of the armed forces of the United States" upon the action of Huerta in refusing to salute the flag.

He urges this action, which will surely result in war, solely upon the ground that a few marines were arrested and one telegram was not promptly delivered.

A few marines were arrested on Mexican soil and detained an hour and a half. They were then released.

The officer making the arrest apologized for his action. Gen. Huerta immediately expressed his regret at the occurrence.

Admiral Mayo, of our Navy, was not satisfied with the apologies offered and demanded that a salute of 21 guns be fired. Huerta was willing to fire only 5 guns.

The President asks us to approve his purpose of forcing Huerta to fire 21 guns.

If 21 guns are fired, our national honor will be vindicated. If Huerta will fire only 5 guns, we must have war is the argument.

Thus, the difference of 16 guns, according to the advocates of this resolution, constitutes the difference between national honor and national dishonor.

It must be that the national honor has not been very seriously offended, as the President is willing to forgive every offense, to have every grievance settled, if Huerta will fire 21 guns as a salute.

Can any man justify war on such a reason as this?

A RIDICULOUS PROPOSITION.

This resolution is a declaration of war against an individual, Victoriano Huerta.

Nations deal with nations, not with individuals. This is the first time in the history of the world that a great nation has singled out an individual to make war on him, except in the single instance of Napoleon when the monarchs of Europe combined against him, fearing that monarchical government would be wiped from the face of the earth.

I am unwilling to elevate this usurper to the dignity of the great Napoleon.

President Wilson has refused to recognize him in an official capacity. So far as our Government is concerned, he has no official existence. He is simply a man, one individual.

Yet a nation of a hundred millions of people takes up arms against this man who has been denounced as a brigand simply because he refuses to salute the flag.

What dignity does it add to us? What sense of satisfaction can come to us simply because a brigand makes obeisance to us?

A PREDICTION AS TO ACTION OF THE SENATE.

The Senate will not commit itself to the absurd proposition of making war upon an individual.

The resolution will be materially changed. If war is to be waged on account of indignities and affronts offered in Mexico, I feel sure that the Senate will amend this resolution so as to state that fact.

Why not put the matter on some tenable ground here?

No, Mr. Speaker; it has been decreed here that we must pass this resolution just as it is written and trust the Senate to put it in different and better shape.

Every amendment, no matter how senible and meritorious it may be, will be voted down by the House; yet there will be no fight made here when the Senate whips it into better shape. It is our duty to perfect it now and not wait for another body to do it for us.

WHAT PROFITS THE SALUTE?

The inevitable result of the passage of this resolution is war. What do we gain by it?

Sixteen years ago, at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, we had a standing Army of about 30,000 men. To-day the Army numbers nearly 100,000 men.

Our Navy was maintained at a cost of about $30,000,000. To-day we expend annually for the Navy about $140,000,000.

About two-thirds of the revenue of the Government is spent in the payment of the expense of the Army, Navy, and pensions.

If a little war like the one with Spain has so enormously increased expenses, it is very probable that the increase of expense caused by war with Mexico will soon eat up the remaining one-third of the revenue.

Should this great burden be placed upon an already overtaxed people simply because Huerta, a brigand and outlaw, who is unworthy of recognition by our Government, as the President has declared, refuses to give a salute?

But, Mr. Speaker, there is much more to this matter than the question of expense.

When the old mother weeps for her son whose life has been lost in far-distant Mexico, will it be any comfort to her for some consoling friend to say, "Your son gave his life in an effort to force Huerta to fire a salute of 21 guns"?

When the wife looks upon the dead form of her husband, who has been killed by a Mexican bullet, will it relieve her aching heart to be told that he was sent into battle because Huerta refused to fire a salute of 21 guns?

When the orphan, cold, hungry, and homeless, perhaps, cries for the succor and protection of a loving father, can his wants be gratified and the little soul be consoled by the knowledge that the father was sacrificed simply because Huerta refused to fire a salute of 21 guns?

In the future, when some truthful historian writes the history of our country, will we feel our bosoms swell with pride when we see the reason assigned for this war that Huerta refused to fire a salute of 21 guns?

No, Mr. Speaker, the game is not worth the candle. The reasons assigned for this action are too trivial.

Bear in mind that if a salute of 21 guns is fired that our quarrel with Huerta will cease.

How absurd, how foolish, to predicate war upon such a matter.

A hurt that can be healed, an insult that can be salved by so slight a thing as a salute—a salute between nations corresponds to "good morning" between individuals—is too insignificant to be made the basis of war with all its attendant horrors.

WHO PROFITS FROM WAR?

The people do not profit from war. It not only means added financial burdens, but the cost in other ways is enormous.

Religion, education, and civilization all suffer. Families are separated, hearts are broken, want, suffering, and vice collect their full toll.

But, you say, there must be come profit for some one. There is a profit.

Who gets that profit? The railroad companies who convey the soldiers and supplies to the seat of war.

The Powder Trust that furnishes a large part of the munitions of war gets its profits.

The Steel Trust that furnishes armor plate and other necessary materials gets its profits.

The large corporations, with their enormous holdings of various kinds in Mexico, who are really anxious for this war, will get their profits.

The people are denied any profits, but are permitted to bear the burdens, endure the hardships, heartaches, misery, and woe that result from war.

MY VOTE WILL BE AGAINST RESOLUTION.

I shall vote against this resolution. As Congressmen, we have a duty to perform which the Constitution places on us.

It is for Congress to declare war under our Constitution. It is for us to say whether or not a cause for war exists.

In voting as I do I am not expressing my lack of confidence in the wisdom, intelligence, or patriotism of the President. I am simply passing on the facts, and am firmly of the opinion that a declaration of war upon the facts presented is wholly unjustifiable.

Mr. Speaker, when the weeping of the mother for her son is heard, when the cry of the widow and the wail of the orphan fill the land, I can say that it was not caused by my vote to require Huerta to fire a salute.

Whether my time in the land of the living be short or long, it will always be a matter of gratification to me that when I retire at night and commune with my God I can say, "O God, I thank Thee that Thou didst guide me in voting against a measure that was so useless and unjustifiable and that has brought so much misery and woe to so many poor hearts."

IF WAR COMES.

We are now considering one question and only one. That is, Shall we have war? To me war is wholly unjustifiable on the facts presented by the President.

It is certain that this resolution will pass, and it is equally certain that war will result.

When war comes a different situation will be presented. Then our liberties, our form of government, everything in our Nation and her history, of which we are so justly proud, will be at stake.

Then our duty will be plain. It will then be "Our country, right, or wrong, she must be defended."

And she will be defended. Every loyal son will respond to the call of duty, no matter what the cost.

When war comes, although I believe with all my heart and soul that it ought not to come, I shall be ready to perform my duty to my native land as freely and patriotically as those who favor war. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I fear that the gravity of the possible consequences of the action that we are about to take is being underestimated; but this is not the time to discuss that. On political questions I am a Republican. However, this is not a question of politics, but of patriotism. [Applause.] I have not approved of the so-called policy of "watchful waiting," but the President tells us, in effect, that what we are proposing to do will result in an end of that policy. I am opposed to war, if we can avoid it with honor. Our Army and Navy are composed of splendid young Americans. I would not see a single one of them sacrificed for all the Mexicans in Mexico. The President assures us that this resolution will aid him in preventing war, and that its adoption is necessary to that end. He, as the head of the Nation, is peculiarly charged with the highest responsibility in guiding us in such matters. I hope the time will never come when I can not take the personal word of the President of the United States on such a question. This resolution is not in the form that I would like to have it, and I reserve the right to vote for amendments to perfect it; but upon the main proposition, Mr. Speaker, I feel it my patriotic duty, under my oath of office, to follow the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy and to give him the support he says he needs to preserve the honor of our flag. [Applause.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, if our country becomes involved in war, whether due to its own negligence or because it is forced, or even if it be because of its own wrong, every true American would support the Nation to the limit; but we should exercise wisdom and keep out of war, if possible, so that, if it does come, it will not be due to our negligence or wantonness. We have not passed so far beyond the state of savagery as to have lost the fighting spirit, but I believe that we have developed beyond the point where we desire a condition of war; and, above all, we decry a petty or frivolous parade of patriotism in Congress or elsewhere.

Oh, Mexico—unhappy Mexico! The sympathy of the people of this country is with you. For years you have struggled for liberty, for a release from the state of oppression in which you found yourself.

According to the policy of the President, there is no lawfully constituted governmental authority in Mexico, and yet the President has gone so far as to practically declare war on a mob for the stated reason that it did not give a 21-gun salute, a frivolous demand sometimes practiced by civilized nations. A true American spirit has been witnessed in all of the volunteer forces brought out in times of crisis, but the snobbery and extra parade that often appears in the Regular Army and in the Navy is un-American. Of course we do not deceive ourselves into believing that the real reason for the proposed actions is stated in the President's message.

If the resolution were a declaration of war, I could not, for the cause stated in the President's message, vote for it. I further believe, affairs having reached the stage they now are in, we are sure to have war if this resolution is not passed, and I believe we are very likely to have war if it is passed. When a large fleet was dispatched to Mexican waters it practically meant war, for the Navy wants war. I further believe that if there is any way of averting war, it is to pass the resolution. I wish, however, to make it clear that while I am in Congress, clothed with the responsibility of representing a great district in a manner consistent with the national welfare, I am not in sympathy with supercilious claims for mere formal honors to place their observance above the peoples' general welfare.

I regret very much that the President backed up Admiral Mayo in the latter's demand for a more formal salute. I believe it was a grave mistake, but it is always easier to look back upon what has happened and criticize that it is to act.

The President at the time, of course, did what he then believed to be right. He dispatched a great fleet from our Navy to the Mexican waters as a result of his belief. Now he asks Congress to back him. If the President had come to Congress in advance for advice in regard to backing Admiral Mayo in the latter's demand for a more formal salute, as an apology, which had substantially been given by the arresting officer as well as by President Victoriano Huerta, I doubt that Congress would have backed the admiral's frivolous demand. But the President has acted. He has done what he had a constitutional power to do. He was elected President by the people. By virtue of his high office he is Commander in Chief of all the United States military forces. He sent a fleet to the Mexican waters. It is there now, and the President promises to make use of it in the interests of peace, and asks Congress to justify his act. Can we assume that the President, the constituted authority at the head of all the military forces of the United States—so elected by the people themselves, intends to do otherwise than what he says? I think not. He has already acted and we must ratify his act, since it does not appear that he intends to bring on war, but in his own language he proposes to prevent war. If we do not grant what he asks, I fear, with things now shaped as they are, we would find conditions very much more embarrassing. The passage of the resolution approving what the President has already done will not increase the probabilities of war nor will our voting against it save us from the resulting conditions. If the fleet were not already in Mexican waters, I think the resolution would tend toward war, but as things are now it depends upon what the fleet went down for. If it was sent down for the purpose of promoting peace, I think we still have a chance for peace, and if it went for war it will be war. With the fleet there, war can be provoked in spite of Congress.

The Bartholdt amendment to the resolution should pass, and I shall vote for it. I do not believe the President should have given so much dignity to Victoriano Huerta after having refused originally to recognize him. The President refused originally to recognize the provisional government of Mexico. By approving this act of Admiral Mayo's the Huerta government has been recognized.

The final wind-up of this whole Mexican situation is likely to lose us the respect of the world; but let that be as it may, though we can not idly disregard it, the important thing is to keep the respect of the American people. We can not possibly secure honor in war with Mexico. It would be no honor to our military forces to whip Mexico under any circumstances. We can get no honor out of any war that is not forced upon us, and certainly Mexico can not at this time force a war upon us unless we go to it. If we should foolishly go into Mexico and not get out as fast as we go in, it, like the Philippine Islands, will be another burden on our hands. War with Mexico means that progress in this country for the plain people will cease while the war lasts, and that is why the "special interests" want war with Mexico and staged things, so far as they could, to force a war.

I can not pass this most regrettable condition that we are in without some further consideration of our position as a nation in the world—a world power—and what it means. The results of Admiral Mayo's demand show what a dangerous thing it is to have a lot of military men hanging around in the different parts of the world who do not understand the true spirit of our people for which the American flag stands. I do not mean by this that the regular military men are less honorable in their motives than civilians, but they are trained in the arts of war and know little about the industrial conditions and the real purposes of government. They welcome the opportunity rather than regret the condition that brings on war.

THE AMERICAN FLAG IS NOT AN ENSIGN OF FRIVOLITY NOR A TOKEN OF SUBSIDY.

We have just passed through a consideration of the Panama Canal tolls question. The American flag was then, as it is now, unfurled and waved over the heads of the Congressmen and in front of the citizens of the country as a means of exciting sentiment.

If we were to use our heads instead of false sentiment as a guide in the settlement of international problems, our patriotism would mean more. In both the Panama Canal tolls question and in this Mexican affair, the "pirates of commerce" have unfurled the Stars and Stripes to excite a false spirit of patriotism instead of the true patriotism ever active in the bosoms of Americans who value the national honor. In the hearts of true Americans the American flag stands as an ensign of justice. It can not serve as a truce between greed and a square deal nor compel, at the expense of war, a second salute to sooth the injured feelings of a military officer. The Panama Canal was paid for out of the sweat of America's toilers, and ought not to be made the gateway for "black greed and commercial piracy." Nor should "commercial greed" govern us in the Mexican affair. The "commercial pirates" snatched from the hands of justice and held aloft the Stars and Stripes. It seeks to divert America's attention by the colors of her flag and the glories of its origin. It would have us think of creation—of the blue of heaven lighted by the constellations—of God in His infinite, and forget the devil while he undermines the foundation of national independence. The Stars and Stripes is the ensign of justice alone. America must determine what is real justice and unfurl the flag only in support of justice.

It is not the pride of military men nor militarism which we seek to satisfy. War is paid for by the people. It is the slavery and drudgery that follows war that is more damaging than war itself. We glorify the soldier. We appeal to his pride and to his patriotism. The country treats him as a hero, and he is a hero. We call the country to honor him when he proves to be a hero. But what of those who drudge year after year all through life to make up for the destruction of war? They are the ones who are entitled to our sympathy, and more especially our consideration. I would rather die in action amid the thunder of cannon than by the drudgery that war brings to those who pay the cost. We are safe here in this House. The most of us are safe from the burden that war would bring. Are we therefore to be indifferent to the men and women who would really pay the toll? It would be taken out of their daily earnings for the rest of their lives and out of their children's earnings. And what are we to gain? An enormous debt and the loss of valuable lives.

The Socialists' view of war is, in my judgment, the correct view. Every possible thing should be done to avert war; but if war arises out of conditions over which we have no control, then we must fight as true heroes and not as the followers of false honors. I consider the failure of the Mexican authorities to fire 21 guns an exceedingly trivial thing as compared with the real problem of war. I can not respect any officer who would imperil his country's welfare by an insistence for such a formal thing. I do not believe we had any business, in the first place, to mix up in the domestic affairs of Mexico. Certainly not any more than they would have in mixing in ours. What would be our answer to Mexico if it made any such pretense? We would be more impolite to Mexico than it has been to us. It has been a great mistake and I fear that it will be a most costly one.

I do not believe that we owe to our citizens nor to those of any other country protection for investments made in Mexico for speculative purposes. I would not ask my country to go to war to protect anyone's speculations. When men and women wish to enter foreign lands to speculate or to live there, let them take their chances. If they do not like what takes place, let them get out and, if necessary, sacrifice what they put in for speculation. I would have them do that and save the welfare of those of our people who remain in our own country. If these world seekers for wealth believe that they can find a better country to live in than our United States, let them become citizens of that country and get their protection from it. I would not have the people of this country make the sacrifices they are asked to make in order to help out the adventurous ones in their adventures, nor would I sacrifice our citizenship to interfere in the domestic management of other nations. The only way in which the Nation can acquire the greatness that the conditions justify is to consider those things as touching the honor of the Nation that make for the general welfare of the people.

WHAT ABOUT THE FACTS IN MEXICO?

Only in a limited degree does anyone know what has been taking place in Mexico. Sometime we may learn of the official acts that have been taking place on the part of our own Government, but of the acts of foreigners, including many of our own people and corporations whose stock is held by speculators here, in private speculative and adventurous undertakings in Mexico, and the detailed acts of Mexicans among themselves, we will never know.

Immense natural wealth exists in Mexico. There is a design followed by the most persistent active operations on the part of foreigners, as well as by a few of the Mexicans, to secure complete control of this natural wealth. Most of it had been secured and plans made to utilize it in the interests of the wealthy, but on account of the unstable government the wealthy have had a "hard row to hoe" in Mexico. Some of our shrewdest financiers and speculators, in alliance with like interests from other countries, are exploiting Mexico. In the struggle to secure all the natural wealth in that country it is the purpose of these wealth seekers to utilize the Mexican laboring classes—the peons—and to keep them at slavery wages. There are many conflicting interests contesting in Mexico for advantages, and in the struggle the ignorant peons are being ground and murdered between these different interests. These poor people of Mexico are made to believe that they are fighting these wars to gain freedom.

In this conflict to finally settle the problems the greatest of all human forces is being exerted. It is not the soldier, nor the bands of outlaws which overrun the country, nor is it the organized armies. It is public sentiment which will in the end control. This the "special interests" know and have made all arrangements in advance in the hopes to guide it in their way if they can.

The "special interests," Mexican as well as others, have had their "press agents" at work molding the "news"—that is, manufacturing it of the kind they wish to be published and where they wish. They control many of the great dailies, which publish the prepared statements. Small papers are not in a position to get the real facts. These, for lack of information, are forced to publish the manufactured news, not knowing whether it is false or true. No one with an eye to the situation doubts that millions of dollars have been spent by the "special interests" in our country for the very purpose of forcing the United States to intervene, in order to establish what they consider a stable government in Mexico. This they do in order to exploit Mexico and the Mexicans. They give not the slightest consideration to the sacrifice our country would make in such an undertaking.

The people of this country are not likely to continue running the Government for the "special interests" much longer or extend our Government into Mexico for that purpose. When the Government is in the interest of the people themselves, from that time the "special interests" will not want the United States to intervene where they have any hold.

Gen. Francisco Villa, President Victoriano Huerta, and many others are and have been pictured as butchers, and all the crimes known have been laid by the press at their doors. How many of these charges are true and how many are false we can not now tell, and shall never know very much about the truth of what has thus far taken place. If we go to war with Mexico, the whole of the burden will fall on the plain people of this country, to be taxed in this and future generations to them without gain in return. I sympathize with the President and the Secretary of State in their sincere desire to avoid armed conflict.

Under the leave to print, I now add to my remarks the following article, written by John Reed, who recently returned from Mexico, where he spent considerable time among the revolutionists as a war correspondent. He depicts the Mexican unrest and the probable effect of an American invasion that will cost our people perhaps billions in money and the blood of thousands of our best citizens for the benefit of speculators. I have talked with several persons who have been in Mexico, and those who have no "ax of their own to grind" have discussed the conditions in much the same light that Mr. Reed does. The Reed article is as follows:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The newspapers have managed to present pretty accurately what happened and where in the Mexican revolution, but they have not bothered with why.

James Creelman has told us that Huerta is a drunkard; he never told us that Huerta was one of the most inefficient field commanders the federal army ever had. We have been told all about Villa's once being a bandit—as if that had anything to do with the way he has done his job as a general and a governor. The correspondents have spoken of the Madero revolution, the Orozco revolution, the Carranza revolution, and the Zapata revolution, but there is and has been only one revolution in Mexico. It is very necessary at this time that the American people should know what the revolution is about.

It was at first purely and simply a fight for land. During the last 20 years of the Porfirio Diaz régime the landed aristocracy of Mexico, created originally by the Spanish land grants, slowly and definitely absorbed the open cattle ranges, the communal fields around the towns, the village commons, and, lastly, the small, independent farms that had been held sometimes by one family for three generations. Then the big hacendados banded together and secured the passage of the land law of 1896, which permitted the denunciation of all property in the Republic not secured by a legal title. Since most of the small holdings were occupied by illiterate peons, too ignorant to know anything about titles, and since in many cases their occupancy of the land had been undisturbed for generations, great tracts of fertile country passed into the hands of the hacendados. And for the tenants evicted by the aid of federal soldiers there was no alternative but to become slaves on great estates and no hope for the future.

PEONS AT LOWEST LEVEL.

The subjugation of the peons to the level of draft horses was deliberate. Often 500 to 1,000 families did the work of one hacienda, and everything was done to keep them in submission, physical contentment, and ignorance. Even public schools could not be established on the hacienda because it was "private property."

But land discontent among the peons had been smoldering since the Spanish crown gave Cortez a Province for a garden. The evicted farmers and the debauched and enslaved Indians—notably the Yaquis, whose case is the most tragic and shameful in the history of Mexico—could still remember with passionate longing the time when their fathers owned each his little ranch. Even the hacendados recognized that instinct of the peons, and allotted a tiny private field to each one, which he was allowed to work on Sundays. The rest of the week he rose at dawn and worked the immense farms of his employer until late at night. Sundays he rested by furiously working his own patch, and there were produced the best crops of the hacienda. Remember that the Mexicans are naturally a peaceful agricultural people and only take to banditry as a second choice.

There is a flood of books abroad in the land, of which Mr. Hamilton Fyfe's "The Real Mexico," or, better, "Mexico According to the London Times," is the best example. They tell you that the revolution is a revolution of the middle class, because it was stirred up by Francisco Madero. That is simply a lie. In the first place, there is no Mexican middle class. In the second place, the entire unrest of the peons had been described and predicted 10 years before the revolution broke out.

START OF THE REVOLUTIONS.

It was and is nothing but a revolution of the peons. And the first man who proposed any plan, no matter how inadequate, to remedy the land question was followed. Zapata rose in arms a year before Madero did, demanding confiscation and distribution of the great estates among the peons and political autonomy for two great States. Madero's proclamation to the Mexican people from prison at San Luis Potosi inflamed the peons only because he promised to acquire the big land monopolies and reapportion them among the poor. But when his government was established in Mexico City, either he became conservative or because of political pressure, he was unable to carry out his plans, or the time was too short; anyway, the situation remained the same, and the peons became discontented.

First, Zapata abandoned him and raised the standard of "War for the land"; then Orozco issued the plan of Tacubaya, in which he promised the peons free farms. In the twinkling of an eye the turbulent north rose in arms, but Orozco betrayed the peons. He had been bribed by the big landowners to embarrass Madero, whom they feared, and never intended to settle the land question at all. When the peons learned that, they abandoned his red flag by thousands and returned, hopeless and disheartened, to their homes. Zapata, who had acknowledged Orozco as President of Mexico, renounced him. And that was why the Orozco revolution failed.

When Carranza proclaimed himself "first chief of the revolution" on the death of Madero, he cleverly indorsed the principles of Madero, as set forth in the plan of San Luis Potosi, but put all the emphasis upon the restoration of constitutional government in Mexico. Either because he was afraid that if he made promises he could not fulfill them any more than Madero could, or because he did not believe in the wholesale distribution of land to the peons, Carranza avoided the question entirely. He said that after the constitutionalist government was established and order restored in the country he would see what could be done. Zapata promptly denounced him, his party, and his plan, and declared that Carranza did not intend to make any redical changes, and it is perfectly true that the peons are only secondarily interested in the restoration of constitutional government.

WHY VILLA IS POPULAR.

But Villa, with or without the approbation of his chief, went ahead confiscating the estates of the great landowners and dividing them among the people. For instance, in the State of Chihuahua he gave outright 62½ acres to every adult male, to be inalienable for 10 years. He knew that many of them, especially the younger generation, were so sunk in lethargy, because of the slavery of the haciendas, as to have lost all feeling for individual proprietorship of their farms; he calculated that if they were not allowed to gamble away or sell their properties for 10 years the ancient independent love of working the land would return. It is significant that Zapata promptly joined Villa, and is now in accord with him, although he still renounces Carranza.

The three years of the revolution have educated the Mexican people more than the 35 years of the great "educator," Porfirio Diaz. For one thing, they have traveled all over the Republic in the revolutionary army, a thing that never happened before, and now possess a very distinct national feeling. Villa's army is not composed entirely of northerners; it contains men from Yucatan, Jalisco, Zacatecas, Vera Cruz, and the federal district itself.

The peon along the American border now knows every day what his comrades in Sinaloa and Aguas Calientes are thinking. Every State in the Republic, either covertly or openly, is in revolt. Where there are telegraph lines the revolutionists communicate with Carranza daily; where that is impossible, weekly messengers ride north over the secret roads of the Republic. The old barriers between communities are broken down, thought spreads, and every day more Mexicans join the revolution.

And there has also grown up, not only among the soldiers but even among the women and old men in outlying villages and haciendas far removed from the lines of communication, the feeling and the desire for representative government. They have decided that they will be no longer ruled by jefe politicos or other federal agents of the palace in Mexico City; that they will be no longer policed by federal soldiers and spies. Their common form of political society is communal and tribal. But now there is a pretty general realization that in order to protect themselves against the predatory rich and the Government they must have their own representatives in Congress. Of course they are still very ignorant; hardly a village that has not elected its headman, who, it believes, will be a member of the national legislature. But the idea is at last thoroughly implanted in the peons, for the first time.

IF WE OCCUPY MEXICO.

We are going to destroy all that. We have made ourselves responsible for Mexico before the eyes of the world. The first American soldier who enters Mexico City means the end of the Mexican revolution. It means that the United States can not leave Mexico until it has established there a government perfectly suitable to the European powers, and that government will not be suitable at all to the Mexican people. We must suppress the right of franchise in a way that even Porfirio Diaz never dared to do. For if the peons were to indicate their choice for President, they would probably elect a man who represents them—perhaps even a peon like Francisco Villa. At any rate, some one who would give them what they have been fighting for so painfully and so long. And there is not a Government in the world which will allow that, because the people's choice for President will take the lands away from the rich who stole them and return them to the people to whom they rightfully belong. And that, you know, is confiscation—a crime under the law.

The Government of the United States has already expressed itself as being opposed to the distribution of lands. Moreover, it would not dare, if it wanted to—which it doesn't—recognize such a man as Villa; in the first place, because he was a bandit and not respectable; in the second place, because he is only a peon, not a business man, and therefore impossible in the eyes of a democratic nation.

Of course, there are immense European and American interests in Mexico, many of them obtained by sheer bribery, all of them rich in the blood and sweat of the peons. The United States could not recognize any desire of the Mexicans that some of these illegal concessions be restored to the people who were cheated out of them. In Mexico, as well as at home, the idle money of foreign speculators is of more importance than the wishes, independence, and ideals of the people who gave it to them.

THE PEONS WILL FIGHT US.

It is an Anglo-Saxon trait to consider all other races as inferior. A great many of us honestly believe that we will benefit the Mexicans by forcing our institutions upon them. We know nothing about the Latin temperament, and care less. We do not realize that the Latin ideal of liberty is broader than our own. We want to devitalize the Mexican race and turn them into brown, docile American business men and laborers, as we have the Cubans, as we are turning the Filipinos.

As I write this, some of our newspapers are publishing sickening headlines about the 17 heroic American marines who laid down their lives for their county in the streets of Vera Cruz. The lowest estimate of the Mexican dead is 200. The greater number of those who died were not Mexican soldiers at all; they were Mexican citizens firing from the roofs of their own houses upon a foreign army which invaded their country because some foreign business men whom they had enriched were not satisfied and wanted it all.

And if we can ever withdraw from that distracted country we will leave things worse than they were before—an exploiting class firmly intrenched in the places of power, the foreign interests stronger, because we supported them, the great estates securely reestablished, and the peons taught that wage slavery and not individual freedom is the desirable thing in life.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I am one of a few Members of this House having an experience such as we are about to have to-night, standing with our faces turned toward war. Permit me to say, sir, I was in this House and voted for a declaration of war against Spain 16 years ago. I believe it could have been avoided, as I believe the threatened war can be avoided. No man in this House is more embarrassed than I am in the struggle going on within me in my desire to stand by the President and at the same time keep faith with what I believe to be a conscientious performance of a duty. I had anticipated that the President, in his message delivered to-day, would have given us many reasons justifying himself and sufficient in number and importance to justify us. I have no official knowledge beyond that given us by the President in his message. I have heard from those not authorized to speak officially of the murder of our citizens in Mexico, of the outrage of women, and the destruction of American property. It was of these conditions that I expected him to speak. I expected him to ask for authority to improve them by the use of force, and it was my purpose to cordially and willingly sustain him. These conditions which have been exciting the American citizens were not offered by him as a reason for war with Mexico. Indeed, he has made no reference to them. What is the provocation he assigns? It is what is known as the Tampico incident and will go into history under that name. What is this incident upon which we are asked to make a fight against Victoriano Huerta, who is at least the de facto president of Mexico? I read from our President's message for the answer which fully furnishes the description:

On the 9th of April a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested by an officer and squad of men of the army of Gen. Huerta. Neither the paymaster nor anyone of the boat's crew was armed. Two of the men were in the boat when the arrest took place, and were obliged to leave it and submit to be taken into custody, notwithstanding the fact that the boat carried, both at her bow and at her stern, the flag of the United States. The officer who made the arrest was proceeding up one of the streets of the town with his prisoners when met by an officer of higher authority, who ordered him to return to the landing and await orders; and within an hour and a half from the time of the arrest orders were received from the commander of the Huertista forces at Tampico for the release of the paymaster and his men. The release was followed by apologies from the commander and later by an expression of regret by Gen. Huerta himself.

Here is the provocation which the President asks us to justify him in the use of the armed forces of the United States. Here is the situation which Huerta must be thrashed to accept. Has he not expressed his regret for the mistake that was made? Has he not placed the officer under arrest who made it? But Admiral Mayo orders him to salute the American flag. To this Huerta will not agree. The only dispute is to the character of the apology. It is true that the arrest of our seamen constituted an offense against our Nation, but it is one for which an apology can be offered and accepted. I will admit that obedience to our demand for a salute would have ended the incident. We would have preferred the salute, but it being denied by Huerta, are we justified in making war upon him in person?

Mr. Speaker, the President gave us three instances upon which we are expected to base this resolution. The one of which I have spoken is the only one of moment. Let no man be mistaken; this means the shedding of human blood. This means an increase in the work of the coffin makers of the United States and much employment for the gravediggers. Gentlemen who vote for it must accept the responsibility. Probably the country will not understand—for one I do not understand—why the apology made by Huerta was not sufficient. Its character certainly does not warrant us in making the sacrifice of human life, and it does not justify the awful drain upon our resources. Let me repeat, these sailors were upon ground where they were denied to go, according to the statement of the President. When they were arrested the officer who arrested them was instructed to discharge them, which he did, and apologized for having arrested them. What happened? The President himself says that the release was followed by apologies from the commander and later by an expression of regret from Gen. Huerta himself. It seems to me, sir, that this has ripened into a question as to the character of apology that should be made. The country will not stand for a war for such a reason. We must deal with the Mexican as a Mexican, and not fight him because his apology is not in accord with the rules of a higher civilization. I am not opposed to armed conflict when the provocation demands it. I do not find it here. I do not believe we are justified in passing this resolution for the reasons assigned. Patriotism can be found in the faithful and conscientious performance of a duty. Let me make the statement here, if the administration discovers that we can not maintain our American dignity without war, and war has to come, I will stand by the President and by the country, let the result be what it may. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used all of his time.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that there is any difference on this Mexican matter here to-day.

It is a matter of regret that the leaders of a once great party should see fit not to follow the President in this patriotic proposition.

It is to be regretted that some men are trying to make this a party question.

It is not a party question, and, try as they may, they can not make it such, at least with the people of this Republic, because the people are with the President. It is with the people as it should be with you and with some on our side who hesitate, not a party question, but a question of—

Your flag and our flag,
And how it floats to-day
O'er your land and my land,
And half the world away.

Blood-red and rose-red,
Its stripes forever gleam;
Snow white and soul white,
The good forefathers' dream.

Sky blue and true blue,
With stars that beam aright;
A gloried guidon of the day,
A shelter through the night.

Your flag and my flag—
Oh, how much it holds!
Your heart and my heart
Secure within its folds.

Your heart and my heart
Beat quicker at the sight;
Sun kissed and wind tossed,
The red and blue and white.

The one flag! the great flag!
The flag for me and you!
Glorified, all else beside,
The red and white and blue.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TEN EYCK].

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Speaker, our President, with the patience of Job, has kept the American eagle caged, while he has carried the dove of peace extended in his right hand to the chancery door of our one-time sister Republic, and has knocked without reply. No one will deny but that he has within his breast the heart of a lion, with a love for his Nation's honor equal to that love of a mother for her child. He tells us that the flag that Washington created has been insulted. He has demanded an apology. He tells us that he has waited, realizing the cost of life in war. Anticipating the sacrifice of his fellow countryman by a declaration of war, not willing to assume this enormous responsibility, he has come to us for a ratification of his policy. Shall we deny him? Shall we hesitate? No. I for one pledge him my support where he leads in his country's honor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Twelve minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] remaining?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] has introduced an amendment to the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It provides for the insertion of the words "within his constitutional powers." In my judgment that amendment is unnecessary to carry out the meaning and intent of the resolution. In the next place, if it is inserted it will act as a qualification and a reservation upon the resolution. If we are to adopt this declaration at all it ought to be definite; it ought to approve the action of the President without qualification or equivocation. I wish to announce my opposition to that amendment and to state that the Foreign Affairs Committee will be opposed to it. [Applause.]

For reasons similar to those that I have stated, I am opposed, also, to the substitute resolution presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. The committee resolution was carefully considered from every viewpoint. It fully and accurately covers the situation. It would be difficult to add or take away from the language without destroying the intent of the committee. I therefore ask that it be adopted without amendment or alteration of any nature.

So much has been said about the probable effect of any action that may be taken to-day, I desire to place in the RECORD the law passed by Congress in 1898, prior to the War with Spain. I refer to the actual declaration of war, as enacted by Congress. It will be interesting to contrast the bill passed on that occasion with the "vote of confidence" which we will give to-day to the President. The resolution to which I have referred reads:

Be it enacted, etc., First, that war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist, and that war has existed since the 21st day of April, A. D. 1898, including said day, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

Second, that the President of the United States be, and hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States to such extent as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

For the last 12 months the President has been confronted by a peculiarly trying situation. On the one hand, he was censured for refusing to send our soldiers into Mexico to shed their blood that Mexico might have peace. He was denounced for preserving a policy of nonintervention in the domestic affairs of a neighboring Republic. On the other hand, he was deluged by the demands of those who would go so far as to arbitrate insults to the flag and compromise national honor in the almost unpatriotic desire to maintain peace at any cost of national self-respect.

The President was neither intimidated by criticism nor coerced by censure. He outlined his course, and he pursued it. The culmination is a justification of his settled policy toward Mexico. Gen. Huerta's dictatorship, established on the martyred remains of Madero, who was a true patriot, even if ahead of his time, has miserably failed. Northern Mexico has refused to recognize his authority or bow to his leadership. One State after another has fallen from his grasp. Tottering before his final fall, and in the irritation and desperation of defeat, he threw off his mask of pretended friendship for the United States and openly defied and insulted our representatives at Tampico. Dispatches to our embassy in Mexico City were intercepted. Indignities were heaped upon our citizens. We are compelled to assert our dignity and preserve the honor and traditions of our country. The President of the United States, like his illustrious predecessors in other national crises, is meeting the situation squarely and without faltering. He does not ask Congress for power to declare war, but for authority to enforce an honorable peace. I trust the resolution reported by the committee will be adopted without amendment and that there may not be a division on party lines when the vote is taken by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman yield back any of his time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yielded back two minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, if for one moment I entertained the thought that the pending resolution reported out from the Committee on Foreign Affairs was a declaration of war I would cast my vote against it. That phase of the resolution was thoroughly discussed in the committee, and we were convinced that the word "justified" could not be construed as a declaration of war. If, however, the word "authorized" had been employed in the drafting of the resolution such a construction could have been placed upon it. I am perfectly willing to allow the settlement of the Tampico incident to remain in the hands of our President to protect the honor of our flag, because I am fully convinced that he has no intention of declaring war against the Republic of Mexico, and all his future actions will tend toward peace instead of war. Come weal or woe, I am first for my country and my country's honor. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] use some of his time?

Mr. MANN. I think there will be only one speech over here.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the adoption of this resolution, as has been stated, means either a declaration of war or a declaration of peace. Without the adoption of this resolution, there is no doubt in my mind that if we intend to preserve the honor of the flag of our country we must admit that we are at the threshold of war. By the adoption of this resolution, it may be possible that war can be avoided; but without it, there is no other result.

I do not want our Nation engaged in warfare just for the sake of war. No patriotic citizen does want war in that manner. But to-day a crisis and situation confront us that would warrant an out-and-out declaration of war. If it were not for his tempered spirit of peace and justice, President Wilson to-day would have given a message for a declaration of war and a request for an appropriation to support the same.

I am indeed surprised to find Members of this House opposed to this or any resolution that seeks redress for an outrageous insult to the emblem of our Nation—the emblem that stands for the safety of our lives, homes, and firesides. I am sorry there is opposition at this time to this measure. I am glad, however, it is alone from the Republican side of the House. This party has always boasted of its chivalry and loyalty to our flag. It is unfortunate at this time that you are controlled by the dominating spirit of your leader, my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Ever since the election in November, 1912, the leader of your party has been in the objective mood. He has allied with him two objective cohorts, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who to-day on this floor asserted, "If you force the war upon the country, I will stay here," and the ever talkative gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who reversed his position upon the tolls question simply because he could not be in harmony with President Wilson. This triumvirate during this Congress usually has controlled the Republican side of this House with a word or even wave of the hand, but this is one time they will find red-blooded Members on that side voting with the President and with the unanimous sentiment of our Nation. In my judgment they will fail to control at least 60 per cent of the vote on that side against the adoption of this measure. With a few more samples of this character of leadership from them they will relegate themselves to low privates in rear ranks. If their party should follow them in their conduct of putting party enthusiasm above national patriotism and their country's honor, it will be relegated to merited oblivion.

These gentlemen to-day have belched forth one spasm after another because Carranza and Villa have waged bloody warfare in northern Mexico against the power and questioned right of Dictator Victoriano Huerta, who sits on his throne by virtue of ravage, rapine, and murder. These opponents to this resolution insist that the Executive of our country should recognize the self-constituted murderous Huerta, who sits on the throne of Mexico. Such recognition will never be given. Our President is right. The people of the country are with him.

Mr. Speaker, I care not what position others may take, but as for me, I shall vote to uphold and sustain my President and our Nation's President. I shall vote to keep our flag respected by every nation on earth. I shall vote for Old Glory to remain unsullied and unspotted from insult and dishonor by greasers of Mexico.

I am surprised that members of the great Republican Party of this country, who have boasted of their greatness and their goodness, under the leadership of the excellent gentleman from Illinois, my colleague [Mr. MANN], would stand up here and say to you that they are willing for Mexico, under the vile guidance of Huerta, to spit upon Old Glory.

May the God of all mankind, who inspired George Washington to lead to success his soldiers, whose foot tracks at Valley Forge were left bloodstained; who inspired the patriotic hand of Betsy Ross to design Old Glory, to be forever honored and respected; who inspired the leaders of our Nation to require England to respect Old Glory in 1812; who inspired our fathers to require Mexican respect for Old Glory in 1846; who inspired President McKinley to require Spain to respect Old Glory in 1898; may that same inspiration move the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and his followers to vote for respect and reparation due Old Glory at this time from Mexican greasers. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we could not hear what the request was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I object, unless he has spoken.

Mr. LANGLEY. I made the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is already granted; likewise that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ELDER. Has the gentleman spoken?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. What I said is not important, but I have spoken.

Mr. ELDER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I can not see the difference between a gentleman who has spoken and wishes to add to his speech and one who has not. I do not like to object, and shall not; but I think the leader of the minority [Mr. MANN] has been very unfair to-night.

Mr. MANN. That is very unfair for the gentleman to make that statement. I am always fair.

Mr. ELDER. I do not want to be unfair to the gentleman. I shall not object, but I think the way he has treated some of us to-night is very unfair, and I wish to express my regret at his action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] object to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HILL] extending his remarks?

Mr. MANN. I did not.

The SPEAKER. No reference was made to him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. If no one wishes to make a speech, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE:
At the end of the resolution add the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as a declaration of war."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, the resolution speaks for itself. It will give to those who are opposed to a declaration of war an opportunity to say so. That is all it offers. There are some here who may want to vote that way.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, the opponents of this resolution have declared their objection to it, some because it does not declare for war, others because it does not declare for peace. It seems that the opposition is divided upon these lines. I am unable to understand why gentlemen opposing this resolution take these two opposite positions. Some declare that it means war; some declare that it does not mean war. It is immaterial whether it means war or means peace; if it means to bring about a settled condition in Mexico and to restore the honor and dignity of the American flag it is sufficient for any American citizen to support. [Applause.]

Not only has the President related one incident that would warrant the passage of this resolution, but he has referred to a number of them, equally grievous as the first one named in the message, which require reparation. It becomes the duty of every American citizen to stand by the President of the United States in the crisis now upon the country. True, Mexico, a neighboring Republic, is torn by strife; but indignity has been heaped upon the American flag, and the honor of every American citizen is at stake to hold aloft that banner and to keep it above the insult of any foe. [Applause.]

We may dispute over the wording of this resolution, declare that it means this or that, but it is no time to quibble over words. We all know the purpose is to uphold the dignity of our Government and to resent indignities offered by a hostile foe, and our duty should be discharged in keeping with the great Government we represent and the brave people who have intrusted us with their confidence. [Applause.] Gentlemen who oppose this resolution, who have criticized the President for his course, offer no solution of the vexed question here presented, but content themselves by opposing the course here presented. This, on their part, is not arising to the position which the exigencies of the hour require nor affording the country some better plan for a reparation of the wrongs done a patriotic people. It would be better for them, in the eyes of the public, if they would come forward with some proposition that would remedy the situation, in order to preserve the honor of the greatest nation on earth. This they fail to do, and why they do not explain.

The people back at their homes will want of them explanation of their course and a reason for their opposition to this resolution approving the President's course in handling the situation which has arisen here.

The people of this great country stand ready and willing to hold up his hands in this matter and abide by his wise and patriotic course. They believe in him, and they will see that he is sustained in whatever he asks for the upholding of the dignity of this great Government and defending our flag, the symbol of a liberty-loving people whose civilization is the glory of the whole world, and whose standard of justice and uprightness is an example for the nations of the earth. [Applause.] They indorse his course in this matter of so much moment and will have no patience with those who attempt to obstruct or delay his patriotic but firm treatment of it. [Applause.] For one, I shall vote for the resolution, and hope to see it unanimously passed by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I am a little more averse to a declaration of war because I served in this House and helped to bring on one war; and, while gentlemen have referred this afternoon to the solid support which the Democratic side of the House gave to President McKinley when the Cuban difficulties were under consideration, such gentlemen have forgotten the record. For week after week and month after month the Democratic side of the House in the Fifty-fifth Congress harried President McKinley and denounced him because he had not done what the Democratic side thought ought to be done in regard to Cuba; and when it came to voting upon the propositions in the House, declaring that Cuba was and ought to be free and independent, there were two roll calls in the House on which the Democratic side voted practically unanimously against the wishes of President McKinley. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Nor have I forgotten the results of the Spanish War. Many of us here then—and I was one of that number, younger then than I am now, with less experience then that I have now—believed then that it were possible for us to intervene in Cuba, make Cuba free, and stop there. I have seen the results of the Spanish War, and have seen that no one can foretell what will be the results of a war. I saw us take the Philippine Islands. I saw us take Porto Rico. I saw us acquire Hawaii. I have seen our Army grow from a maximum of 25,000 to a maximum of 100,000 men. I have seen our Navy—and partly as a result of that the navies of the world—grow from an expense of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 a year to $130,000,000 or $140,000,000 a year. I do not believe that it is possible for us to have war with Mexico and ever leave Mexico. I think that when our troops, as the result of war, land in Mexico City, when we have finished the war we will own Mexico. I am not now in favor of acquiring the responsibilities which will come through that ownership [applause], though I know full well that when we put our troops there and come into the possession of that country some gentlemen—and they will be a majority in our country—will say, and perhaps I will join with them, "We will never haul down the flag that the blood of our boys has raised there."

We are in a serious situation that ought to be considered calmly. Do you know what will happen? Does the President know what will happen? No one can tell. It is the time when we ought to keep cool, when we ought not to resort to the arbitrament of arms, but when we ought still to endeavor to have a peaceful solution of our problems. [Applause.]

I believe that this resolution means war. I remember very well when Mr. Cannon, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House in the Fifty-fifth Congress, offered a bill to appropriate $50,000,000 to be placed at the disposition of the President at his will. Mr. Cannon said it was a measure to preserve peace. This was not war, he said, it was to maintain peace. At that time I had one minute yielded to me, and I took that one minute to say that at least I was not fooled by the vote I was about to cast. I knew that it meant war. I know that this means war. I do not think we have yet exhausted the possibilities of peace, that we should plunge our Nation into war. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, we are now about to conclude the proceedings of this fateful day. Gentlemen should not endeavor to play partisan politics on this occasion, as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has done during to-day's proceedings.

For a number of weeks he has been clamoring for action on the part of the President of the United States and has demanded that we go forward. Now that insult has been heaped upon our country, he quails in the face of those who insulted us and questions the motives of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Sixteen years ago on yesterday I was a Member of this body when William McKinley, that great patriot, with strong heart, requested that we appropriate fifty millions of dollars to be placed at his disposal. I remember well how the bosoms of all Members of this House swelled with pride while they expressed their confidence and voted ungrudgingly and without qualification fifty millions of dollars for the glory and welfare of our Republic. [Applause.]

To-morrow will be 78 years since Texas on the battlefield of San Jacinto routed the Mexicans and established a great republic there. We did it because our rights had been invaded and because we were entitled to our liberty and independence. Since that glorious day of April 21, 1836, we have come into the Union, and now from the North, the East, the South, the West we are all proud to stand under that flag and rally to the support of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Some gentlemen complain that the President's case has not been made as strong as it should have been. He could have made it much stronger; he could have paraded before this country and the world case after case for action on the part of our Government. But he has constantly deplored the fact that he had to proceed at all. He has tried to avert war with Mexico. He has done everything that an honorable man and a patriotic President could do to avoid the struggle that seems impending. There is one thing certain, while this resolution may not mean war, while it may not imply a declaration of war, yet not to pass it would bring this country into disrepute in the eyes of the world. And such attitude I, as the representative of a great congressional district, am not willing to occupy before the balance of the world. [Applause.]

We ought to have the votes of the Democrats and the Republicans; we ought to have the support of all the Representatives of this body in this crisis, and gentlemen ought to be ashamed to play partisan politics when the honor of our country is involved. [Applause.]

In concluding this discussion, I hope and believe that we will have practically the solid support of the three parties in Congress, and that the President will receive the assurance that the representatives and spokesmen of 100,000,000 people are ready to uphold his hands and defend the flag of our country. [Prolonged and loud applause.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARTHOLDT:
After the word "employment," in line 4, insert the words "within the limits of his constitutional power."

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE:
At the end of the resolution add the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as a declaration of war."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Gardner substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute by Mr. GARDNER:
"Resolved, etc., That a situation has arisen with respect to our relations with certain persons in Mexico under which it may be necessary for the President to employ the armed forces of the United States of America to maintain the dignity of and respect for the flag of the United States, and such employment of armed forces within the limits of his constitutional powers is hereby approved."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported a substitute for the original resolution. The substitute is in lieu of the original resolution, and we desire to have the substitute voted on.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee substitute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would it be proper to ask to have the resolution read at some time?

The SPEAKER. Entirely proper. The Clerk will report the substitute.

Mr. HENRY. That has already been read.

Mr. MANN. Let us know what we are voting on.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocable amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution as amended by the substitute.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the House joint resolution.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, pending the taking of the vote, may I ask the gentleman what the intention is in respect to the rest of the evening? I understand the Senate will meet at 9 o'clock.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I understand the House will take a recess.

Mr. MANN. To await the action of the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well for the House to stay here until it is found out whether the Senate will be able to get through this evening. There is other business on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think we will transact any other business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then when this is disposed of, I will ask the House to take a recess for an hour.

Mr. FERRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an observation to the gentleman from Alabama. This is unanimous-consent day. It is growing late in the session and the calendar is chock-full. Why not let us work?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Illinois indicated that he did not desire to do that.

Mr. MANN. I think not to-night. Besides, many of us have not yet had our dinner.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLAYTON. The roll call was ordered.

Mr. MANN. This is for the convenience of this side of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 337, nays 37, answered "present" 3, not voting 56, as follows:

YEAS—337.

Abercrombie	Broussard	Coady	Eagle
Adair	Brown, N. Y.	Collier	Edmonds
Adamson	Brown, W. Va.	Connelly, Kans.	Edwards
Aiken	Browne, Wis.	Conry	Elder
Alexander	Bruckner	Cooper	Esch
Allen	Brumbaugh	Covington	Estopinal
Ansberry	Bryan	Cox	Evans
Ashbrook	Buchanan, Ill.	Cramton	Faison
Aswell	Buchanan, Tex.	Cullop	Falconer
Austin	Bulkley	Curry	Farr
Avis	Burgess	Danforth	Fergusson
Bailey	Burke, S. Dak.	Davenport	Ferris
Baker	Burke, Wis.	Decker	Fess
Baltz	Burnett	Deitrick	Fields
Barchfeld	Byrnes, S. C.	Dent	Fitzgerald
Barkley	Byrns, Tenn.	Dershem	FitzHenry
Barnhart	Calder	Dickinson	Flood, Va.
Bartlett	Callaway	Dies	Floyd, Ark.
Barton	Cantor	Difenderfer	Foster
Bathrick	Caraway	Dillon	Fowler
Beakes	Carlin	Dixon	Francis
Beall, Tex.	Carter	Donohoe	Frear
Bell, Ga.	Casey	Donovan	Gallagher
Blackmon	Chandler, N. Y.	Doolittle	Gallivan
Booher	Church	Doremus	Gard
Borchers	Clancy	Doughton	Garner
Borland	Clark, Fla.	Dunn	Garrett, Tenn.
Bowdle	Claypool	Dupré	Garrett, Tex.
Brockson	Clayton	Dyer	Gerry
Brodbeck	Cline	Eagan	Gilmore

Giffins	Kinkaid, Nebr.	Nolan, J. I.	Smith, Saml. W.
Glass	Kinkead, N. J.	Oglesby	Smith, Tex.
Godwin, N. C.	Kirkpatrick	O'Hair	Stafford
Goeke	Kitchin	Oldfield	Stedman
Goldfogle	Konop	O'Leary	Stephens, Cal.
Gordon	Kreider	O'Shaunessy	Stephens, Nebr.
Gorman	Lafferty	Padgett	Stephens, Tex.
Graham, Ill.	Langley	Page, N. C.	Stevens, N. H.
Graham, Pa.	Lazaro	Palmer	Stone
Gray	Lee, Ga.	Park	Stringer
Greene, Mass.	Lee, Pa.	Parker	Sumners
Greene, Vt.	Lenroot	Patten, N. Y.	Sutherland
Griest	Lesher	Patton, Pa.	Switzer
Griffin	Lever	Peters, Mass.	Taggart
Hamill	Levy	Peters, Me.	Talbott, Md.
Hamilton, Mich.	Lewis, Md.	Peterson	Talcott, N. Y.
Hamilton, N. Y.	Lewis, Pa.	Plumley	Tavenner
Hammond	Lieb	Porter	Taylor, Ark.
Hardy	Lindbergh	Post	Taylor, Colo.
Harrison	Linthicum	Pou	Taylor, N. Y.
Hart	Lloyd	Prouty	Ten Eyck
Haugen	Lobeck	Quin	Thacher
Hawley	Loft	Ragsdale	Thomas
Hay	Logue	Raker	Thompson, Okla.
Hayden	Lonergan	Rauch	Thomson, Ill.
Heflin	McAndrews	Rayburn	Towner
Helgesen	McClellan	Reed	Townsend
Helm	McCoy	Reilly, Conn.	Treadway
Helvering	McDermott	Reilly, Wis.	Tribble
Henry	McGillicuddy	Roberts, Mass.	Tuttle
Hensley	McGuire, Okla.	Roberts, Nev.	Underhill
Hill	McKellar	Rogers	Underwood
Hinds	McKenzie	Rouse	Vare
Hinebaugh	McLaughlin	Rubey	Vaughan
Hobson	MacDonald	Rupley	Vollmer
Holland	Maguire, Nebr.	Russell	Walker
Howard	Mahan	Sabath	Wallin
Hughes, Ga.	Manahan	Saunders	Walters
Hulings	Mapes	Scott	Watkins
Hull	Metz	Scully	Watson
Humphrey, Wash.	Miller	Seldomridge	Weaver
Humphreys, Miss.	Mitchell	Shackleford	Webb
Igoe	Montague	Sherley	Whaley
Jacoway	Moon	Sherwood	Whitacre
Johnson, Ky.	Moore	Shreve	White
Jones	Morgan, La.	Sims	Williams
Keating	Morgan, Okla.	Sinnott	Willis
Keister	Morrison	Slemp	Wingo
Kelley, Mich.	Moss, Ind.	Sloan	Woodruff
Kennedy, Conn.	Mott	Small	Young, N. Dak.
Kennedy, Iowa	Murdock	Smith, Idaho	Young, Tex.
Kennedy, R. I.	Murray, Mass.	Smith, J. M. C.	The Speaker
Kettner	Murray, Okla.	Smith, Md.
Key, Ohio	Neely, W. Va.	Smith, Minn.
Kiess, Pa.	Nelson	Smith, N. Y.

NAYS—37.

Ainey	French	Kent	Steenerson
Anderson	Gardner	Kindel	Stephens, Miss.
Anthony	George	La Follette	Stevens, Minn.
Bartholdt	Gillett	Langham	Temple
Bell, Cal.	Good	Madden	Volstead
Britten	Hayes	Mann	Witherspoon
Butler	Howell	Mondell	Woods
Campbell	Johnson, Utah	Platt
Davis	Johnson, Wash.	Sells
Fordney	Kahn	Sisson

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Payne	Slayden	Taylor, Ala.

NOT VOTING—56.

Browning	Fairchild	Kelly, Pa.	Phelan
Burke, Pa.	Finley	Knowland, J. R.	Powers
Candler, Miss.	Goodwin, Ark.	Korbly	Rainey
Cantrill	Goulden	L'Engle	Riordan
Carew	Green, Iowa	Lindquist	Rothermel
Carr	Gregg	Maher	Rucker
Cary	Gudger	Martin	Sharp
Connolly, Iowa	Guernsey	Merritt	Sparkman
Copley	Hamlin	Morin	Stanley
Crisp	Hardwick	Moss, W. Va.	Stout
Crosser	Houston	Neeley, Kans.	Walsh
Dale	Hoxworth	Norton	Wilson, Fla.
Dooling	Hughes, W. Va.	O'Brien	Wilson, N. Y.
Driscoll	Johnson, S. C.	Paige, Mass.	Winslow

So the joint resolution was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. RUCKER with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina with Mr. GREEN of Iowa.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas with Mr. FAIRCHILD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri was called, and he answered "Aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

[Applause.]

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GILMORE, for five days, on account of death of a relative.

To Mr. GREGG, for one day, on account of sickness in family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent Mr. REILLY of Connecticut was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of George W. Beach, H. R. 1535, first session, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 10.30 to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 10.30 o'clock to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman think there is any possibility whatsoever of the Senate acting upon this resolution within one hour?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, I do not; but I think it will act to-night, and at the end of an hour we will be in a better condition to state what we can do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Thereupon (at 9 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 10.30 o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Senate has adjourned to meet at 12.10 a. m. to-morrow. They will probably be in session the balance of the night. It is not probable that they will get a vote before 6 or 7 o'clock in the morning. With that in view, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the Senate recessed until 12.10 a. m.?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has adjourned until 12.10. That means 12.10 to-night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, April 21, 1914, at 10 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Missouri River from the mouth of Kansas River to a point at or near where the west line of Kansas City, Kans., extended, intersects the Missouri River (H. Doc. No. 913); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a list of papers in Department of the Interior that have no permanent or historical interest, and recommending that authority be granted to destroy them (H. Doc. No. 912); to the Joint Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of San Leandro Bay, Cal., with a view to establishing at West Leandro a deep-water channel to San Francisco Bay (H. Doc. No. 911); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordred to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1694) to amend an act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to set apart certain tracts of land in the State of California as forest reservations," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 555), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolutoin (H. J. Res. 249) for the appointment of George Frederick Kunz as a member of the North American Indian Memorial Commission, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 557), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. McCLELLAN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15320) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public-buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Owego, N. Y., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 558), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 560), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 239) granting an increase of pension to Alexander M. Rainey; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5243) granting a pension to Ezra R. Fuller; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 13336) granting a pension to James D. Setliff; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CULLOP: A bill (H. R. 15838) to establish a fish-cultural station and mussel hatchery on the Wabash River, near Vincennes, Ind.; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. OLDFIELD: A bill (H. R. 15839) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission for utilization of water power at Lock and Dam No. 1 on upper White River, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 15840) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to rent or lease certain portions or spaces of ground within the national forests for certain purposes; to the Committee on Agiculture.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 15841) to amend "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 15869) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of mining experiment and mine-safety stations for making investigations and disseminating information among employees in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. WICKERSHAM: A bill (H. R. 15870) to amend the United States land laws in their application to Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FLOOD of Virginia: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands against Victoriano Huerta; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma: Resolution (H. Res. 482) directing that 3,000 copies of a symposium of the points of order and the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws under the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty of 1830 be printed for the use of the Members of the House and Senate; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. TREADWAY: Memorial adopted by the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts protesting against the incorporation of a literacy test in the pending immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. GILMORE: Memorial adopted by the legislature of the State of Massachusetts protesting against the incorporation of a literacy test in the pending immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 15842) granting an increase of pension to Priscilla Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 15843) granting an increase of pension to William F. McLean; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 15844) granting an increase of pension to William Otha White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 15845) for the relief of Pinkie West, administratrix of the estate of J. J. West, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CULLOP: A bill (H. R. 15846) granting an increase of pension to Jacob L. Fowler; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15847) granting an increase of pension to William H. Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DILLON: A bill (H. R. 15848) granting an increase of pension to Peter Schnellbacker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DONOHOE: A bill (H. R. 15849) granting a pension to James Howard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 15850) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Van Tress; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRANCIS: A bill (H. R. 15851) granting an increase of pension to Francis Acton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15852) granting an increase of pension to James W. Crawford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15853) granting an increase of pension to Leasen E. Callen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15854) granting an increase of pension to George D. McIlroy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 15855) granting a pension to Sallie E. Doolittle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15856) granting an increase of pension to A. C. Lee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 15857) granting a pension to Catherine Coughlan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 15858) granting an increase of pension to William Burnell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KIRKPATRICK: A bill (H. R. 15859) granting an increase of pension to George Sharp; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 15860) granting a pension to John W. Martin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 15861) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Shields; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 15862) granting an increase of pension to Pharaoh A. Cobb; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 15863) granting a pension to Augusta Fels; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15864) granting an increase of pension to William Houston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15865) granting an increase of pension to William J. Denney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 15866) granting a pension to Alfred N. Curtis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15867) granting an increase of pension to Lionel C. Long; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODS: A bill (H. R. 15868) granting an increase of pension to William H. Sprague; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLAYPOOL: A bill (H. R. 15871) granting an increase of pension to Edward V. Rutter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 15872) for the relief of Iver Boreson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 15873) granting a pension to Minnie Hamilton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: Resolution (H. Res. 483) authorizing the payment of $1,200 to William McKinley Cobb for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the first and second sessions of the Sixty-third Congress; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Redpath Chautauquas, favoring the production of such programs as will tend toward the general uplift of the country; to the Committee on Education.

Also (by request), petition of sundry citizens of New York, Michigan, and Illinois against practice of polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Louisiana, Pike County, Mo., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ADAIR: Petitions of sundry citizens of Elwood, Ind., favoring passage of House bill 12928, retaining section 6; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ANSBERRY: Petitions of Carl Anderson and others of the State of Ohio, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of 621 citizens of Defiance, Ohio, and 85 citizens of Edgerton, Ohio, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANTHONY: Petition of J. B. Woodman and other members of West Powhattan Grange No. 1541, of Netawaka, Kans., favoring House bill 11897, relating to rural credits; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Evidence to accompany a bill (H. R. 15616) for the relief of Mrs. Rachel Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence to accompany a bill (H. R. 12317) for the relief of James K. Butler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARCHFELD: Petition of sundry citizens of the eighteenth and nineteenth wards and 174 citizens of the twentieth ward, of Pittsburgh, Pa., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Mount Oliver, St. Clair, and McKees Rocks, all in the State of Pennsylvania, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROWNING: Petitions of 394 citizens of Woodstown; sundry citizens of Pennsville and Salem; Mickleton Grange, No. 111, Patrons of Husbandry; sundry citizens of Elmer, Monroeville, Woodbury, Almonesson, Gloucester City; First Baptist Church of Gloucester City; sundry citizens of Camden; 24 citizens of Berlin; 80 citizens of Merchantville; 106 citizens of Blackwood; and 125 citizens of Gibbstown, all in the State of New Jersey, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin: Petition of sundry citizens of Waterloo, Wis., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of P. J. Pinter, Vinton Mosel, O. L. Kohl, D. W. Weiss, J. Kremer, W. C. Singer, E. C. Binky, F. Lenhard, Val Blatz, A. Blatz, A. H. Koeing, W. H. Pahl, H. L. Lontog, A. S. Pierce, Charles Hornig, George Beuzel, J. H. Ehlhardt, and W. Boeshaad, all of Milwaukee, Wis., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the western governors' conference, relative to water power of the West; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: Petition of various members of the churches at Anthony, Fla., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONRY: Petition of 1,720 citizens of the fifteenth congressional district of New York, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COX: Petition of Kamer Bros., of New Albany, Ind., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Highlands Friends' Church, of Washington County, Ind., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of William Roy Moon and 617 other voters of St. Clair County; Peter Miller and 68 other citizens of Lapeer County; E. F. Hess and 596 other citizens of Huron County; George McMorran and 836 other citizens of Macomb County; and M. Shay and 74 other citizens of Tuscola County, all in the State of Michigan, protesting against the Hobson resolution, providing for national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the Mennonite Congregation, representing 150 people, of Brown City; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Brown City, representing 108 people; the Pilgrim Congregational Church, of Metamora, representing 40 people; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Metamora, representing 75 people; the Free Methodist Church of Lum, representing 15 people; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lapeer, representing 70 people; the Free Methodist Church of Burnside, representing 8 people; the First Methodist Protestant Church of Lapeer, representing 100 people; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Hadley, representing 100 people; the Southwest Dryden Woman's Christian Temperance Union, representing 25 people; the First Presbyterian Church of Port Huron, representing 200 people; the Mennonite Brethren of Port Huron, representing 100 people; and the Washington Avenue Church, of Port Huron, representing 64 people, all in the State of Michigan, in favor of national constitutional prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURRY: Petition of F. W. Field, of St. Helena, Napa County, Cal., and others, in opposition to House bill 7826, to provide for the closing of barber shops in the District of Columbia on Sunday; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of F. W. Field, of St. Helena, Napa County, Cal., and others, in favor of House bill 12928, to amend the postal and civil-service laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DALE: Petition of the William D. Sing Co. and sundry citizens of New York, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DILLON: Petition of sundry citizens of the first congressional district of South Dakota, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DONOHOE: Petition of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of various churches of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOOLITTLE: Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Kansas, favoring passage of House bill 11755, for bureau of farm loans; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FESS: Petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Milford, Ohio, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of citizens of the State of Ohio, opposing national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of sundry citizens of Boston, Mass., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GILMORE: Memorial of Campbells (Mass.) Branch of Brockton Socialist Club, favoring investigation of mining troubles in Colorado; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, petition of 104 citizens of Massachusetts, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Petition of H. A. McComos, of Philadelphia, Pa., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the board of directors of the Philadelphia Bourse, urging that all bills for the regulation of business be deferred to next session of Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Philadelphia County Women's Christian Temperance Union, State of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Western Governors' Conference, relative to right of States to develop water-power possibilities; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: Petition of 1,577 citizens of the fourth congressional district of Michigan, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 25 citizens of Moore Park, 225 citizens of Lawton, and 150 citizens of Buchanan, Mich., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 77 citizens of the fourth Michigan district, opposing national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAMMOND: Petition of various members of Duluth (Minn.) Typographical Union, No. 136, favoring passage of the Bartlett-Bacon bill (H. R. 1873); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HELVERING: Petitions of sundry citizens of Salina, Kans., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HINDS: Petitions of 25 citizens of Brunswick; 34 citizens of North Portland; 45 citizens of Cumberland Center; 8 citizens and the Methodist-Episcopal Church of North Pownol; the First Baptist Church of Biddeford; 33 citizens and the Free Baptist Church and the Pine Street Congregational Church of Lewiston; Congregational Church at Lyman; Methodist-Episcopal Church of Brunswick; 145 members of Ogunquit Grange, Ogunquit; Methodist-Episcopal Ministers' Association of Portland; First Baptist Church of Westbrook; Beaver Dam Grange, of North Berwick; 25 citizens of Portland; 14 citizens of Lymon; 9 citizens of West Kennebunk; the Congregational Church and sundry citizens of Otisfield, 112 members of Starling Grange Congregational Church of Cumberland, 419 citizens of Portland; 111 citizens of Gorham; 220 citizens of Monroe; 217 citizens of Old Orchard; 39 citizens of South Windham; 100 citizens of Winterport; 196 citizens of Bridgton; 200 citizens of Scarboro; 110 citizens of West Falmouth; 95 citizens of South Portland; 35 citizens of Stroudwater; 150 citizens of South Gorham; and 68 citizens of Berwick, all in the State of Maine, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. IGOE: Petitions of the Howe Scale Co., of Illinois; J. H. Rode; the Church Progress, a Catholic publishing company; the George W. Reid Oil Co.; the Trovelicht Duncker Carpet Co.; the Union Rubber & Supply Co.; the Copen Belting & Rubber Co.; the Reliance Machine & Tool Works; the Henie Safety Boiler Co., and Charles Mahlenbrook and A. J. Flynn, all of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Theodore R. Schweedtmann, of St. Louis, Mo., favoring passage of House bill 13305, relative to discrimination in prices; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KEISTER: Petitions of citizens of Ligonier, 1,801 citizens of Vandergrift, 50 citizens of Monessen, 400 citizens of Mount Pleasant, 30 citizens of Branch, 100 citizens of Trafford, 1,240 citizens of West Newton, 200 citizens of New Kingston, 56 citizens of Irwin, 250 citizens of Zelienople, 110 citizens of Evans City, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut: Memorial of the German-American Alliance of Waterbury, Conn., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Memorial of the Friends' Bible School, of Providence; Rev. George L. Michelson, of Lonsdale; and Woodlawn Baptist Sunday School, of Pawtucket, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Fairmont Creamery Co., of Omaha, Nebr., favoring passage of House bill 14328, relative to false statements in the mails; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also petition of the Francis E. Willard Union and the Globe Congregational Sunday School, of Woonsocket; Rev. L. M. Flacken, of Pawtucket; George S. Wheeler, of Providence; and C. O. Parker, of Slatersville, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Blake-McFall Co., of Portland, Oreg., favoring House bill 14328, relative to false statements in mails; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LAFFERTY: Petition of sundry citizens of Portland and Multnomah, Oreg., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 863 citizens of Portland, Oreg., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEVY: Petition of sundry citizens of New York City, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the New York Branch, National League of Commission Merchants; Edward Schultheis, of Evergreen; S. E. Kostka, of Long Island City; and C. H. & C. W. Kimball, of New York; all in the State of New York, relative to bill creating a standard barrel for fruit, etc.; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. LEWIS of Maryland: Petition by a town meeting held in Rockville, Md., representing 35 citizens, praying for a national constitutional prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition by a town meeting of Rockville, Md., representing 40 citizens, praying the passage of a national prohibition constitutional amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition by a town meeting of Keedysville, Md., representing 81 citizens, praying for a national constitutional prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of a town meeting held in Middletown, Md., representing 50 citizens, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of a town meeting held in Middletown, Md., representing 445 citizens, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of a town meeting in Middletown, Md., representing 600 citizens, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Zion Baptist Church, of Hagerstown, Md., representing 75 citizens, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 40 citizens of Smithsburg, Md., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LIEB: Petitions of Richard Knoll, William J. J. Becker, George William Matthews, Henry Winterman, Theodore Peters, Charles J. Mitchell, Ben Schulte, Joe Gyr, John L. Hoelscher, John Salzman, Henry Schnarr, Fred Rubbert, Joseph Winiger, Philip Seitz, Walter Kiler, sr., Charles W. Robinson, Richard Fitzgerald, Frank Salmen, and J. L. Coleman, all of Evansville, Ind., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Petition of 28 citizens of New Britain, Conn., favoring the passage of the Hobson-Sheppard measures for national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCLELLAN: Petitions of 313 citizens of Coxsackie, 35 citizens of Plattekill, 60 citizens of Scoharie County, 165 citizens of Sloansville, and 410 citizens of Esperance, all in the State of New York, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of Ulster County, N. Y., and of 18 voters of the twenty-seventh congressional district of New York, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKENZIE: Petition of sundry citizens of the thirteenth congressional district of Illinois against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MADDEN: Petition of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MAPES: Petition of 1,738 citizens of the fifth district of Michigan against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MERRITT: Petitions of 60 citizens of Bombay, 450 citizens of Gouverneur, 48 citizens of Brasher Falls, 1,365 citizens of Chateaugay, 220 citizens of Moira, and 181 citizens of St. Regis Falls, all in the State of New York, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Andrew De Celle, of Plattsburg, N. Y., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOTT: Petition of the Merchants' Association of New York against further extension of the Parcel Post Service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of the thirty-second New York district against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Oswego, Cleveland, Williamstown, and Mannsville, N. Y., favoring House bill 12928, relative to compensatory time for Sunday work by postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of J. E. Danna, of Oswego, N. Y., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Oneida, N. Y., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Williamstown, Cleveland, Oswego, and Mannsville, N. Y., against Sabbath-observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Victor Valley Mutual Water & Power District Association, of Los Angeles, Cal., relative to improvements for Mojave River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma: Petition of sundry citizens of Tulsa, Okla., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'LEARY: Petition of sundry citizens of New York, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of F. R. Medbery, of East Providence; William F. Janes, and various members of the South Baptist Church; the Gifford, sr., Department of Mathewson Street Methodist Episcopal Sunday School; Ida N. Lee, secretary Livingstone Young Women's Christian Temperance Union; the Church of the New Jerusalem; the Swedish Free Congregational Church Sunday School; the Young People's Society of Advent Christian Church, all of Providence; and the Second Baptist Church of East Providence, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Local Union No. 534, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, favoring Bartlett-Bacon anti-injunction bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of A. C. Thompson, of Westerly, R. I., relative to a standard barrel for cranberries; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of the Providence (R. I.) Council of Jewish Women, favoring House bill 1915, relative to naturalization of immigrants; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Pawtucket (R. I.) Chapter Daughters of the American Revolution against changing the United States flag; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PETERS of Maine: Petition of 83 citizens of Hartland, 35 citizens of North Lubec, 50 citizens of Bar Harbor, 42 citizens of Monroe, 27 citizens of Ripley, 63 citizens of Gardiner, 46 citizens of Searsport, 50 citizens of Gray, 13 citizens of Eastport, 24 citizens of Readfield, 25 citizens of South Penobscot, sundry citizens of Waldoboro, Winslows Mills, Dedham, New Portland, Pittsfield, and Bluehill; the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Belfast; the Highland Grange, of North Penobscot; the Grand Lodge of Maine, International Order of Good Templars, of Waterville; the Massapaqua Grange, of Bluehill; the Epworth League of Eastport; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Winterport; the Kennebec Pomona Grange, of Monmouth; the Chelsea Grange, of Chelsea; the Skowhegan Grange, of Skowhegan; the Friends Church of Manchester; the Congregational Church of Dedham; and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Waldoboro, all in the State of Maine, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: Petition of Waterbury Typographical Union, No. 329, of Waterbury, Conn., favoring passage of the Bartlett-Bacon bill (H. R. 1873); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of James G. Blaine Council, No. 1, of Stamford, Conn., protesting against any change in the American flag; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of sundry citizens of Massachusetts against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCOTT: Petitions of sundry citizens of Danbury, Cherokee, and Sioux City, all in the State of Iowa, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions signed by the officers of the following churches and societies: The Methodist Episcopal Church of Smithland, representing 48 people; the Peterson Union, representing 69 people; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Merrill, representing 11 people; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Early, representing 200 people; the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church of Battle Creek, representing 60 people; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Arnolds Park, representing 61 people; the Archer and Baker Methodist Episcopal Churches of Archer, representing 75 people; the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Pierson, representing 80 people; the Nemaha Improvement Club, of Nemaha, representing 95 people; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Early, representing 32 people; the First Congregational Church of Cherokee, representing 140 people; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Battle Creek, representing 60 people; the Union Meeting of Pierson, representing 250 people; the Swedish Methodist Episcopal Church of Sioux City, representing 50 people; the Fostoria and Meadow Churches, of Fostoria, representing 68 people; the Church of Christ of Pierson, representing 36 people; the Dunkard Church of Kingsley, representing 55 people; the First Congregational Church of Whiting, representing 216 people; the Providence Methodist Episcopal Church, of Pierson, representing 60 people; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Merrill, representing 80 people; the First Presbyterian Church of Early, representing 140 people; the First Congregational Church of Castana, representing 120 people; various public-school pupils of Arnolds Park, representing 75 people; the German Methodist Episcopal Church, 30 people, the Swedish Baptist Church, 150 people, the St. John's Lutheran Church, 425 people, the Swedish Evangelist Lutheran Church, 888 people, the Swedish Mission Church, 400 people, the First Methodist Episcopal Church, 450 people, the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, 750 people, all of Sioux City; the First Congregational Church of Onawa, representing 130 families; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Anthon, representing 15 people; the Friends Church of Arnolds Park, representing 55 people; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Battle Creek, representing 25 people; the Presbyterian Church of Larrabee, representing 52 people; the Congregational Church of Primghar, representing 50 people; also petition of residents of Bronson, Westfield, and Sioux City, all in the State of Iowa, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of eleventh congressional district of Iowa, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SELDOMRIDGE: Petitions of sundry citizens of Colorado Springs, Colo., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Petitions of 1,243 citizens of Boise, 170 citizens of Lewiston, and 45 citizens of Soldier, all in the State of Idaho, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. J. M. C. SMITH: Petitions of 30 citizens of Dimondale, 6 citizens of Eaton Rapids, 19 citizens of Battle Creek, and 12 citizens of Charlotte, all in the State of Michigan, favoring bill to amend the postal and civil-service laws (H. R. 12928); to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, protests of 30 citizens of Dimondale, 6 citizens of Eaton Rapids, 16 citizens of Battle Creek, and 21 citizens of Charlotte, all in the State of Michigan, against Sunday-observance bill (H. R. 7826); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: Petition of R. L. Irving and other citizens of Gainesville, Tex., favoring Federal censorship of motion pictures; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: Papers to accompany a bill (H. R. 2273) for the relief of A. H. Dolly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of 29 citizens of Grant County, W. Va., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TEMPLE: Petitions of sundry citizens of Fallston, Beaver Falls, New Galilee, Ambridge, Economy, New Castle, Beaver, Rochester, New Brighton, Eastbrook, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. THACHER: Petition of sundry citizens of Plymouth, Mass., relative to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TREADWAY: Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Alex Renton and others, favoring the "One hundred years' peace celebration"; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WALLIN: Petitions of sundry citizens of Johnstown, N. Y., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of Jacob Frank and 14 other citizens of Findlay, Ohio, protesting against the adoption of House joint resolution 168, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Isaac Gibson and John Shuler, of Vanburen, Ohio, protesting against the adoption of House joint resolution 168, relating to national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 21, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art Lord of all. Thy will is the supreme law of all nations. Thy will is the highest ground of human obligation. We seek Thy favor and blessing upon us as a nation intrusted with a great mission among the nations of the earth. We pray that the action of this Government may be approved in the court of high Heaven. We thank Thee for American statesmanship and for American valor. Give unto us the assurance of Divine favor and make us brave to protect the sacred inheritance which has been committed to us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. OWEN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order. [After a pause.] Reports of committees. [After a pause.] Introduction of bills and joint resolutions. Concurrent and other resolutions.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I introduced a resolution yesterday which, at my suggestion, went over under the rule. I ask unanimous consent that it may retain its place. I do not care to call it up to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the resolution will go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The first business on the calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3112) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Senate resolution 156, limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. HUGHES. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Senate resolution 84, providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. VARDAMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Senate resolution 218, proposing an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 26) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 3023) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was announced as next in order.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the condition of trade in China, for the purpose of determining the desirability of establishing there a permanent exposition of the products of the United States of America, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2425) to authorize the Roanoke River Development Co. to construct and maintain a dam across the Roanoke River in Mecklenburg County, in the State of Virginia, approximately 20 miles below the town of Clarksville, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3971) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 1986) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry Fuller was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3504) to correct the military record of Peter Duchane was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1990) to correct the military record of Samuel J. Kearns was announced as next in order.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Senate resolution 254, to create a special committee of five Senators to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission in investigating certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 121) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 6827) to amend an act entitled "An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes," approved August 14, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4552) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. SHIVELY. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to report, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, House joint resolution 251, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I submit a report (No. 437) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

Mr. LODGE. Let the joint resolution be read as proposed to be amended by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution as proposed to be amended by the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee report the following as a substitute for the joint resolution:

In view of the facts presented by the President of the United States in his address delivered to the Congress in joint session on the 20th day of April, 1914, with regard to certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States in Mexico: Be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States; be it further

Resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico.

Amend the title so as to read: A joint resolution justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. LIPPITT. I object.

Mr. LODGE. Before the objection is made, I will say that an objection made at this time carries this matter over until Wednesday. I do not think a matter of this great importance should be passed over until Wednesday, although, of course, one objection will do it. I was in hopes that we might agree to take a recess until 12 o'clock to-day, and then take up the joint resolution for such disposition as the Senate may desire to give it. I wish very much the Senator from Rhode Island would be willing to withdraw his objection, if we could make an arrangement for a recess.

Mr. SHIVELY. Do I understand that the Senator withdraws his objection?

Mr. LODGE. I did not make the objection. I can not withdraw it. I asked the Senator from Rhode Island if he would not be willing to withdraw his objection and permit us to take a recess until 12 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SHIVELY. The proposition is that we shall now take a recess until 12 o'clock to-day?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. With the agreement that the joint resolution shall then be taken up?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. To be considered then?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We had better meet as early as the House.

Mr. SHIVELY. Could the Senator make it 10 o'clock to-day?

Mr. LODGE. I am afraid——

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I think a matter of this character ought to be considered by this body entirely without any appearance of haste and in a most calm and moderate way. I am utterly opposed to taking it up at this hour and under the conditions that prevail here now. If it is the opinion of the other Members of the Senate that they would like to take the matter up at 12 o'clock to-day instead of putting it over to Wednesday, as my objection would compel to be done if persisted in, I will agree to it, but I should not care to withdraw my objection without any such understanding. If it is agreeable, and if that is the proper way to do it, I would withdraw my objection, reserving my right to object if any action is taken other than to take a recess until 12 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SHIVELY. My understanding of the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts was that we should now take a recess until 12 o'clock to-day and then take up the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; that is my proposition.

Mr. SHIVELY. We agree to that.

Mr. LIPPITT. With that understanding, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That requires unanimous consent, and I do not agree to take a recess until 12 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. It requires no unanimous consent to take a recess.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will agree to take a recess until 10 o'clock. The House meets at 10.

Mr. LODGE. It does not require unanimous consent to take a recess.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator was about to ask for unanimous consent. I understand that it does not require unanimous consent. If a recess is to be taken until 12 o'clock, I want to have it taken on a vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What has the hour of meeting of the House to do with it?

Mr. LODGE. I simply want to give notice that I shall offer an amendment, to be considered at the proper time, to the preamble reported by the majority of the committee. I ask to have it printed.

Mr. LIPPITT. Does that interfere with the understanding?

Mr. LODGE. No; I only want to offer the amendment and have it printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will in nowise interfere with the understanding. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the preamble reported by the committee, substitute the following:

That the state of unrestrained violence and anarchy which exists in Mexico, the numerous unchecked and unpunished murders of American citizens and the spoliation of their property in that country, the impossibility of securing protection or redress by diplomatic methods in the absence of lawful or effective authority, the inability of Mexico to discharge its international obligations, the unprovoked insults and indignities inflicted upon the flag and the uniform of the United States by the armed forces in occupation of large parts of Mexican territory have become intolerable.

That the self-respect and dignity of the United States and the duty to protect its citizens and its international rights require that such a course be followed in Mexico by our Government as to compel respect and observance of its rights.

Mr. SHIVELY. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to agree that if a recess is taken until 12 o'clock to-day he is willing that the joint resolution shall then be taken up?

Mr. LIPPITT. I am willing that it should be taken up at 12 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. JAMES. Just a moment. The Senator agrees that he will make no objection. Perhaps some others might. Does the Senator get unanimous consent that the matter be taken up at 12 o'clock?

Mr. LODGE. We are perfectly ready to do that, but the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] objected.

Mr. SHIVELY. He did not object to taking it up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggested that we meet at 10 o'clock, because the House meets at 10.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The House can take a recess until 12 o'clock.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should not feel like withdrawing my objection if the understanding is that we shall meet at an earlier hour than 12 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SHIVELY. With the statement that has been made by the Senator from Rhode Island before the Senate, I move that we now take a recess until 12 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SWANSON. Pending that I should like to make a suggestion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to withdraw the objection I made a moment ago.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt about the unanimous consent.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then we have unanimous consent to take a recess until 12 o'clock to-day, when this joint resolution will be taken up.

Mr. JAMES. For consideration.

Mr. SHIVELY. For consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to withdraw the objection I made. I do not know whether the Vice President heard me or not.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair to state the unanimous-consent agreeement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unanimous-consent agreement is that the Senate of the United States will take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian to-day, at which time, by unanimous consent, there being now in the knowledge of the Chair more than a quorum present, the Senate of the United States will proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution just reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered; and the Senate of the United States is in recess until 12 o'clock meridian to-day.

The Senate thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m., Tuesday, April 21) took a recess until 12 o'clock meridian, Tuesday, April 21, 1914.

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 251.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands against Victoriano Huerta.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Hughes	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	James	Overman	Smoot
Bristow	Johnson	Page	Sterling
Bryan	Jones	Penrose	Sutherland
Burleigh	Kenyon	Perkins	Swanson
Catron	Kern	Pittman	Thomas
Chamberlain	La Follette	Poindexter	Thompson
Chilton	Lane	Pomerene	Tillman
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lewis	Reed	Vardaman
Colt	Lippitt	Robinson	Walsh
Crawford	Lodge	Saulsbury	Warren
Cummins	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Sherman	West
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Williams
Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Works
Hitchcock	Norris	Smith, Md.

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Chamber by illness.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] and also of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. Both Senators have general pairs.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in a situation of the highest seriousness, such as that which now confronts the Congress, it is well to remember that the responsibility of the Senate is greater than that of any other branch of the Government. War can be declared only by the House and by the Senate. Peace can be made only by the President and the Senate. Neither peace nor war can be made without the assent of the Senate of the United States. In my judgment, Mr. President, that places upon us a peculiar responsibility. Whatever action is taken in such a situation as this is preeminently the action of the Senate.

The power to declare war is vested by the Constitution in the Congress alone. The President alone can initiate negotiations. He alone can frame treaties and submit them to this body. The great weapons of diplomacy are his and not ours. But when we come to the threshold of a war the power is vested in the Congress of the United States alone. When the President comes to Congress and lays before it a controversy with a foreign nation, he comes to that branch of the Government in whose hands rests the great issue of peace or war. When he remits it to Congress he takes the last step that precedes war.

I am aware that the President, as he said in his message, could have gone on and taken more steps than he has taken under his constitutional authority as Executive and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. But he has come to us. He has come to the body which, in foreign relations, exercises the power of declaring war. I think that he was right to do so. With Congress in session I think it would have been unwise for him to have proceeded further without the action of the Houses. I am sure that he would not desire to expose himself to the words of indictment uttered by Webster when he said, "No one declared the Mexican War; Mr. Polk made it."

Once before during my service in this body a President of the United States remitted to Congress the question which had arisen between this Government and another power and which in its issues involved war. After President McKinley had sent in that message resolutions, as I remember, were drafted by the House of Representatives, passed by that body, and sent to the Senate. Here they were amended. Then they went to conference, the conference agreed on a report, and the resolutions were adopted by the two Houses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts how long it took to do all that?

Mr. LODGE. I do not remember just how long a time it took, but I know that it took more than a day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The message of President McKinley was received by the Senate on the 11th of April. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations with accompanying papers on the same day, after brief debate, in which two or three Senators participated. Resolutions were reported back to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations on the 13th of April. They were debated from the beginning of that session on the 13th until the close of the session on the 16th of April at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon when they were passed by the Senate. That debate was participated in by a very considerable proportion of the membership of the Senate.

The House of Representatives concurred in the resolution passed by the Senate with an amendment and reported that action back to the Senate on the 18th of April and asked for a conference. A conference was agreed upon, and after extended debate, at the close of the day's session, or about 6 o'clock on the 18th, the conference report was agreed to by the Senate. But my recollection is that the House refused to concur and that it required an evening session to complete the work and adopt the conference report.

Mr. LODGE. I am much indebted to the Senator from Wisconsin for giving those facts so precisely. The resolutions were finally agreed to——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I will not yield just at this moment. The resolutions were finally agreed to on the legislative day of the 18th, but on the calendar day of the 19th, after midnight. I did not remember the date of the message, but it appears that no less than seven days elapsed between the transmission of the message and the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the question that I asked, or intended to ask, was how long after the House acted in connection with the Cuban-Hispanian-American question was it before the Senate acted, and that question has not been answered. A little reminiscence might possibly be interesting to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would allow the reminiscence to come later. I should like to finish what I have to say. I shall be very brief. I will answer any question that I can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course I will not be so discourteous as to insist upon an interruption, and I shall take my seat if the Senator from Massachusetts does not wish to hear what I wanted to say.

Mr. LODGE. I yield. The Senator can say what he pleases.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want the Senator to yield to me unwillingly; but I wanted to say that when this question came before the House of Representatives I was at that time a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of that body, and I had been bitterly opposed to war with Spain about Cuba. The Speaker of the House had been opposed to it. Mr. McKinley wanted to avoid it all that he could, and I was doing all that I could to help him avoid it.

When that debate came up in the House, I remember distinctly that the only time I had to express my opinion was one minute under the rules of the House, and in that one minute I rose and said substantially that I had not wanted war but that the situation was such that the United States must stand behind the President of the United States, and that I stood behind him.

Now, whatever the parliamentary record may be, I know that in the House of Representatives upon that day a spokesman for the Democrats upon the Foreign Affairs Committee had one minute in which to express his opinion.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is not the House of Representatives; this is the Senate of the United States; and the Senator from Wisconsin has just shown that seven days elapsed between the coming in of President McKinley's message and action by the two Houses.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am reluctant to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I do not object to interruption at all. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But my recollection—and I have examined the record—is that the resolutions which were finally adopted were adopted in face of the dissenting vote both in the other House and in the Senate of practically the entire Democratic representation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is that? [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. LODGE. I decline to yield further.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say there were only seven men who voted against the resolution of intervention that President McKinley sent to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment. The Chair must announce to the galleries that there is an unqualified rule of the Senate that there must be neither approval nor disapproval manifested in the galleries, and that if it is manifested, it will be the duty of the Chair to clear the galleries. The Chair must request of Senators that, having made that rule for the galleries, they observe it for themselves.

Mr. LEWIS. May I be permitted to say to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] did not mean to refer to the House minority or to the House Democrats at that time as opposing the resolution? Doubtless he referred to the Senate. I feel I must correct that impression before the country. I was present there, and I know the Senator's statement to be an error.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There were only seven votes against the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, no resolutions were sent to Congress by President McKinley. The resolutions were drafted, amended, and settled here.

Now, Mr. President, to return to what I was trying to say about the course pursued with the resolutions which Spain accepted as a declaration of war. The subsequent act declaring war, which was passed by Congress, dates the beginning of the war from the 21st of April, and was passed three or four days after the resolutions. But the resolutions were taken as a substantive declaration of war.

These resolutions now before us, Mr. President, use the word "justify." To my mind that makes no difference whatever in their character. Whether we justify the President or empower or authorize him to use the forces of the United States for any purpose, the result is the same. In this case, Mr. President, there will be, and can be, I take it, no formal declaration of war. There is no government from our point of view yet recognized against which we can declare war. The President in his message disclaimed any hostility to the Mexican people, and by a unanimous vote of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate a clause was adopted disclaiming any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose of making war upon Mexico.

These resolutions are not in themselves a formal declaration of war, but they authorize armed intervention. The consequences of an armed intervention are, in many respects, precisely the same as war, but armed intervention presents a task less capable of quick completion, less fertile in the swift glory of victories won, and it may bring with it a long period of the exercise of what would be a police power in a foreign country, involving vast expense, great loss of life perhaps, and, after months or possibly years, yielding nothing more than the satisfaction of feeling that we had brought back peace, order, and liberty to a distracted country.

The culmination of wrongs and affronts which finds expression in these resolutions has come from the incident at Tampico. I need not rehearse that incident; it is well known to all who do me the honor to listen to me. American seamen, sailors from an American ship of war, were arrested; two of them were taken from a boat from which floated the American flag, and which in law was the soil of the United States, and all were then marched up into the town, and shortly afterwards released. I will not go on to the other incident at Vera Cruz mentioned by the President, but there is no doubt whatever in my mind that the action at Tampico constituted an insult to the American flag and to the American uniform.

Mr. President, no nation which desires to maintain its self-respect can suffer an insult to its uniform and to its flag to pass unnoticed. It is its duty to seek proper atonement and reparation, but the atonement to be given by a government or by a nation for an insult or wrong to another nation is well recognized in the form of a salute to the flag of the injured nation. That salute, however, Mr. President, is governmental action. It is the only means by which a government of any kind or an organized military force of any kind can as an entity express its regret for a wrong done to another nation.

The salute of apology is not and can not be offered by an individual. It can not be personal. Certainly, Mr. President, no one can question that in seeking atonement for an insult to the flag all party considerations vanish and we all stand alike behind the President, who seeks for that proper atonement. I have seen intimations that those of us who do not approve the resolution as adopted by the House and who do not think the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, although greatly improved in form over that passed by the House, are sufficient—I have seen intimations, I say, that we were not duly sensitive to the honor of the flag.

Mr. President, the party to which I belong, and whose members sit around me here, has a somewhat long tradition; and in that tradition, I think I may say, without partisan boasting, devotion to the flag of the United States has not been lacking. The old State, which I have the honor to represent in part, has done something for the flag in the days that are gone. The best blood of Massachusetts, like that of the States of the Senators who sit around me here, was poured out for that flag, and let it be understood once for all that there are no men in the broad confines of the United States who are more sensitive to the honor of the flag than the men who bear the name Republican and who represent the States which gave their all that there might be but one flag in this country.

Mr. President, we go further; we think not only that the honor of the flag should be maintained—that due atonement should be demanded and enforced for any insult to it, but we believe that something should be done and something said about that which the flag covers. The flag covers the citizens of the United States; they look to it as the emblem of the great Government and the great Nation to which they owe allegiance and from which they expect protection. More than 150 American citizens—innocent, helpless people—have been murdered upon Mexican soil. I, for one, when I demand atonement for the insult to the flag at Tampico, can not put aside those people who have perished in Mexico and whose deaths have gone unnoticed and unavenged. I, for one, speaking only as a single Senator of this body, can not consent, at this great crisis, to pass by in silence the wrongs which have been done to innocent people lawfully in another country without declaring that there is another grievous wrong besides this insult to the flag to be atoned, a wrong which must not be and shall not be repeated.

Moreover, Mr. President, speaking for myself, I can not be placed in a position—and the action of the Senate is the action of each one of us—I can not be placed in a position where I appear either directly or indirectly to pick and choose between the factions which tear Mexico asunder at this moment. I will not, for one, without a protest at least, join in any resolutions which can by any construction put the United States in the attitude of selecting for support one murderer and cutthroat in preference to another murderer and cutthroat.

If we intervene in Mexico it must be for the protection of American citizens; it must be in the hope that by our intervention we shall try at least to bring back peace and order to that distracted country, for which we have no feeling but one of friendship. It must not be that we go there to take down one man and set up another.

I have no desire to criticize the President for his refusal to recognize Gen. Huerta. The President, no doubt, proceeded on grounds which seemed to him good and sufficient. I condemn as strongly as he can the methods of treachery and bloodshed by which Gen. Huerta has reached his present position; but the fact that I condemn Huerta's methods does not make me willing to put myself in a position whereby any interpretation—any distortion, if you please—of the action which we take or the words which we utter here, can make it appear that we are supporting Pancho Villa and the puppet with him—Pancho Villa who began life as a hired assassin and whose pathway has been marked by bloodshed, by rapine, by plunder, by unnameable crimes which are a disgrace to the century in which we live.

Mr. President, it is for these reasons that the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations has presented the amendment to the preamble which is lying upon your desks this morning. There is not one statement in that preamble, I venture to say, that can be denied; every sentence contains a truth—melancholy, tragic truths, many of them. It is not the purpose of the minority in offering that preamble to make this resolution a declaration of war or to broaden its scope for any such purpose as that. As it stands it means armed intervention, and armed intervention it will remain whether my amendment is adopted or not.

Let us be under no misapprehension as to where this resolution, either in the form passed by the House or in that reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, leads. It leads to armed intervention. The first step that will be taken under it will be the seizure of Vera Cruz. Does anyone suppose for one moment that we can seize Vera Cruz without some show of resistance on the part of those who now hold it? It is inconceivable. The day we take Vera Cruz we have intervened; you can not narrow that fact; we have intervened, and if we are to stand by the President, as everyone intends so to stand, in seeking atonement for the insult to the flag, we say that intervention should rest on grounds so broad that the civilized world can not contest the righteousness of the act.

We are engaged at this moment, Mr. President, not only in dealing with the gravest responsibility that can come before the American Congress, but we are engaged, as not often happens, in a great historic transaction. The grounds of our action here to-day will lie before the world and will come to the tribunal of history.

If we are to intervene for any cause or at any point in Mexican territory, I want it to be done on broad, sufficient grounds. I want to strip the transaction of any personal character whatever. I want to lift it up from the level of personal hostility and place it on the broad ground of great national action, taken in the interest and for the protection of American lives in a foreign country, and for the purpose of restoring peace and order, if we can, to the unhappy people just across our border. I want to place it on a ground where we shall all be content to have it rest. I want to place it upon a ground where the nations of the earth, in whose presence we are acting to-day, shall admit the justice and the high motives of our action. I want to place it upon a ground upon which we shall not fear to appeal to the judgment seat of history.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the usefulness of the action proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations depends on the expedition with which such action is taken. The attempted parallels and comparisons by Senators of the time taken in 1898 and the time that should be taken on the proposed resolution utterly fail, for the reason that the resolution of 1898 was a declaration of war, while this resolution disclaims any purpose to make war, but seeks to preserve peace. Whether 1 day or 5 days or 10 days are consumed in declaring war may not be important. In the present situation promptness in action is of transcendent importance. It is never too late to declare war; it easily may become too late to preserve peace.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] disclaims any wish or purpose to aggravate the situation or provoke a state of war. I can do no less than credit the Senator with good faith in making that disclaimer; but whatever may be the high purpose and good faith of the Senator in making the disclaimer, the manifest effect of the amendment which he has presented and is pressing on the Senate is to produce the very result which he professes anxiety to avoid. The President has asked no authority from the Congress. Why? Because in what he has done, is doing, and proposes to do he is neither making war nor exercising any other authority not already confided to him by the Constitution. In his address to the joint session he says:

> No doubt I could do what is necessary in the circumstances to enforce respect for our Government without recourse to the Congress and yet not exceed my constitutional powers as President, but I do not wish to act in a matter possibly of so grave consequence except in close conference and cooperation with both the Senate and House. I therefore come to ask your approval that I should use the armed forces in such way and to such extent as may be necessary to obtain from Gen. Huerta and his adherents the fullest recognition of the rights and dignity of the United States, even amidst the distressing conditions unhappily obtaining in Mexico.

It is clear that the President asks no power that he does not already possess. The Congress is not asked to declare war. Certain affronts and indignities have been inflicted on the United States which, if permitted to go unresented, must lead to further contemptuous aggressions and consequent war. The President asks no authority from Congress, but appeals for approval by Congress of the course he already has authority to take to stop further aggressions by compelling suitable reparation for the insults to the flag of our country and the uniform of our Navy. In response to this appeal the Committee on Foreign Relations reported the following resolution:

> In view of the facts presented by the President of the United States in his address delivered to Congress in joint session on the 20th day of April, 1914, with regard to certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States in Mexico: Be it
>
> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States; be it further
>
> Resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SHIVELY. I am anxious for an early vote, and expect to hasten my remarks to a conclusion. However, I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wanted to ask the Senator a question in connection with the statement just made by him. The Senator from Massachusetts has stated that if this resolution passes the first act of the administration will be the seizure of Vera Cruz, by force if necessary, using the armed forces of the United States for that purpose. I should like to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, that would be an act of peace or an act of war?

Mr. SHIVELY. The seizure of the customhouse at Vera Cruz under the circumstances would not necessarily be an act of war. The act would be in the nature of reprisal to compel satisfaction for an injury done. The injury was patent, and the act would not justify the power which inflicted the injury in making war. That such power might seize on the act as a pretext for further aggression is true. The issue of peace or war is ahead of us on the calendar of fate. Certain it is that the United States have on several occasions landed troops on foreign soil and seized and held property to compel redress of injuries, and have done this without producing war. Whether there shall be war is a choice that lies with the power that committed the offense and on which demand for reparation was made. Our effort is to preserve peace.

Now, Mr. President, I want the Senate to note with special care the scope and purport of the resolves submitted by the Committee on Foreign Relations. For the best of reasons, I know that the Senator from Massachusetts as a member of the committee approved these resolves. He professes to approve them now. He does not propose to amend the resolves. His proposed amendment goes only to the preamble. The preamble submitted by the committee, and which the Senator asks us to displace, comprehends by reference to the address the facts submitted by the President and in view of which the President asks approval of his action. It is for this preamble the Senator offers his substitute.

But, preliminary to discussing the proposed substitute, I want the Senate to mark the character and import of the transaction in Mexico on which our Government has been constrained to act. A squad of our men of the Navy was engaged at Tampico in taking a supply of gasoline from the shore onto one of our boats. They were doing this at the accustomed place. Their employment was legitimate and peaceful. While so employed they were placed under arrest by the armed forces dominant in that district in Mexico. When seized, two of the men were on the boat. The flag of the United States was flying from the bow and the stern of the boat. None of the men bore arms. They were in charge of a commissioned officer of our Navy. The officer and men were taken up street and marched about the town. All wore the uniform of the Navy. No ingenuity of Senators can confuse these acts of aggression with the depredations suffered by American citizens in common with the native population in the course of revolution. They go beyond that. They could not be the result of mistake. The conduct of the offending authority was not an inadvertence. It was not accident. It was not the result of blundering ignorance. All the attending circumstances show it to have been deliberate, intentional, willful, and wanton. It was aimed directly against our Government, and carried wanton insult to the honor, the authority, the sovereignty of the United States.

The reparation demanded by our Government was well within the offense and in conformity with the usages of civilized nations. On occasions in the past where acts of our own were transgressive, and though they bore no sign of malevolence, our Government promptly made reparation by firing the salute with the usual forms and in the usual way, and thus without humiliation closed the incident to the credit of all concerned. In seeking to preserve peace your committee do not feel at liberty to ignore the notorious fact that there are contending military factions in Mexico, or the equally notorious fact that it was the de facto authorities of only one of them that inflicted the indignities which produced the crisis. Acting in view of these facts, the committee approve a course of conduct aimed at the real offenders and designed to promote peace through security against repetition of the offense.

Now, returning, Mr. President, to the amendment presented and urged by the Senator from Massachusetts, I again ask the Senate to mark how his proposed preamble comports with the resolves to which he would prefix it. The last of these resolves is:

That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war on Mexico.

In the light of the Senator's approvel of this resolve, I read the first clause of his proposed preamble:

That the state of unrestrained violence and anarchy which exists in Mexico * * *.

What is the purpose of this language? To begin with, it is a manifest exaggeration. Over two-thirds of the populated territory of Mexico is at peace. The courts are open. The usual civil processes are in force. In any event, we are here engaged in an effort to avoid war, and at the same time to impress on the de facto authorities in the disturbed districts of Mexico that our flag and what it stands for must be respected.

The next clause of the proposed preamble reads:

The numerous and unchecked and unpunished murders of American citizens and the spoliation of their property in that country * * *.

No one can deplore more than I do violence to American citizens, whether in Mexico or in the United States. But, again, I inquire as to the purpose of the language employed in the proposed preamble. It should not be forgotten that our own country is not exempt from the crime of murder. There were more homicides committed in a single city of the United States last year than American citizens have been killed in Mexico in all the years since the revolt against Diaz in that country began. It is a regrettable fact that only a few of the perpetrators of these crimes were punished. The majority was not even apprehended. There has been a larger number of violent deaths attending industrial conflict in a single State of the Union within the last year than of American citizens in Mexico within the over three years of the revolutionary period. How many of those suffering violent death in this country were aliens I do not know. But I do know that were a foreign Government to refer to them and solemnly incorporate the language of this clause of the proposed preamble in an official document, such action would receive only one interpretation in the United States.

The further clauses which distinguish the proposed preamble from that submitted by the committee read:

The impossibility of securing protection or redress by diplomatic methods in the absence of lawful or effective authority—

And—

The inability of Mexico to discharge its international obligations.

These two clauses are only implications from the other clauses. They add nothing to what has gone before, and only emphasize the mischief of the proposed amendment. Our Government has never undertaken to secure to its citizen in a foreign country a higher level of justice and protection than that enjoyed by the natives of the community among whom he resides. And this is the utmost limit of security which any nation undertakes. To go further than this would be to set up a rule provocative of constant and general war among nations.

When our citizens in Mexico are denied the usual course of justice in that country they have a just claim for redress. The clauses in the proposed preamble are wholesale and reckless in their assumptions. On demand by our Government criminals have been apprehended, tried, and executed in Mexico; imprisoned American citizens have been released in Mexico; and property has been restored to American citizens in Mexico. In all cases? No. Nothing is plainer than that in the nature of the situation it is often impossible to secure redress or indemnity until after peace and stable government are restored. After each of our own wars we established tribunals to investigate and adjudicate cases. It was many years after our war between the States before certain of our own claims against a foreign nation arising out of that struggle were finally settled. These natural and usual instrumentalities of peace following in the wake of war were overlooked in the preparation of the proposed preamble.

Moreover, the proposed amendment is an unmerited censure of the last and present administrations. From the beginning of the revolution in Mexico there were voices from certain quarters in the United States that have loudly clamored for armed intervention. When the insurrection first broke out there were over 60,000 men, women, and children from the United States scattered throughout Mexico. Were those who clamored for armed intervention solicitous for the lives of these men, women, and children, or was their solicitude based on fear of the "spoliation of property"? Certain it is that the vast majority of these men, women, and children was far from the border. Many were from five hundred to a thousand miles from any point of rescue. If the estimate placed on the Mexican people by those who have persistently demanded armed intervention be true, the march of armed forces across the border must have been the signal for general massacre of these helpless citizens before assistance could have reached them. President Taft did not trifle with the situation. President Wilson inherited a vexed and aggravated problem, and has handled it with firmness, prudence, and humanity.

Mr. President, whatever difference of opinion may exist among Senators as to the truthfulness or exaggerations of the statements in the preamble proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, I submit that there can be no difference of opinion as to what the effect, if not the design, of that preamble must be. If it concerned any great militant power of the world, the resolve that we have "no purpose to make war" would be idle and futile. The language of the proposed preamble is the language of war. Not simply of war on the organized forces that insulted the flag; it is an indiscriminate indictment of all de facto governments in Mexico, of all of Mexico as a country, of the whole Mexican people as a people. And we are asked to place this preamble over a resolve "that the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war on Mexico!"

Why this lame and impotent conclusion? Why make all the motions of war while professing a desire to conserve peace? If it is your purpose to make war, then so declare. The proposed amendment would engage the Senate in the sniveling pharisaism of proclaiming war in the preamble and peace in the resolves. It would give us an incongruous performance, thundering in the index and whispering in the text. It would transform a measure designed to approve steps to insure peace by enforcing reparation from those who deliberately insulted the authority of our Government into a measure of general indiscriminate war against the whole Mexican people. Even Senators who foreshadow such result should not be in a hurry to rush toward it. I repeat, it is never too late to make war.

Mr. President, I can not but believe that the theory that the basis of our action would be broadened by the proposed amendment to the preamble is an utterly mistaken conception. Such course would import into the measure questions of more or less disputed fact and serve to becloud the gravity of the offense committed at Tampico. The effect of minimizing the gravity of that offense would be to defeat every legitimate purpose we can have in view. Two of the men were on the boat. The gunboat of a nation is the soil of that nation in whatever waters it may be. They were in the service of their country; they were under the flag of their country; they were committing no offense and were entitled to be secure; they and the others who were seized wore the uniform of their country's Navy. The flag is more than a piece of tawdry bunting. The uniform of the Navy is more than the cloth from which it is made. It symbolizes the embattled spirit of the country. The man under the uniform is expected in time of stress and storm to promptly cross the dead line in defense of his country. If public indignity and insult to him are to go unresented and unnoticed, we should soon have no Navy. If the flag, the symbol of the power, the honor, and the justice of the United States, is to be wantonly flouted and insulted before the world with no reparation save a manifestly insincere expression of regret, then, indeed, are the lives and property of American citizens in Mexico more insecure than ever. The offense at Tampico, to say nothing of what followed it, forms no narrow basis for action by the President to enforce redress. The insult was to the whole Nation, and bears evidence of being so intended. To require prompt reparation is to take bond for larger security in the future to the lives of American citizens not only in the distracted districts of unhappy Mexico, but elsewhere as well.

The refinements heard to-day as to who should salute our flag, to whom or what the return salute should be made, and how the salutes should be made are to me less impressive even than the proposed amendment to the preamble. The de facto government or authority which was competent to deliberately insult our flag was competent to salute our flag or suffer the consequence of refusal. The return salute would be to no man nor to the power of any faction, but to the flag of the Mexican nation which floats over all factions. The salute of the flag is a usage among civilized nations by which amend for injury is made and controversy is closed which otherwise might drift into armed conflict. There is no mystery about the negotiations in the Tampico case. They have but one import. The contention for simultaneous salutes, then for a protocol to assure a return salute, and the final refusal to salute, like the arrest of our uniformed naval messenger in Vera Cruz and the suppression of our official dispatches in Mexico City, were all deliberate and wanton aggravations of the original affront. The difficulty was not one of forms. The usage of nations leaves no such difficulties. The difficulty was one of motive and purpose.

The advocates of the proposed substitute preamble seem uncertain as to how and against whom war would be declared. The proposed substitute leaves it against the whole Mexican people. Happily the purpose of those who oppose the proposed preamble is not to devise ways and methods of declaring war. If war must come, we shall meet the responsibilities that come with it. Should the effort to preserve peace fail, we know whence came the offense that provoked the crisis.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] points to the history of his State as a pledge to what may be expected of her should the country need the services of her sons. At least here we shall not differ. And while his State has a longer history, I can not permit even his good State to go before Indiana in reverence for the flag and that for which it stands. Indiana has signalized on hundreds of battle fields the sacrifices of which she is capable in defense of the flag and country. She sent nearly as many men into the service of the Union between 1861 and 1865 as both the leading candidates for President received votes in the State in 1860. But I feel too strongly the importance of early action by the Senate to strengthen the efforts to preserve peace, to yield to the strong temptation to dwell on the valor, patriotism, and devotion of my State in time of war.

Mr. President, I oppose the proposed substitute for the preamble, and earnestly counsel its rejection. I again remind the Senate that it points in one direction, while the resolves to which we are asked to prefix it point in the opposite direction. They are absolutely out of joint with one another. They are in direct antithesis, both in substance and in spirit. The adoption of the proposed amendment as a preamble would reduce the concluding resolve to a hollow sham, a reproach on the sincerity of the Senate. The preamble reported by the committee responds to the facts set forth in the President's address. The resolves as reported are in consonance with the recitations in the preamble. The address, preamble, and resolves make the case on which the President solicits the approval and justification of the Congress. It is manifest that the value to the country of this approval and justification must rest in its responsiveness to the President's appeal and the unanimity and cordiality with which it is given.

Mr. WILLIAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, would the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations a question before he proceeds?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I could not in courtesy refuse.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has already freely interrupted other Senators on the floor of the Senate this morning, so that I supposed that in making this very ordinary request I was not doing anything unusual or out of the way. If he feels that it would be discourteous, I certainly have no desire of forcing him to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have not said that the Senator from Rhode Island did anything out of the ordinary, according to the custom of the Senate. I merely replied that in ordinary courtesy I could not refuse to yield. If I had begun my first sentence to the Senate, it would have been a different affair; but I yield to the Senator—and I yield to him very freely and very willingly—in order to ask the question which he desires to ask.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his courtesy.

I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], who, on account of his position as acting chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, is in very close touch with the President of the United States on matters of this kind, and has information which has not yet come into the possession of the rest of us, what reply, if any, President Huerta made to the communication of the President of the United States asking for a salute, and which reply was to be made before 6 o'clock on Sunday last?

Mr. SHIVELY. My attention was diverted. Will the Senator repeat his question?

Mr. LIPPITT. The present administration came into office pledged to take the American people into their confidence to an extraordinary degree. Instead of doing so, they have surrounded all their actions with an extraordinary secrecy. I had hoped that when the President of the United States read his address to us yesterday he would accompany it with the documents and correspondence that had taken place in regard to this very important matter. Instead of that, we are left with no official information of any kind. I am trying to ascertain whether any reply was made to the ultimatum which was sent by the President of the United States to the President of Mexico, and to which an answer was demanded by 6 o'clock on Sunday night last. I presume that the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations would be in such close touch with the administration that he would know in regard to these matters.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the general implication of the Senator's remarks would seem to be that certain information has been wrongfully concealed. If he means by this that publicity should be given to all things transpiring in our foreign relations, I do not understand his view of such relations. The President is primarily charged by the Constitution with responsibility in our relations with foreign countries. It is patent that if these relations are not to be regarded as confidential within certain limits, and that if those whose business it is to conduct such relations shall be required to throw all the papers upon the table for inspection by the public, including the representatives of other governments than those party to them, such a thing as amicable foreign relations would be manifestly impossible. As to the specific case to which the Senator refers, I have not the official communication with me.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senator would tell me whether Gen. Huerta or President Huerta did or did not make a reply.

Mr. SHIVELY. A reply came from Mexico City.

Mr. LIPPITT. Could the Senator give us any information with regard to its character? Has the Senator seen it?

Mr. SHIVELY. I will furnish the Senator a copy of the communication later in the day if he feels that he has not seen a copy of it.

Mr. LIPPITT. Well, Mr. President, I am only asking this question so that we may have the exact information required on which we ought to act in deciding a matter of this kind.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator please——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIVELY. Why, Mr. President, it was published in every newspaper throughout the United States; there was no concealment whatever about it.

Mr. LIPPITT. I had hoped that we would get our information in some more official manner than through the newspapers. It seems to me that there should be full information and copies of all correspondence laid before this body before this matter is voted upon. I am trying to find out whether or not there really was any reply made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from Mississippi has yielded to me, and I will not take his time any further.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is no occasion, howsoever great or howsoever solemn, that can not be interfered with by a senatorial interruption. This is a very great and a very solemn occasion. One great nation upon one side and a divided people upon the other are set perhaps in solid phalanx against one another. The thought has occurred to me that the world is not yet quite civilized. Perhaps in 100 years, perhaps in 500 years the world may be civilized, but to-day the world is not quite civilized; and we are put where we must meet the world as the world thinks, as the world feels, and as the world does, and not as the world ought to feel, or ought to think, or ought to do.

I doubt not that a hundred years from now the senseless act of a Mexican colonel in arresting men upon an American boat, with the American flag flying at the prow and at the stern, will be laughed at by civilized men if invoked as a cause of war; and yet I know as well as I know my name is what it is that if the President of the United States, in the present condition of civilization, had passed by the insult to the flag of the United States, the insult to the uniform of the United States, there would have gone up from every hilltop and every valley in the United States resounding denunciations of his "cowardice," his "pusillanimity," his lack of "patriotism," and his "un-Americanism." So I stand here not prepared to meet this question in its true aspect, but prepared to meet it in its present aspect. With humanity such as it is, with humanity semibarbaric, and with humanity semicivilized, no nation has ever yet failed to resent an insult to its flag and to its uniform. The time will come after awhile when manhood and womanhood will say that a mere punctilio shall not lead men to kill one another; but that time has not yet come, and I face men who now, if I challenged that time, would denounce me as cowardly and pusillanimous and surrendering to the dictates of a Mexican military commander—would denounce me and my kind. So we have got to argue it as it is.

The other night my wife and I had gone to the Raleigh Hotel. I heard sounds on the street of rejoicing, of horns blowing, as if a new year had sounded upon the world, as if Christ had been resurrected—an Easter celebration. I asked what was the matter, and they said that a crowd down in front of the Washington Post newspaper building were celebrating. I asked what they were celebrating, and the reply was, "Celebrating the anticipation of war with Mexico." Then it struck me that mankind might be very much better employed if they were thoughtful and sad with the anticipation of war. I do not want to kill any Mexicans; I do not want any Mexicans to kill me. I have nothing against the Mexican people nor against the Mexican country. The President of the United States has nothing against the Mexican people and nothing against the Mexican country. He said so yesterday in an address to the Congress of the United States.

The preamble offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] presumes that there is a quarrel with Mexico. There is no quarrel with Mexico at all, nor with the Mexican people. God knows, you know, I know, the American people know that every sympathy we have in the world is for the divided factions in Mexico. We wish in our hearts that they were capable of self-government; we wish in our hearts that, if they were capable of it, they would exercise self-government; we wish in our hearts that nothing that has happened in Mexico, and that nothing that can happen in Mexico would call upon us to intervene in their purely domestic affairs. The Monroe doctrine itself was a pronunciamiento to the effect that no country upon the earth had a right to interfere in the domestic affairs of Central or South America. There may have been later on, under the administration of a notorious if not distinguished President of the United States, a different significance given to the Monroe doctrine, but that is what it originally meant. The United States said to the world: "You shall not interfere in the domestic affairs of the countries of Central and South America." And yet—and yet—and still yet—all Europe every day is standing on tiptoes and saying to us: "If you do not bring about domestic tranquillity and peace in Central and South America," according to the Monroe doctrine, "then we menace you with the threat that perhaps we may."

Mr. President, I confess that, so far as I am concerned, this is one of the saddest days in my life. I have got to do something that I do not like to do, that I do not want to do. I must surrender the ideals of the glorious future to the sentiment of the present. Nobody not a fool appeals to a glorious future against an actual, pressing present, whatever the present may be. You have to deal with the present, and you have to deal with the present according to the environment and heredity which have made the present; and, according to the environment and heredity of the present, no Government can afford to stand and at the same time fail to resent an insult to its flag and to its uniform.

If I were in a country where duels were being fought upon a question of punctilio or honor, I would say, "I think it is folly; I think it is nonsense; but I can not live and exist with self-respect in this community without according myself with the customs of the country. Therefore I shall allow no man to subject me to a direct insult without inviting him out to shoot or to be shot."

I take it, Mr. President and Senators, that a gentleman can forgive and overlook an injury. My neighbor's stock may run over my crop and I may go out and fix up his fence out of real good nature and let it pass; but when my neighbor comes to me and says, "I want to tweak your nose," that is a different proposition. You may forgive and overlook an injury, but you can not forgive and overlook an insult if both parties understand that it is an insult, and deliberately intended as such.

Huerta has studiously endeavored to insult the Government and the President of the United States. There is no doubt about what he has wanted to do. It is not a mere matter of injury; it is not a mere matter of property; it is not a mere matter of life. It is a matter of insult to the honor of the United States, which far transcends either life or property. I do not like it. I do not believe in flag idolatry or uniform idolatry any more than I do in any other sort of idolatry; and yet the world believes in it, and we are part of the world, and we must live in the world, and we can not live outside of the world until after we are dead.

The President of the United States sounded the right keynote, and that keynote is Huerta. The House of Representatives sounded the right keynote, and that keynote is Victoriano Huerta. My only objection to these resolutions is that in the preamble they leave out what the House put in it—the insults to the American flag and to the American uniform by Huerta.

When I vote for these resolutions, I vote for them solely upon the ground that I hope that in conference the House may insist upon reinserting the name of Gen. Huerta as the insulting party and the insulting cause; for all the insults we have received from Mexico, either to the flag or to the uniform, have come from him. I am not talking about injury now; I am talking about insult—a higher thing, a much more reprehensible thing, than mere injury.

During our War between the States hundreds of citizens of foreign countries were killed and imprisoned both by Confederate and by Federal troops, and hundreds of thousands of dollars of foreign property were taken by the one side and by the other. None of that furnished any occasion to intervene in the domestic affairs of our country. In so far as men have lost their lives in Mexico, Americans have been on an equal footing with Germans and Italians and Englishmen and other people. In so far as Americans have lost their property in Mexico, they have been on an equal footing; but in so far as mere insult has come, it has come to America alone.

Huerta has insulted no English uniform nor English flag, nor German uniform nor German flag; but he has flaunted himself in the face of the Mexican people as a safe insulter of the American flag and the American uniform. He has not trespassed upon our crop; he has tweaked our noses.

I hope that when this resolution comes out of conference it will come back with Gen. Huerta's name in it. I hope that the civilized world will understand that if war shall follow these resolutions—and if war shall follow them it will not be by our act, but by the act of Gen. Huerta—it shall not be war upon the Mexican people nor upon Mexico, but it shall be war upon Huerta until one of three things happens—either Huerta salutes that flag, or Huerta becomes an American prisoner, or Huerta dies. [Applause in one of the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will clear this gallery. Notice has been given once this morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have another reason for wanting to confine these resolutions to Huerta and to the insults which Huerta and Huerta's underlings have delivered to the uniform and to the flag. That other reason is this: If Huerta shall salute the flag or if Huerta shall be overturned or if Huerta shall die, any one of the three, then we can get out of Mexico. If the Lodge preamble were adopted, we should be compelled to stay in Mexico for other things besides this.

I am willing to go, even in flag idolatry, to the point of insisting upon a salute to the flag, because that is the present state of heredity and environment in the world; but I am not willing to go with an army into Mexico to stay there for other things. Why? Because I do not know what the other things shall be. It is mighty easy to get into Mexico. It is awfully easy to take Vera Cruz. It is mighty easy to close up the railroad between there and the City of Mexico. It is not a very difficult job to go to the City of Mexico; but it will be an awful job, Senators, to get out of Mexico after you get there. I do not want 10,000,000 of "greasers," more or less, incorporated in the American Republic either as a subject population or as coequal citizens with me. We have race problems enough now without that.

The VICE PRESIDENT (to the Sergeant at Arms). There is no trouble at all on this side of the gallery. If the occupants of the galleries will heed the warnings and obey the rule, there will be no trouble at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, is there order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to impress this upon my fellow Senators: It is an easy thing to go to Mexico. It is an easy thing to whip Mexico if we had occasion of war against Mexico, and we have not. We have no occasion of war against anybody except Victoriano Huerta; but it will be the hardest thing in the world to get out of Mexico after you go there.

You went into the Philippines in that sort of style, and you have not gotten out yet. There is a party in power to-day, one of the planks of whose platform was that it would get out. It has been in power two years or more, and it has not gotten out yet, and my prediction is that it will not. Why? Because, Mr. President, the greediest thing on the surface of the earth is the white man.

Every race has it crimes. Every race has its faults. The negro is sensual. The Chinaman wants to go into a state of exhilaration. The Hindu wants to go off finally into a general counion with the Divinity, while he dreams and does nothing. The white man's fault is greediness. He is the greediest creature that God ever made—greedy for land, greedy for money, greedy for power, greedy for influence, greedy for everything. In that particular respect he is inferior to the Chinaman or the Jap or the negro or anyone else that ever existed on the surface of this globe.

If you once get into Mexico, California will say: "Well, we want Lower California"; Texas will say: "We want Sonora and Chihuahua"; and the demagogue will go out and say; "Who is going to pull down the flag?" Of course, the answer is easy: "The men that put up the flag, the American people, have a right to pull it down"; but when you begin to argue, the crowd does not listen.

Down here the other night in Washington they were blowing horns and cheering, as I said a moment ago, and why? They did not know. They did not think, if they were capable of thought, which I doubt; but it was the old superstition—epaulets, uniforms, drums, fifes, war—"Hurrah for us!" That was all there was to it. People were actually celebrating, as if Christ were resurrected; the anticipation of a great Nation and a divided people killing one another.

I am going to vote for these resolutions. I find in my political career that I have never been able to impress a single idea that I ever had upon any government in the world. All I had to do was to take my choice between two evils; and as between the Lodge evil and the committee evil I will take for my choice the committee evil. I do it chiefly because if the committee amendment is adopted, and this assassin, this traitor, this brute—Huerta—who is now, under the color of military authority, dominating a part of Mexico, shall, before we fire a shot, salute that flag, we will not have to go into Mexico at all; but if the Lodge preamble is adopted we will have to go, or at least there will be an excuse left to the President to go; and as much as I love and admire Woodrow Wilson, I do not want to leave him even an excuse to go.

Mr. President, this occasion is sad to me for another reason. Here is a great party, the old, historic Democratic Party; the only party that has existed in this Government from Washington's administration down to Woodrow Wilson's; the only party that throughout all of its history has had representatives in every precinct of every county of every State of every section of the United States. It has just gone into power with a progressive program before it. It has passed its tariff bill; it has passed its banking and currency bill—neither of them perfected, both of them approximately right. It has its antitrust legislation before it. It has this question of the repeal or nonrepeal of the tolls exemption before it. It has all the great progressive program of the Democratic Party before it. Inter arma silent leges (amidst arms laws are silent), and if we do have war with Mexico, that is the end of progressive legislation until after peace comes back. You are playing into the hands of the reactionaries. You are playing into the hands of those who do not want to go forward in progress and in peace.

O Mr. President, Thomas Jefferson said, "I frankly confess that my passion is peace"; and so is mine. I have but one hatred in my heart, and that is the hatred of hate itself. I hate war, and I know some little about it. I was not old enough to engage in the last trouble between the States, but I have seen the negro soldiers in my grandfather's parlor in blue uniforms tearing the silk curtains down. I have seen—more disgraceful still—white soldiers threatening my two old gray-haired grandmothers to make them tell where they had hidden their money, and I have seen them stealing the silver and carrying it off. I know that war is not only hell, as Sherman said, but it is worse than that. It is petty larceny as well as grand larceny. No uniform and no flag ennobles it. War brutalizes, war disennobles, war unenlightens, war degrades.

My boy and yours want to run to this war. I have one. He sees nothing except the flag and hears nothing except the drum. But I know what it means. There never was a man yet who could go through the passions and the blood and the hatred of war time without running the risk at any rate of disennobling himself.

When I vote for these resolutions, so far as I am concerned, I am making a sacrifice not only upon the ground I have stated as a citizen and a Democrat, but upon another ground as an economist. What does it mean? New taxes. What does it mean personally to me and you? Nothing. You are not going; you are not going; I am not going; you are not going. The carpenter's son is going; the blacksmith's son is going; the farmer's son is going. If I had a personal quarrel with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and he and I went upon the dueling field to shoot it out, I could respect him and he could respect me. We would leave it to the god of battles, as they used to call it "the trial of battle," for my breast would be presented to his bullet and his to mine. But when we invoke nations to war we do not present our breasts. There are none of you going except perhaps one or two here and there on the other side of the Capitol and here, who may think the advertisement of getting a commission and going down with a war record may be superior to what he can do in the Senate or the House. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We declare war and the other people fight it. God knows if I could go out and take it all on myself, just me and nobody else—and I am no brave man, either—I believe I would be willing to do it, because after all it does not matter much just when you die; 24 more hours or 24 more weeks or 24 more months or 24 more years do not make much difference. At the end of it all you are dead; you occupy just about 6 feet in the ground; you are summoned to the chancel of God to account for your sins, and probably the longer you live the more sins you will have to account for. So if I could take it all on myself whenever a question of war or peace comes, I am not certain of it, but I really do believe I would be willing to take it in propria persona. But, Mr. President, I am not willing to put it on the other fellow.

And yet I recognize that in the present state of civilization no nation can exist with self-respect and, what is more, no nation can exist with the respect of other nations that does not resent insults to its uniform and to its flag. Christ said, When a man strikes you on one cheek turn the other. I reckon Christ was right, but the time has not come for it yet. When a man strikes me on one cheek in the present condition of heredity and environment I am going to strike him on the other. That is the condition of the nations as well as of individuals.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has told us that if we intervene in Mexico he wanted to intervene for broader purposes than this resolution. That is just where I differ with him. If I could make the purpose in this resolution still narrower than it is, I would make it still narrower. Now why? Because if you can make the purpose of intervention broader you have latitude to stay, and you have latitude to "pacify," and you have latitude "benevolently to assimilate," and you have latitude of every wrong description.

I do not want any more "benevolent assimilation" in Mexico, and I do not want any excuse for us to stay there until Mexico is "pacified," we to be the judges of when it is "pacified." I have had enough of that in the Philippines already. Just think of it! Two chess players; one of them says to the other, "I will put a pawn out here two ranks in front of my men, and my king and my queen and my bishops, and I will subordinate my entire game to the safety of that pawn." That is what we have done in the Philippines.

Most of you never heard of the Philippines until after we took them. I believe most of you here knew there was such a thing as Manila straw and Manila matting. I remember I was upon the Foreign Affairs Committee in the House, and men came to me at that time and asked me where the Philippines were, and they had to go around and inspect a map to be certain. Congressmen, great men as we all are, did not even know where the Philippines were upon the map. Yet after we took them we found out that American "honor" and American "vital interests" were interested in retaining them. We had gotten along a hundred years or more without the Philippines very happily, with a good deal of liberty, a good deal of freedom, a good deal of prosperity; but after we took them once we could not have any liberty, prosperity, or anything else without keeping them.

You have not got an international question that vitally disturbs you to-day that does not grow out of the Philippines, and if you take Mexico you will have more of the same sort of stuff. And you do not want Mexico. What do you want with Mexicans? I said a moment ago I had no war to make upon Mexicans, neither has the President; but I have no profession of violent friendship and love for the Mexicans to make, either. I know the "greaser" when I see him. I do not want him as a member of the body politic of the American Union, and, God knows, I do not want him nor anybody else as a subject, as an alien subject, kept in place by force of arms. What do you want with him at all?

I hope when this resolution comes back from conference it will come back as a declaration against Gen. Huerta.

One more thing before I conclude. When this resolution passed the Committee on Foreign Relations, the last sentence of it was that we had no animosity against the Mexican people nor were we prepared to wage war against Mexico. Is the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in my hearing? The resolution read "against them." Is that the way the resolution reads now, the very last word in it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It reads "to make war upon Mexico."

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right. I thought the clerk read it "them." I was very anxious to include in this resolution the idea first that we were announcing no hostility either to the Mexican people or to the Mexican country as a country. Huerta is de facto military governor or President, or whatever you call him, not of Mexico, but of a part of Mexico.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts said that if this action was to be taken he wanted it to be taken upon "broad and sufficient ground." I do not. What I suppose he means by "broad and sufficient ground" is ground broad enough and sufficient enough to stay in Mexico after we get there. I want our action taken upon ground so narrow that it shall be insufficient to stay there. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will be compelled to clear the galleries. The Chair is not responsible for the rules of the Senate. They were made contrary to the judgment of the Chair. They place upon the Chair the duty of seeing that there are no demonstrations of approval or disapproval in the galleries of the Senate. Three times now this morning attention has been called to that fact, and the Chair has been compelled to clear one gallery, much to the regret of the Chair.

The Chair wants to say something further now: The Senate passed this rule; but the Senate, if the Chair is an observer of things going on, is largely responsible for the outburst in the galleries. If the Senate expects the Chair to enforce the rule as against the galleries, a decent respect for the feelings of mankind would suggest that Senators should also obey the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, can I go on, with "decent respect" for my own feelings?

I want the ground of this action to be so narrow as to be absolutely insufficient to be quoted hereafter as an excuse to stay in Mexico. I want it so narrowed down that if Huerta shall die or shall be assassinated or shall resign or shall salute the flag, all we shall have to do will be to come on back home.

I admit the right of the Mexican people to govern themselves in their domestic affairs absolutely. I assert with regard to them and with regard to all other people everywhere, at all times, that the right of self-government carries with it the right of self-misgovernment. You have no right to sit in judgment upon another community as to whether its government is government or misgovernment.

I was raised when I was a boy during the carpetbag times down South. I know how they came down there and talked about misgovernment. I know how you Yankees condescendingly spoke of "the natives." Positively the old archives here are full of the messages of you northern people from the South, calling us "the natives," "the natives believe," "the natives think," "the natives are inclined," "the natives are so and so," and so on. We thought we had an older and better civilization than you had. We will not quarrel about that. I am inclined to think we were both mistaken, but leave that out. Whether he is a northerner down South, or an American in the Philippines, or an American in Mexico, or an Englishman in India, or a German in South Africa, the carpetbagger naturally arrogates to himself all the excellencies and superiorities of the home country and of his government and speaks condescendingly of "the natives." I have been a "native" myself, and, what was worse than that, my two old gray-haired grandmothers were "natives," subject to all these indignities and insults; and I do not agree about carrying the "carpetbag" "native" business into Mexico.

I have just received this telegram, Mr. President:

> How can the Senate authorize reprisals against unrecognized bandits and not declare a war against the nation whose people ignore the grave situation? No wonder John Bassett Moore resigned.

It is signed by William C. Dix, of Philadelphia, Pa.

Now, that is an indication of the feeling. Because a colonel serving under Huerta insulted our flag and arrested our sailors on our yawl and carried them through the streets at Tampico this American citizen wonders why or how we can make any distinction between him and that act and the nation whose people "ignore the grave situation." How could they fail to "ignore"? What did the "people of Mexico" have to do with it? Between warring factions, God pity the people in Mexico. There is the invitation of the greedy white man to make war upon a nation—against the Mexican people—all of them, regardless of what they think or how they feel. It seems to me I can draw the distinction. It seems to me you can draw it if you will halfway try to do it.

By the way, John Bassett Moore's resignation had no more to do with this than it had to do with the Revolutionary War. But still they bring that in. That is a part of this endless attempt to make the American people think that it is a part of their patriotic duty to hate other peoples. All you have got to do in an argument on the tolls question, for example, is to prove that it might possibly help somebody else of some other nation across the water, and if it does, then it is our "patriotic duty" to oppose it. So it is with this question.

Now, Mr. President, I shall not offer an amendment to the present resolution, because I was the only member of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate who voted to retain in the resolution the name of Gen. Huerta. I have found out long ago, and the older I get the more certified I am in the saying, that no one man amounts to anything. He is a fly on the spoke of a wheel, and when the wheel is going down he thinks his weight is making it go. I do not fool myself about that, and I shall not offer an amendment merely to be voted upon and merely to be voted down, but I do hope that the House of Representatives will assert its dignity when this question goes to conference, and that it will retain the name of Victoriano Huerta in the resolution, because the more I think about it the more wise statesmanship and the more sagacity I see in the proposition of directing the United States forces at him and at the men operating under him who insulted the flag and the uniform, and toward confining our operations simply to him and them.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I have no prepared speech to make and shall be brief.

In the first place, I will say that there is no Senator on this floor who will go further than I to uphold and sustain the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, in this present difficulty. There is no Senator who has more love for the American flag than I have. That flag is the emblem not only of our power but the emblem of our liberty. It has been made sacred by the blood of our fathers and the blood of their sons. It has never gone down in defeat or dishonor, and I trust that I may not live to see it so go down. An insult to the flag is an insult to the whole American people. It is an insult which no self-respecting government can brook.

But, Mr. President, let us see what the result of present action may be if only a salute to the flag is to satisfy us. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] stated a moment ago that if Huerta saluted the flag then "we would turn and come back," as that would be satisfaction in full for the insult that has been given to American honor and to the American people.

For long and weary months citizens of the United States in Mexico have been subjected to plunder and murder. They have sent appeal after appeal for relief, but no relief came. They could see their flag waving over the border, but it could not or would not bring them aid. I am not only in favor of sending the fleet to resent an insult but I am in favor of sending the fleet to shelter citizens of America from rapine and slaughter and robbery.

I quite agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that this resolution is not broad enough. Shall we, if the flag is saluted, turn our ships and come back? Shall the American citizens and the citizens from other countries whom it is our duty to protect under the Monroe doctrine get but a glimpse of the flag when it comes, a glimpse of it when it goes? Shall it be said that we can resent an insult to the flag, but are powerless to protect the lives of American citizens?

I do not desire war. I was comparatively a child during the Civil War, but I saw much of it. I saw the terrible sufferings of that period; I saw the bodies of the brave brought home and laid to rest; I saw the dead and wounded on the battle field; I heard the cries of widows and orphans, and I saw desolated homes. But terrible as all this is it is far better that we should endure it than that the honor of our country or the rights of our citizens should be trampled under foot.

The American flag has gone to Mexico, and I for one hope to see it stay there until protection is enforced for American citizens. Let us not like "the King of France, with 40,000 men, march up the hill and then march down again." Let us not content ourselves merely because reparation has been made for an insult to the flag.

Mr. President, the people of this country and the people of the civilized world have stood by in wonder and astonishment while all these diabolical deeds have been enacted. I have no friendship for Gen. Huerta. I should like to see him wiped from the face of the earth. But, Mr. President, are we by our resolutions to simply say that he and he alone is to blame and that a settlement with him shall be a settlement for all the dastardly deeds that have been enacted in Mexico? Better that our Navy had never gone into Mexican waters than that it should return after having accomplished so little.

I do not favor a declaration of war. Time and again the United States has landed its forces in foreign countries for the purpose of preserving the lives, the liberty, and the property of its citizens; time and again other nations have pursued this course. Let us land our forces for that purpose. The soil of Mexico is no more sacred than is the soil of any other country that murders our citizens. Let us demand protection not alone for the lives and property of our citizens but the same protection for the citizens of foreign countries; let us enforce the Monroe doctrine, not in part but as a whole. Either let us stand by it or let us desert it and confess our inability to enforce it.

I would prefer that the resolution should be passed in its present form and the President be given authority to carry out all of its features rather than fail to take any action. I have no fear of the result, and no Senator has any fear of the result. Let us do right; let us be just; let us extend the strong arm of protection; and while we protect the flag, let us protect our citizens, whose blood has been shed for more than a year in Mexico. Their blood cries from the ground. Shall that cry go unheeded? It is time to act. There should be no more "watchful waiting."

I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but if it is not adopted, I shall vote for the present resolution, even though it does not go as far as I wish it to go.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk as a substitute for the resolution brought in by the committee and for the amendment thereto offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The proposed substitute will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the substitute reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and that offered by Mr. LODGE, it is proposed, after the title of the joint resolution, to insert the following:

Whereas on the 9th day of April, 1914, a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested with his crew by an officer of what is known as the federal army of Mexico; and

Whereas the said city of Tampico was in possession of the federal army and under martial law and being besieged by what is known as the rebel or constitutional army; and

Whereas orders had been given by the commanding officer of the federal forces that no one be allowed to land at said Iturbide Bridge, but of which said officer and crew had no notice, and it was claimed that our men had no right to land there; and

Whereas within an hour and a half after their arrest, without injury to them, the said commander of the federal forces ordered said paymaster and men discharged, and they returned to their ship; and

Whereas the said commanding officer expressed his regret that the arrest had been made and apologized therefor to the admiral commanding our fleet; and

Whereas, notwithstanding said voluntary discharge of the men so arrested and the apology, the admiral of our fleet demanded that a salute of 21 guns be made to our flag; and

Whereas said demand for a salute was referred to Victoriano Huerta, who then claimed to be the President of the Republic of Mexico and commander in chief of said federal army; and

Whereas the said Huerta claimed that our flag had not been insulted and that apology had been made for said arrest and expressed his regret at the occurrence; and

Whereas the President of the United States confirmed the action of the said admiral in demanding said salute and insisted to the said Huerta that the same be given; and

Whereas the said Huerta still maintained his position and refused to cause said salute to be fired; and

Whereas the Republic of Mexico is a friendly nation and torn with civil war; and

Whereas this Nation is an earnest advocate of peace between nations, and desires to avoid bloodshed or strife; and

Whereas the President has said in his message: "This Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstances be forced into war with the people of Mexico. Mexico is torn with civil strife. If we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, it has no government"; and

Whereas this Government has refused to recognize the said Huerta as President of said Republic of Mexico; and

Whereas if this be justified he has in none of the acts complained of acted for the people of Mexico; and

Whereas if we take action to vindicate our flag it must, if we are consistent, be against the said Huerta, individually, but must work to the injury of the Republic of Mexico and its people who have not done any act to the injury of our national honor or to insult our flag: Now therefore

Resolved, That as an evidence of our friendship and good will toward the people of Mexico, of the sincerity of our advocacy of peace among nations, and of our desire to maintain and perpetuate our peaceful and friendly relations with the Republic of Mexico, this Government accepts as sufficient reparation for any wrong that may have been done us by the arrest of said officer and men, their discharge and the apology made.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, if I know myself I love and revere the flag of my country as sincerely as can any Member of this body. I have lived under it for 67 years; I have followed it in the smoke of battle; I have worn the military uniform of my country that is now said to have been insulted. If I believed that the arrest of the petty officer and his crew, their almost immediate discharge, and the apology made by the officer in command was such an act as to leave a stain upon the flag that could only be wiped out by the firing of a salute by a Mexican gunboat at the command of a man who, we say, is so bad that he is not fit to be the President of the Mexican nation, a man who, we say, is an assassin and a murderer, then I should be willing to go to the farthest extent in the effort to compel such reparation as might be necessary to restore the flag to its original purity; but, sir, what honor can there be to this Nation, how can the stain or insult that has been given be removed from the flag by the firing of such a salute by such a man?

Mr. President, we are the advocates of peace among nations; we have various peace organizations throughout this country headed by the most distinguished of its citizens, and here is an opportunity on the part of this great Nation of ours to do a magnanimous thing that will give evidence to the whole world that it is sincere in its advocacy of peace.

What is the condition? A petty officer of one of our ships and the crew under his command landed upon Mexican territory, where, it was claimed, an order had been made that no one should land. They were arrested by another petty officer and the squad under his command, taken up through the town, and when the matter came to the superior officer who had command he at once ordered them returned to their boat, and, as set out in the message of the President, within an hour and a half, without injury to them and without any insult to them or to the flag except the mere fact of having made the arrest, they were allowed to return to their ship; and the officer in command, after this had been done, voluntarily on his part, made his apology to the commander of the fleet of this Government.

Mr. President, when we come to consider the condition of Mexico, the condition that surrounded this whole transaction, a country torn with civil war and strife, a city that was at that very moment besieged by its enemies and attempting to protect itself, was it not enough that this voluntary discharge had been granted to the men and an apology made to satisfy a great Government like ours? Unfortunately, however, this question did not first come to the President of the United States. I am sorry to say that the seat of power in that instant was in the admiral of the fleet. He was not satisfied; he demanded that a salute of 21 guns should be fired within 24 hours. That was not done. The matter was submitted to the President. He must do one of two things; he must either stand by his officer and see that his command was carried out, or, in the estimation of the officer and his comrades perhaps disgrace him by reversing the order. How much better it would have been for the reputation of our own country if the admiral of the fleet had accepted the apology and gone no further. How much better it would have been if the President of the United States, who is an earnest and sincere believer in peace and who has by every means possible attempted to prevent war or intervention in Mexico—how much better it would have been if the President himself had declared that the apology and the discharge were sufficient.

Now, sir, it requires more courage sometimes to withhold the hand than to strike. That is just as true of nations as it is of men; and I am afraid that we have not the moral courage to do what we believe this country ought to do under all the circumstances—to say to this weak and stricken nation that what she has done to repair this wrong is enough.

Mr. President, there is another phase of this question that has concerned me very seriously, and that is that in what we are asked to do to-day we are not dealing with the Mexican Government. Who has insulted our flag? According to the position the President has taken, not the Republic of Mexico, but the single man whom we have refused to recognize as President of the Republic and who is no more to us under the position which we have taken than a private citizen of Mexico. Why should we consider the act of a private citizen as an insult to our flag that calls for a salute from him or anybody else? Why should a great nation like ours, because of this apparent insult, send all of its ships to Mexican waters for the purpose of disciplining, not the Republic of Mexico, not another nation, but a private citizen of that country?

The President said in his message—and very justly so—that we have no enmity for the Mexican people; that we have no desire to wage war against them; that we are not even asking them to repair this wrong that has been done. The President is not asking us to authorize him to take any step of any kind toward the Mexican Government. He tells us that Huerta, not the Mexican Government, has refused, upon his demand, to salute the flag; and he asks us to give him authority, if that is needed, to compel him to salute the flag. That is the whole question that is presented to the Senate. I say it is the whole question, because every one of us here knows that if the salute had been given to the flag within the time required, the President would never have come before the Congress of the United States asking for authority to act. If the salute had been fired, this Government would have been satisfied, and no further steps would have been taken. Therefore I repeat that all we are asked to do is to uphold the hand of the President while he compels Huerta, a private citizen, to salute the flag of this Nation. Mr. President, so far as I am individually concerned, I do not believe it would be any great honor or any great credit to the Government of the United States to have a salute fired to its flag under such circumstances and at the command of such a man.

A question is raised here whether or not this is a declaration of war. While it is not so in a technical sense, what is going to happen? If Huerta still declines to fire the salute that is required of him, I suppose about the first thing we will do will be to seize some of the ports and some of the customhouses of the Republic of Mexico. Does anybody believe that if we go to that extent it is not going to bring on war, whether we have declared it or not, and if we are not dealing with the Mexican people or the Mexican Government, what justice is there in seizing the customhouses and the revenues of that country under the circumstances which are presented to us to-day?

I hope and believe that I am as sensitive to the honor of this country and its flag as is anyone else. I should not willingly stand by and see it insulted by any other nation; but I hope the time is coming in this country, if it has not already arrived, when the people of a great and enlightened Christian country like ours can rise above the rules that require a salute or other reparation for an offense like this. What do we mean when we declare for universal peace, when at the very first instant when there is the slightest insult to our flag we are ready to go to war?

I have not offered this resolution with any intention of criticizing the course taken by the President—far from it. I believe the President in this matter has acted with perfect sincerity and has done what he believed to be right and just to the country he represents; but the responsibility just now is presented to the Senate; we are asked to pass upon this question, and we can only do so upon our own conscience and upon our own judgment. If we believe that this country will be more honored by forgiving the Republic of Mexico under the circumstances and accepting the apology that has been made, we can not shirk our responsibility by saying the President has asked us to do this.

A good deal has been said here—it was said very eloquently only a moment ago by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]—that there have been other outrages and violations of the rights of American citizens in Mexico. I sympathize sincerely with what the Senator from Kentucky has said on that subject, but I want to remind the Senator that that question is not involved here. There is no effort made to bring about any sort of punishment nor to bring any force to bear on the Republic of Mexico because of those acts, but it is brought down to the simple question as to whether or not there shall be a salute to our flag.

I have had occasion before now to say something in the Senate about the treatment that our citizens have been receiving in Mexico. I think one of the greatest mistakes this country has made since the trouble down there commenced was that it did not protect our citizens on Mexican soil. If we had done so energetically from the first, we might have been respected by the citizens of Mexico on that account.

It is said by the President that we have been singled out from all other nations, our citizens insulted, their lives taken, and that the treatment which has been accorded to our people has been different in that respect from that accorded the citizens of all other nations. That is not surprising. We have not sustained our honor in Mexico; we have not protected our citizens there; the flag of the country about which we are talking to-day has not been their shelter or protection. Why should not the Mexican people feel contempt for us under these circumstances?

There is another reason why there should be more irritation manifested toward us and less respect for us than for other nations, because on one side of the Republic of Mexico we have a fleet of warships and on the other an army standing there ready at any time to invade that country if the opportunity should occur or the conditions should require it.

Mr. President, I have not introduced this resolution with any expectation that it will be passed. We are going headlong to the terrible conditions of war. I am afraid there are some people who might feel that if they do not assert our right and compel the salute to the flag they might be regarded as cowardly and pusillanimous. On the contrary, I believe that the most courageous thing the people of this country could do to-day would be to accept the apology which has been made and refrain from any further act of aggression toward the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. President, I know something about the terrors of war. I have seen it at first hand. This country has had its experience—sad enough. I do not want to see any more war; I do not want that your sons or mine shall go through the experience that some of us in this body have gone through; and, while I am not willing that we should fail to do anything that is necessary to protect the honor and integrity of our country or its flag, I am willing to forgive, to make concessions in an honorable way rather than go to war.

Mr. President, I did not expect to discuss this amendment at length. I feel very keenly the situation we are in. I think it a time when the Senate should think very seriously before it enters upon what I am satisfied will be a long and protracted war. I have offered this amendment in part for the purpose of accentuating the real conditions, and why we are proposing to go to war. I have undertaken in the rather long preamble that precedes the resolution to set out the facts as they have been detailed by the President himself, in order that we and the country may realize what it is that we propose to go to war about.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I wish to take only a very few minutes in expressing my reasons for sustaining the views of the minority as expressed in their resolution. The resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was worked into form and shape by the minority members of the committee, and represents the consensus of the opinion of those members.

The resolution before us is a matter of far-reaching import. No matter how adroitly worded, no matter what limitations may be in the mind of the President of the United States in seeking the approval of Congress of his contemplated course in Mexico, the result of this resolution will be war. It will be all the war that a poor, internally torn, bleeding, and exhausted country can maintain against this most powerful Nation on the face of the earth. In blood and treasure it can not be a serious war on our part. On the other side there is little further treasure to be exhausted. Bankrupt, and without supplies or the means of securing them, resistance to us will necessarily be very feeble.

But, Mr. President, this step will lead us into relations and conditions which now we can but dimly foresee; reparations which we can not leave without exacting when we are once on Mexican soil, and an occupancy and policing which may last for many years.

If, therefore, we are forced to take steps which may mean war, we owe it to our own people and to the world to present the real justification for our act.

If Mr. Huerta salutes our flag, no matter which one of these resolutions is agreed to, we have an assurance that that will end the matter at the present time. If Mr. Huerta fails to salute, then we have assurance that war will inevitably follow; and if war inevitably follows we ought to present to the world and to our own people the real causes for making this war.

We can not afford to make war for a trivial offense; nor can we afford to make the trivial offense the excuse for a war which may be based, in fact, on such a series of grave offenses and misconduct as justifies armed interference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. Does he regard an insult to the American flag, on an American boat, representing American sovereignty as a trivial offense?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not regard that as a trivial offense, but I do not place the uniform of the soldier above a life of an American citizen; and if the first is an offense that will justify war, then far more will the other justify war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One more question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield again, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator perhaps did not understand what I said. I said nothing about the uniform, although I might have said a great deal about it. The uniform is worn by one individual. I spoke about the United States flag, which was at the bow and at the stern of that boat. It was in that connection that I asked the Senator the question.

A sovereignty is represented by its flag, and it is represented by its naval vessels, and it is represented by a yawl from one of its naval vessels. If men from a naval vessel wish to land without previous notice of a condition of military affairs under which they could not possibly land—and that is the situation here—and those men are arrested with the flag flying at the bow and at the stern of the boat, does the Senator mean to tell me that in the present condition of so-called civilized opinion that is not a casus belli?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator. When, as was the case in the territory of Mexico, American citizens under the flag of the United States are arrested by one who is not recognized by the President even as an officer de facto, the arrest immediately repudiated by that officer, the men released, an apology made to our Government by the party making the arrest, and the petty officer making the arrest imprisoned and charges preferred against him, in my opinion sufficient reparation has been made; and that incident, standing alone, would not justify a war upon the people of Mexico. That, in connection with all of the other atrocious things that have been committed against our citizens in Mexico, is ample cause for war.

If we are to go into war, let us present to the American people and to the world the real cause that is back of our action. The real cause is not that single incident, as every one of us knows, and we feel certain that the matter will not stop with a demand for reparation for that incident.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota continue to yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I can have the attention of the Senator for a moment longer, I suppose he will admit that Huerta pretends that he is the de facto Government of Mexico; and if that be true from the standpoint of his pretensions, have not we the right to demand an apology to the flag for what his subordinates did?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there is no evidence before Congress that at the time these arrests were made Mr. Huerta knew anything about them. As soon as the matter was brought to his attention, so far as the record discloses, he ordered the release of the men and he made an apology for the act. I have stated to the Senator that this occurrence in connection with the others is sufficient to require respect to be shown our flag by the salutation that is demanded; but I want to put the whole matter before the world and before the Mexican people themselves. I do not want either to overlook the more grave and serious offenses which justify beyond any question our demands and contemplated action.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota continue to yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield once more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It being admitted that Huerta at least pretends to be the head of the Mexican Government, although not recognized in that way by us, and it also being admitted that we have pursued the usual course, the naval course—I will wait until the Senator from New York is through talking with the Senator from North Dakota, because I have long since learned that if the Senator from New York is talking with anybody his voice is so potential that nobody else can be heard.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I do not want the Senator from Mississippi to think I was discourteous to him. I have not said a word to the Senator from North Dakota—not a word. I have been listening with great interest and in entire silence to the colloquy between the two Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York was not talking with the Senator from North Dakota, of course my ears were singularly at fault, and my eyesight must have been at fault, too. I thought the Senators were talking together, for they were bending toward one another.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the Senator from Mississippi was speaking in a rather low tone of voice, and I had to bend a little to catch every word of his question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from New York tells me he was not talking at all with the Senator from North Dakota, and now the Senator from North Dakota tells me he had to bend to hear the Senator from New York.

Mr. McCUMBER. To hear the Senator from Mississippi; not the Senator from New York.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will leave the question where I have left it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think I have answered the question.

I wish to place no obstacle in the path of the President in the performance of a duty and function which devolves upon him in his official capacity, and I would not support a resolution which would narrow the scope of his action or power. I am ready to grant him all the power that is given in the resolution reported by the majority. But the President, foreseeing that this proposed step of his might lead to war, has asked the war-making department of the Government, the Congress of the United States, to add its indorsement to his proposed armed intervention in Mexico.

It is Congress and not the President that speaks in this resolution. It is the war-declaring power of this Government that speaks in this resolution. This resolution will be the foundation upon which will rest all further warlike actions and activities on the part of this Nation. It is Congress now that is moving by this resolution for an armed invasion of Mexican territory. It is Congress that must now assume the responsibility for all that is done under this resolution. It is, therefore, Congress that should justify itself before the American people and before all the civilized world.

Segregated from all the other grave and serious incidents that have attended the armed conflict in Mexico for the past year, I do not think the incident referred to in the President's message of yesterday in itself justifies a war against the Mexican people, but taken in connection with all the offenses and crimes committed by the combatants on both sides of that conflict against the American citizens and the citizens and subjects of other countries resident in that State, whom, under the policy lately pursued by us, it is our duty to protect, it is clearly now our duty to take such active steps as are necessary to enforce reparation and insure a cessation of further offenses against them.

The incident to which the President directed attention in his address to both branches of Congress yesterday related entirely to the arrest and temporary detention of American sailors, two of whom were taken from a boat flying the American flag, and an American officer charged with the duty of landing in Mexico for the purpose of obtaining mail intended for one of our warships. In the latter incident imprisonment, as I am informed, actually took place for a very short period of time. In the other case there was no imprisonment, but simply an arrest. Within an hour and a half, the arrests having been reported and protest made, the parties were released, an apology made, and a charge by the Mexican Government laid against the party making the arrest. That is about all he could do at that time.

That is one side. Those are the reasons for which we are asked to make war in Mexico, according to the resolution adopted by the majority of the committee. Now let us look on another side of this question.

The northern Provinces of Mexico, that portion which has been under the military control of Gens. Carranza and Villa, have been the scene of most atrocious murders and outrages committed against American men, women, and children by the soldiers and officers of the army in control. The armies have been sustained by confiscation of the property of American citizens and the citizens and subjects of other nations resident in Mexico. The protests of this country have been met either with promises, which have been immediately broken or evaded, or by open, notorious insult to the Government of the United States. The whole country has been reeking with the blood of innocent victims, until this country can no longer with proper self-respect maintain silence or inactivity or fail to proceed to the protection of its own citizens and those of other countries relying upon its assurance of protection or fail to demand and enforce reparation in some form for these offenses.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator from North Dakota name a single, specific instance, save the one immediately under consideration, in which the governmental authorities in Mexico have authorized the killing of a single American citizen or the destruction of the property of an American citizen or an insult to the flag of our country?

To make my question plain, I distinguish between acts of violence committed by unauthorized persons or private individuals and acts committed by the established government of the place at the time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we had an address here the other day, some hours in length, by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who gave us instance after instance of that character. It is needless for me, and against my inclination, to go over those atrocious cases again at this time.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, directly answering the question of the Senator from Missouri, I will ask if he has heard of the case of the United States official, Dixon, shot in the town of Juarez, across from the city of El Paso?

Mr. REED. When?

Mr. FALL. Since this administration began, without any request whatsoever being made for reparation.

Mr. REED. What does the Senator know about it?

Mr. FALL. I know that he was shot in the performance of his duty.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield for a short time.

Mr. REED. My question was a very plain one, and the distinction is a very plain one. It may be that such instances have occurred; and if so, I wanted the names.

I understand, of course, that American citizens have been killed in Mexico. I understand, of course, that some of them may have been shot down by men claiming to be soldiers and attached to some one petty leader or another, but I am inquiring whether in a single instance the real, established government of a place sanctioned the killing of an American citizen?

I will make the question still plainer. If some man—some private soldier, even—had shot down an American citizen, it would be a very different thing than if the President of Mexico, or the man claiming to be the President, should order the shooting done or directly sanction it. I ask either of the Senators to name a single case where the established governmental authority of a place authorized or directed the killing of an American citizen.

Mr. FALL and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield, and to whom?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield first to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, since the President of the United States insists that he has not recognized any government in Mexico, of course there is no established government in Mexico. Therefore I will say that, so far as I know, there has not been an occasion when a military officer of the United States Government has demanded the body of an American citizen when it has not been delivered to him. I will say that there have been such occasions as the Dixon case, in which what was recognized and dealt with by this Government as the established civil authority in the city of Juarez, in the State of Chihuahua, five minutes' ride from the public square of El Paso, Tex., refused to surrender Mr. Dixon to the authorities of the United States, he being then an official in the employ of the United States, until the surrender of Dixon was demanded by Gen. Hugh L. Scott.

Mr. REED. The question is still unanswered.

Mr. FALL. It is impossible to answer it otherwise, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota continue to yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. I think it is impossible for the Senator to answer it, and hence we have not had a categorical and direct answer.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. REED. It does not enable one to escape the situation to say that we have not recognized a government there. There is in all parts of Mexico at least a de facto government. Gen. Huerta exercises the powers of a de facto government over a considerable portion of Mexico. I was speaking of governmental authority in the sense that you could apply that term to Gen. Huerta. It is a very grave distinction which I have sought to point out—the distinction between a private act of violence, an act of violence committed by marauders, by banditti, by irresponsible persons, and an act which has been authorized or sanctioned officially by the established government, whether it be a recognized government or a mere de facto government.

Mr. McCUMBER. The only government that really exists in the northern provinces to-day is the military government under the control of Carranza and Villa. These murders, these outrages, have been committed by their officers and soldiers. The only government there is is a government of force. The only responsible parties are these two military leaders. If we are to look to Huerta for the salutation of the flag for his misdeeds, we must look to these generals for reparation for the crimes that have been committed by their soldiers and officers.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FALL. What the Senator has stated is very true. It happens to be a fact, however, that at the time of the shooting of Dixon by a squad of soldiers in Juarez, Gen. Castro, the general in command for the Federal Government of Mexico, was the military chieftain and the commandant of the garrison of Juarez; and it was his soldiers—Federal soldiers of the Government—who shot Dixon.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to ask a question. If, as has been suggested by the acting chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, we are to be relegated to the public press for news, what has the Senator to say of the statement of Hermanos, the Mexican consul in the City of Mexico, three days ago, to the effect that he saw nothing but the most trifling incident in this flag matter, because to his knowledge nine American citizens had been court-martialed and shot in Tampico within two weeks prior to that time? This is a public statement made by the consul of the de facto government through the public press.

Mr. BORAH rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to interrupt the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps I should not interrupt the Senator at so late a moment. I was simply going to ask the Senator from Missouri, when he refers to the proposition of an established government, in what sense he uses that term with reference to Huerta? Does he recognize Huerta as the representative of an established government in Mexico?

Mr. REED. No; Mr. President, the Senator is too good a lawyer for him and me to quibble about a phrase. We all know——

Mr. BORAH. I assure the Senator I was asking him with no other purpose than to get the idea of the Senator as to what kind of a government Huerta really represented. The question was asked in perfect good faith, because I am frank to say that the proposition as to what he represents has a vast amount to do with the kind of vote I shall cast in the Senate.

Mr. REED. I think we all recognize the facts of the case, which are that there was an established and legal government in Mexico; that it was overthrown; and that another had scarcely been established, and yet perhaps it ought to be said it was established, the Madero government, when Huerta overthrew it. Since that time there has been a government carried on; it has performed the usual and ordinary functions of government, perhaps badly, but nevertheless whatever government there was he represented. Now, we have not seen fit to recognize as a legal government the Huerta government, but it undoubtedly must be treated as the de facto government of that particular part of Mexico over which it maintains its supremacy by arms.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the position——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota continue to yield to the colloquy?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield with the simple suggestion that I do not think the President of the United States has even recognized a de facto government under Huerta.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho has permission to proceed.

Mr. BORAH. I simply desire to remark that as I understand the position of the Senator from Missouri, then, it is that Huerta is the head of the de facto government, the representative and president of the de facto government of Mexico.

Mr. REED. Of that part of Mexico over which he maintains his supremacy. He certainly is not a de facto president over the rest of the country that is held by other forces and another power superior to his.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The President, in his message yesterday, said:

> Mexico is torn by civil strife. If we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, it has no government.

Mr. McCUMBER. I stated that the President of the United States has not recognized even a de facto government there.

Now, Mr. President, I want to return for a moment to the incident that is made so much of in this resolution.

Mr. President, I believe it is the duty of this country to see that its flag and its uniform, the symbols of our Nation, are respected in every corner of the earth. But I for one do not want to vote to make the uniform of the soldier superior to the life of a citizen.

Am I right or wrong in that respect? I do not want to vote to make the epaulette, the golden braid, mean more to the people of the United States than the living, beating human heart beneath the golden braid. I do not want to vote to justify war and intervention because of an affront to the uniform while I overlook the brutal murder of our citizens.

I do not want to vote to go to war against a people on the sole grounds that they have violated the code of international etiquet and respect for the regalia of our Government while their swords are still red and dripping with the blood of American men and women and while the groans of murdered men and the cries of outraged women are ringing in our ears.

Personally, Mr. President, I have never voiced a single complaint or given utterance to a single word of censure that the President, supported by the Secretary of State, has refused to recognize Mr. Huerta as the head of the Mexican Government. While I believe that it would have been better to have recognized his Government as a de facto Government, leaving the Mexican people themselves to determine whether they should continue in power one who overthrew the previous Mexican Government by most atrocious methods and established himself as its head by most brutal and cowardly murder; while I can not but admire and deeply sympathize with the high moral stand which the President and the Secretary of State have taken in refusing recognition to one whose claim rests upon successful treachery and murder, I have hoped that this most laudable position taken by the President might work out a result which would be a fair example for other great nations of the world to follow and a discouragement to all would-be assassins whose official credentials must bear the seal of blood, and I believe it is our duty now to sustain the President in his unswerving policy to never recognize Huerta as the representative of the Mexican Nation.

But, Mr. President, while we sustain our President in his moral stand against the recognition of Huerta, we must not allow the Government to be put into the most immoral position of an alliance, directly or indirectly, by implication or otherwise, with that murderer, bandit, robber, fiend, Gen. Villa. In the presence of such a monster the murderer Huerta is an angel of purity.

The President said that we will be fighting against Huerta and his followers. So, too, the murderer Villa and Carranza are also fighting against Huerta and his followers. By this resolution we in effect form an alliance with these northern bandits, one of whom, at least, is the most atrocious and brutal murderer who yet remains to blight and curse the earth. We ought not to allow the country to be put in that position.

I can not but feel that this resolution, referring to the address of the President yesterday, making the incident which he detailed the basis of our armed intervention, places this country in the position of making war for a trivial matter and for the failure of one who is recognized as an individual only and not as the head of the Government to salute our flag, while we wholly ignore the murder of a hundred American citizens, the confiscation of property amounting to millions of dollars, the slaughter and banishment of citizens of other countries which our policy makes it our duty to protect, and which also, whether intentional or not, makes us an ally of those who have committed all of these atrocities.

Mr. President, there can be no serious objection to the adoption of the broader resolution, the resolution which presents to the world all the facts under which we justify an intervention, because according to that resolution the President may do as little as he sees fit. If we pass that resolution and Huerta grants his salute, the President can withdraw if he thinks he can do so with honor and credit to the Nation. If, on the other hand, Huerta neglects to salute, neglects to make any reparation for the insult to the American flag, and if war then is necessary we have the basis of our war and the reasons for our interference, and they are such as would justify us in the eyes of all people upon the face of the earth.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I sincerely hope that when we will give the President all the authority that he needs, when we will give him the authority to make war, if it becomes necessary to do it, we will also make our position tenable before the entire world.

I shall, therefore, Mr. President, support the resolution which has been presented by the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There must be no applause in the galleries. Those who think they may do so will have to vacate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am very reluctant to take any part whatever in this debate. I think that my associates upon the Committee on Foreign Relations will bear out the statement that at no time, even under provocation, have I violated the confidence of the President of the United States in the free conferences with our committee nor with my associates upon the committee itself at any time.

I am not unfamiliar with the Mexican situation. It has existed in one aggravating form or another for several years. That it has at last reached a point of acuteness demanding attention goes without saying.

I recall, Mr. President, as you recall [Mr. LEWIS in the chair] and as other Members of the Senate recall, who were at that time Members of the House of Representatives, the strain and the stress which President McKinley underwent under circumstances not wholly dissimilar from those through which we are now passing. I recall that perfect poise and good will, that kindness and generosity that were manifest in every phase of his character as he approached with great solemnity the War with Spain.

It was my good fortune to be a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House at that time, and in company with Mr. Hitt, of Illinois; Mr. Adams, of Pennsylvania; and Mr. Cousins, of Iowa, I was chosen to draft the declaration of war which passed the House of Representatives. That was a purely legislative function. The President acted within his constitutional function, and we were acting within our constitutional sphere. There was no attempt whatever upon the part of the Executive to furnish for us, handmade, any ironclad resolution which should reflect the Executive will.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I can not yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely want to ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan declines to yield to the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator from Michigan is recognized in his own proper right and may proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, President McKinley's long experience here and his familiarity with the work of Congress stood him in good stead when dealing with the coordinate branches of the Government. He recognized our constitutional right and respected it. President McKinley had no personal pique to gratify. He had seen with his own eyes thousands of Cuban citizens emaciated and starving, and he saw through the eyes of a committee of Congress the suffering in Cuba, which had become impossible to longer endure.

I saw in one ward of the city of Habana 8,000 orphan children, many with the marks of the machete upon their heads, and I saw dying from starvation in the doorway of the governor of Matanzas 12 innocent but afflicted people of that island. I saw the farmers of Cuba herded like beasts into Los Tasos, in Habana, and fed like hungry dogs. I went with the consul general of the United States, Fitzhugh Lee, when he presented his final protest to the governor general against the outrages committed within 90 miles of Key West, on the American border.

It was under such circumstances that the resolution of war was conceived. It was under such circumstances that the appropriation was voted and placed in the hands of the President. There was no studied hatred of individuals in his great heart. There was no uncompromising intent in his mighty brain to either humiliate or disgrace the head of a friendly country.

The President of the United States, whom we all respect, for whom we have the most abundant respect, told us yesterday that the American Government or its people had been singled out for special annoyance in Mexico.

So far as I can learn—

Said the President—

such wrongs and annoyances have been suffered to occur only against representatives of the United States. I have heard of no complaints from other Governments of similar treatment.

No other Government has treated Mexico as we have treated her. Every Government on the civilized globe represented in that Republic recognized her government as the de facto government of Mexico but three—Argentina, Chile, and Brazil. What have we done to aid Mexico, torn, bleeding from civil strife. President Taft put 20,000 American soldiers on the Mexican border before there had been a single gun fired in the capital of Mexico. He put 20,000 soldiers along the Rio Grande nearly two months before the battle of Juarez occurred. Not a gun had been fired in the Mexican capital. President Diaz was in full possession of the Government of his country. It had been but a few weeks before that the President of the United States visited the Rio Grande and upon the international bridge shook hands with the President of Mexico in honorable and open felicitation upon his long and successful reign.

I regret to say it, and yet it is the unblushing truth, that our soldiers during the revolution of Madero, and the representatives of the Department of Justice of the United States, rendered a voluntary service not entirely creditable to a country which professed neutrality.

After President Madero was installed in the Government of Mexico, and out of nearly 17,000,000 people he had only received about 19,000 votes, officers of our Army and of the Department of Justice of the United States took orders in many instances from the Mexican consul, Mr. Llorente.

Mr. President, from a somewhat intimate knowledge of the historical facts and upon my responsibility as a Senator I say that the revolution against Diaz was planned and perfected and stimulated and encouraged upon the soil of the United States. It is a notorious fact that three men in a hotel in the city of New York held in the hollow of their hands the fate of Mexico while they were attempting to adjust between themselves the railroad and the oil interests of that country.

While under oath Mr. Sherburne G. Hopkins, of Washington, told a committee of the Senate he was the counsel of the Maderos, or of the Madero revolution, and at the same identical moment admitted he held a retainer as the counsel of a great American oil company.

After President Diaz was put out of the capital of Mexico, and Francisco Madero was put in, the first money paid out of the Mexican treasury was $50,000 in gold to this Washington lawyer for services to the revolutionary junta in this capital.

How have we conducted ourselves toward Mexico? It is a well-accepted principle of equity jurisprudence that he who seeks equity must do equity, and yet the jails along the border of Texas were for months filled to overflowing with noncombatant Mexicans apprehended and put into American prisons at the will of a Mexican consul.

I visited the prisons in person, as did my colleague on the committee, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. We saw prisoners paraded through the streets of the American cities under the apparent control of the military authorities of our country. We took Col. Orozco from the prison at El Paso for examination. He was apprehended, without arms, while he was crossing a narrow river in Mexico and discovered to his horror that he had unintentionally crossed the Rio Grande at a narrow point. He had no sooner touched American soil than a detective employed by the Mexican Government, accompanied by our soldiers, took possession of him, paraded him through the streets of the city, and formal complaint was not lodged against him. Dismissed, he was taken to the next American town and again paraded there. A complaint was lodged against him, and it was dismissed by legal process. He was then taken to another town, and finally brought to El Paso, where he was paraded through the streets, followed by the jeers of a hostile crowd. A friend of his was at the train with a private conveyance to conduct him with dignity, at least, through an American city. His kind offices were rudely denied. Col. Orozco was immediately confined in a prison in El Paso. I heard a woman interrogated as she looked upon him, by the Mexican consul, who asked her, "Is this the man who, while he was military governor of Juarez, murdered your husband?" She said, "No; he is not the man." He pressed her, and again she said "no." When ordered released, the jail could not hold him; he was taken to Fort Bliss and held there as a military prisoner without warrant of law.

Mr. President, has that kind of treatment tended to promote concord or been so fair and equitable as to impress upon the Mexican people the justice of our position? I think not. Have we treated Mexico fairly? Let us see.

The President of the United States has said there is no government in Mexico, and yet the President commissioned Mr. Lind to the Government of Mexico, with a special message to be delivered to President Huerta.

How have we acted with reference to our neighbor on the south? Does anybody question that the loan negotiated by the Mexican Government in Europe was defeated by our Government? Let my associates upon the Committee on Foreign Relations say. We have sent emissaries directly to those in rebellion against the de facto government of Mexico; we have dealt directly with the revolutionists or constitutionalists in Mexico in open rebellion against President Huerta.

Mr. President, that was not enough. While Mr. Madero was making his campaign against President Diaz, we were content with the neutrality law then upon the statute books; and I can testify that the Madero people in revolution against Diaz got hundreds of millions of rounds of ammunition upon our side of the Rio Grande for use against the established Government; but the moment that Madero was installed we were called to the White House and told that we must strengthen our neutrality law, so that those who had lately been in rebellion with Madero could not procure for themselves arms and ammunition.

Mr. President, have we been generous and kind to Mexico in her distress? Why was the embargo raised upon the exportation of arms from America, so that banditti and revolutionists might obtain their powder and their munitions with less difficulty from our own people? No, Mr. President, it is not a pleasant thing to recite our own shortcomings, but I believe the historical truth about our attitude toward the Mexican Government should be stated.

Mr. President, at no time in this Chamber, in committee, in conference, or anywhere else have I spoken one syllable or sentence in favor of war; nowhere from the beginning of this agitation until now have I favored intervention, but I have thought that the least respectable thing that our Government could do would be to refrain from encouraging banditti and revolution in a friendly State. I would not recognize President Huerta now. That time has gone by. The President by his attitude has made it impossible for us, with dignity and honor to ourselves, to recognize Gen. Huerta even though the rest of the world had done so. There was a time, in my opinion, when it might have been done with perfect propriety and under conditions which would have been acceptable to the American people. Ambassador Wilson named the time and the manner and the conditions for that recognition. It is a part of the record of the Department of State, and I am going to make it a part of the record of this debate for future verity. He was not trifling with the power and the dignity of the American Government, he was cautious and diplomatic. I send to the Secretary's desk the recommendations of Ambassador Wilson with reference to recognition, and ask that it may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection; and permission to do so will be granted.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly

Mr. JAMES. The Senator from Michigan seems to have some of the records of the State Department. Has he the record of the telegram that Victoriana Huerta sent to President Taft after the murder of Madero? I thought that if he had that perhaps it would be better to have it precede the reading of this article to show upon what this recommendation for the recognition of Huerta was based.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Michigan allow the Chair to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he refers to the telegram informing the President of Huerta having overthrown the previous government?

Mr. JAMES. That is the telegram, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not talking now about what the President of Mexico said. I am speaking of the American ambassador's suggestions.

Mr. JAMES. But my question was for the purpose of having the telegram printed, so that we could see what was the basis of recognition requested by our ambassador to Mexico of the Huerta government.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair interrupted the Senator from Kentucky merely to identify the matter, so that the Senator from Michigan could more accurately reply to the question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Kentucky and myself can not be drawn into any argument over that situation. Neither he or myself or the American Government had any part in creating it. Both of us sincerely deplore it. Neither of us will utter one syllable in exculpation of the guilty. I am not dealing with that situation; I am dealing with the American attitude, and in that connection what I send to the Secretary's desk becomes highly important.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator from Michigan will yield to me, if he has not that telegram, I will be very glad to supply it from the records of the State Department, as I have a copy of it here now and ask that it may be read.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You may do so in your own time.

Mr. JAMES. I will not interfere now, but I thought it would come in appropriately at this point.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not think the Senator, upon reflection, would interfere.

Mr. JAMES. Not at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to ask the Senator from Michigan what is the date of the recommendation of ex-Ambassador Wilson? I understand this paper is not dated, and I therefore ask when was that recommendation made?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was made, as I recollect, early in the month of March, 1913.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, it is on file in the State Department?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly. It is a part of the records of that department, and I desire it read. I would read it myself, but I am a little fatigued and prefer to have the Secretary do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ambassador Wilson's recommendations to the President read to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations:

RECOGNITION.

Recognition under the present circumstances can not be made with the same effects and the same results as immediately after the assumption of power by the new administration. It would be misconstrued now as a yielding to pressure and force and would result in the loss of great prestige.

If recognition is accorded, it should be done in the following way:

First. By a preamble, recognizing the remarkable and unprecedented situation in Mexico, the desire of the United States to contribute to the restoration of order in a neighboring and friendly State, and the necessity, on account of the important matters daily pending between the two Governments, to establish full official relations with all of the benefits and obligations resulting therefrom.

Second. No recognition should be accorded unless the important international questions, like the Chamazal, the Colorado River, and the specific claims falling under a clear rule of international law, shall be immediately closed upon the basis presented by the Government of the United States and agreed to by the Government of Mexico in correspondence with the ambassador and verbally.

Third. Recognition should not be accorded unless an international claims commission having jurisdiction over all kinds and classes of claims arising out of the revolutionary movements during the last three years shall be admitted in principle by the Mexican Government.

Fourth. Recognition should not be accorded unless ample guaranty for the holding of a constitutional presidential election during the month of October shall be given; and this would involve the removal of the present minister of gobernacion, who is a pure creature of Huerta, and the substitution therefor of a Mexican of force and power—say Calero—who is thoroughly committed to the principle of constitutional government.

Fifth. Recognition should not be accorded unless the Federal Government is able to furnish evidence of its ability to restore peace and order to the twenty-sixth parallel.

Sixth. Recognition should not be accorded unless an arrangement can be made by which the American Government, in cooperation with the Mexican Government, will be permitted to cross the border and aid the federal authorities in restoration of order down to the twenty-sixth parallel, always giving ample stipulation for the retirement of our troops whenever order and peace have been reestablished, in the judgment of the United States and Mexican commissioners duly appointed.

Recognition accorded in this manner will restore our lost prestige, impress foreign and native opinion in Mexico, and undoubtedly restore peace and prevent further bloodshed.

On intervention he said:

If recognition is not accorded in some form or other, our duties as a civilized nation, pledged to the world to preserve the peace and order of this hemisphere, point directly to immediate and effective intervention.

This should be done in the following way:

First. By discreetly removing the already decimated and ruined American population of Mexico.

Second. By the transfer of the charge of our diplomatic and consular establishments to the representatives of other powers.

Third. By the massing of our fleet in overwhelming proportions, aided by effective marine reserves, at every Mexican port on the Atlantic and Pacific.

Fourth. By the massing of our Army, fully equipped for invasion, at every strategic point lying on the border States, and the calling out of the reserves in all the border States.

Fifth. By the appointment of commissioners, one of whom should be the ambassador, another the general in chief of the Army, another the ranking officer of the investing fleet, and another a member of the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the Senate. The duty of this commission would be to seek, by a preliminary action, a reconciliation of all the contending forces in Mexico, with the understanding that their duty should be urgent, expeditious, and not detained by any dilatory methods, and with a further understanding that they should follow in the path of invasion, reestablishing the rule of law and dispensing justice and order in the name of the United States.

Any invasion should be accompanied by a public statement that our purpose is not one of aggression, but that we are acting in the discharge of a duty to humanity and civilization, and that when once constitutional methods and practices are reestablished and firm government installed our troops will retire to the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, former Ambassador Wilson had seen 19 years of diplomatic service for his country. He was first commissioned in 1897 by President McKinley, and served eight years in Chile. President Roosevelt offered him the post at Greece or Portugal, which he declined. He was finally transferred by President Roosevelt to Belgium, and the President at that time announced through the Associated Press that he was promoted entirely upon merit. President Taft tendered him a choice of the embassies at Russia, Austria, or Turkey, all of which he was obliged to decline because he could not afford to take either position. He was finally accorded the position of ambassador to Mexico. If there is anything lacking in thought and care and painstaking regard for his country in the recommendations just read from the Secretary's desk I have failed to note it. It was, of course, the privilege of President Wilson to remove him, although Ambassador Wilson tendered his resignation five times before it was accepted. So much for Ambassador Wilson's connection with the question of recognition and intervention.

Now, Mr. President, I assert, without any hesitation whatever, that the very same element in Mexico which banded together to overthrow the government of President Diaz, which instigated and furnished the means and much of the munitions for President Madero's successful revolution, are the men who have engineered the Carranza and Villa movement. Their headquarters are in the city of Washington; their offices are in the Hibbs Building; and all during last summer——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will not the Senator kindly now, since he has given the locus in quo, give us the names of the occupants?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will give to the Senator from Missouri the names of those who were here during most of the summer, who were back of, in sympathy with, and encouraged the revolution against the present de facto government of Mexico. The following were here in person during the summer:

Felix Sommerfeld, the head of the secret-service corps, operating with Consul Llorente along the Mexican border, who claimed that there was no limit to the expenditures he had a right to make; and it was found, without any difficulty whatever, that Mr. Llorente, consul, had over $2,000,000 to his credit in the city of El Paso alone with which he was to buy arms and ammunition and create propaganda in favor of his faction of the Mexican people; Mrs. Francisco Madero; the Madero brothers coming and going; Manuel Perez Romero, broker of Mrs. Madero, Washington representative of the rebels, their minister of finance; while Mrs. Madero's brother was busy through the entire summer fulminating against the Government of Mexico, safely and usually in the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then, I wish the Senator would not do so. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will insist that there shall be no such demonstration in the galleries. If the risibilities of the occupants can not be controlled, the Chair will have to ask that they be excluded.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not say that, Mr. President, out of any discourtesy to my friend the Senator from Missouri, but I have been suffering all day from an injury to my ankle that has caused me great pain, under which I am laboring, and am very anxious to conclude and resume my seat.

Mr. REED. The question I desire to ask——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly, if the Senator wishes.

Mr. REED. The question I desire to ask is asked in good faith and simply for light. I interpreted the Senator's remarks a moment ago to indicate that there was in America some sort of organization or association of Americans who had been instigating the revolution. The names that he gave, I think, were those of Mexicans. I simply desire to ask the Senator, inasmuch as he has investigated this matter, if he meant to give the impression that some American influence has been operating and financing the revolution?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator has asked me a very direct question. I am not in the habit of dodging questions, and I am going to give him an equally frank reply. In order that I may do so, I am going to read from testimony of witnesses given under oath, and the Senator can put his own construction upon it. I did not intend to do it. I am the last man to cast reproach upon my countrymen, but the question has been asked and I am going to read this sworn testimony in answer to the question of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that some of the testimony taken by the Senator as chairman of the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ought we not to have all the testimony?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You have it all. I have filed it all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it in print?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is; and each Senator has had it on his desk. The volume is before me. If the Senator has not had it, it is because he has not availed himself of his privilege.

When the Mexican revolution, headed by Francisco I. Madero against President Diaz, broke out, the Eagle Oil Co., which includes the Aguila Oil Co., dealing in the refined products of oil, and the Pearson oil concessions belonging to Lord Cowdray, of England, producing crude oil, were doing their business in sharp rivalry with the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., a Missouri corporation operating in Mexico. Mr. Hopkins says they were active competitors. At that time the controlling interest and the stock of the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. was owned by the Standard Oil Co. According to the witness, Mr. Henry Clay Pierce, president of the Waters-Pierce Co., "conceived it to be 'imminently' proper that the public should understand how Lord Cowdray got these concessions and how he exercised the control which he had over the Mexican Government," and witness says that he was employed by Mr. Pierce for that purpose.

When asked by Senator MCCUMBER (p. 757) why he should have been employed to ferret out public offenses in Mexico, he replied that Mr. Pierce did not believe the Government would do it, and that it would require a person outside of the Government, and witness advised as to the best methods to accomplish that end with most effect. Mr. Hopkins says that his employment took place in the city of Mexico. He further says that he was consulted with a view to exposing the graft by means of which Lord Cowdray had attained the degree of influence which he wielded with the Diaz administration (p. 756). He says also that he was at that time the adviser of the Madero revolutionary party in Washington and gave it his advice as to the best manner of deposing the Diaz Government; that he was employed directly by Gustavo Madero and others, and that he "made it as hot as he could for Lord Cowdray and the Eagle Oil Co." He says he was especially called upon to advise Mr. Madero regarding railroad matters, and, in fact, says, "I was the legal adviser of the revolutionary party in Washington from the beginning until the end," employing men for work in the secret service in the United States and doing everything to assist in creating public opinion in the revolution against President Diaz; and that he was called to Mexico immediately after the fall of Juarez by President Madero and his brother, Gustavo Madero, for the purpose of adjusting certain large outstanding accounts for secret service in the United States whom witness had employed.

During this visit to Mexico, Gustavo Madero was paid $600,000 Mexican out of the treasury of that government for revolutionary expenses, and this money was carried by Madero to the hotel where Hopkins was stopping and deposited in the International Banking Corporation, having a branch in Washington and various foreign countries, with which Hopkins did business, and which he sometimes represented. Of this fund Mr. Hopkins was paid $50,000 in gold for his service in promoting the revolutionary cause in Mexico. During this employment the Standard Oil Co. sold its holdings in the Waters-Pierce Co. to Henry Clay Pierce and acquired an interest in the Cowdray & Doheney oil concessions (p. 795). The Standard Oil Co. "was quite willing to sacrifice its stock interest to destroy the Waters-Pierce Co., because they saw what was coming"—by the success of the Hopkins-Madero revolution (p. 794). Mr. Hopkins further says "Henry Clay Pierce found out that I was after some men who had been engaged in crooked practices, and he conceived that they should be exposed; they were so-called cientificos, who had been juggling with the national railways" (p. 755). Senator HITCHCOCK asked if this service, being for the Waters-Pierce Oil Co., was for any idealistic purpose, and suggested that it must have been for some business reason; Hopkins says it was to "even up conditions—I mean in respect to Government protection, assistance, aid, and so forth," and that for this work he was paid $1,000.

He further said, in answer to Senator MCCUMBER, that much of his service consisted in advising the revolutionists how "to get all the arms and ammunition and munitions of war that they could, and, with due regard to the neutrality laws, to get them across the border and organize their movement on the most approved military lines." I pointed out to them as best I could the lines of least resistance, both in a military and political sense. Most of the war material came from the United States—New York and St. Louis (pp. 758, 759). Mr. Hopkins said that Bannerman, Broadway, New York, furnished some of the rifles, cartridges, and machine guns, and Gustavo Madero bought them (p. 760). In speaking of Bannerman, Mr. Hopkins said: "They are the largest dealers in war materials on this hemisphere; that they deal on a large scale with foreign Governments; that they have furnished war materials for other Central and South American States" (p. 760).

Mr. Hopkins says that he had a conference with a French banker in New York regarding a loan to the Madero revolutionists, also Charles R. Flint, a New York banker; that he discussed the matter of loans generally with Mr. William M. Ivins, of New York, but without success. Mr. Limantour was in the cabinet of President Diaz. He had been abroad in Diaz's interest.

Mr. Hopkins says that he was at the Hotel Astor when Mr. Limantour was there, but denied that Limantour had reported to President Diaz upon his arrival in New York from France that large financial interests in New York had agreed to advance the necessary money to make the Madero revolution successful, whereupon President Diaz resolved to make no further resistance, although he admitted that Francisco Madero, the father of the late President, and Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez conferred with Limantour in the Hotel Astor, and "I understand he had a conference with Speyer & Co." When asked whether he had any conference with Mr. Stillman or Mr. Vanderlip, Hopkins replied: "It would not surprise me at all" (p. 768).

Gustavo Madero promised Hopkins that if the revolution were successful he intended to pay him a fee of $50,000. He was chief counsel in the United States and his advice was sought upon the whole field of revolutionary action (p. 769). Hopkins also says that he was kept in close touch by wire with the proposed amendment to the neutrality law which passed March 12, 1912, both at Vera Cruz, before his departure for the United States, and at Key West and Palm Beach (p. 770), and says that he considered such legislation very advantageous to the Madero government.

Hopkins admitted that he was publicity agent for Henry Clay Pierce in exposing graft in oil concessions in Mexico, and that various public officials of Mexico had accepted valuable stock amounting to a million and a half dollars in value, given to them by Lord Cowdray while they were holding public office (p. 772). He also says that the Standard Oil Co. now owns the Cowdray or Pearson oil interests; that he has examined papers which show this fact, shown to him by General Manager J. N. Galbraith, of the Waters-Pierce Co., but he denied that the Waters-Pierce Co. contributed any money toward the revolution, and says his relations with the company at that time were so close that he would have known it had there been any (p. 774).

Mr. Hopkins says that the national railways of Mexico now include the Old National Railway and the Mexican Central Railroad and one or two other small roads. They were nationalized and consolidated by the Government in 1907. He says that he was interested in the railroad aspect of that situation. He says that the leading cientificos had had themselves appointed directors of the national railways, and were controlling the policy to suit their own ends. That he and Gustavo Madero thought and others thought that these gentlemen should be gotten rid of as expeditiously as possible, and with the information he had would engage in forcing them out. (P. 776.) The Government of Mexico have the privilege of voting the stock of these companies for guaranteeing interest on bonds, while the bonds are held by Speyer & Co., of New York, and Henry Clay Pierce, who is said to be the largest individual holder in the United States, and who was at the head of the road for many years. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. are also holders. Hopkins says that the course outlined with reference to these railroad properties by Gustavo Madero and himself was known to Henry Clay Pierce, who "had a very vital interest in the management of the national railways and was both a bondholder and stockholder," and to the bankers above mentioned. Hopkins first became interested in changing the directory of those roads through Gustavo Madero about the time of the revolution, and the matter was discussed at length by Madero and Hopkins in his office in Washington, at which time a plan was made to oust the Diaz people from the Mexican national railways (pp. 777, 778). At that time all the directors in the Cowdray oil concessions were directors in the national railways of Mexico.

After the triumph of Madero every American employee was run off the national railroads, and the treatment accorded these men—numbering about 700—was severely condemned by the Organization of Railroad Trainmen in the United States, although the management was left practically the same as before the revolution. Hopkins says that there was a well-defined plan by which Henry Clay Pierce and Gustavo Madero were to bring about the change in the board of directors of the national railways, and "get the Diaz people out and remove the Cowdray menace." Hopkins admits that the plan was at the bottom of his interests in the matter, which was arranged between "Gustavo Madero, some others (bankers), and myself" (pp. 780 and 781). Hopkins says, page 782, that he thinks the Mexican national railroads were to be connected with those Central American lines, thus establishing a through line from Montreal, Canada, to Panama; that it is possible now to go by rail from Montreal to Guatemala City. He says he happened to be in Guatemala City and knows that the Northern Railway of Guatemala, with which the Pan American road was to connect, is owned by his clients, Mr. Keith, Gen. Hubbard, and Sir William Van Horne jointly, and that these men with certain associates recently purchased the road that runs from the capital of Guatemala down to the west coast, which will connect with the Pan American (p. 782).

He also says that the consolidation of the Mexican Central and the Mexican railways was made possible through Henry Clay Pierce, and admits that when Gustavo Madero took up the work of getting rid of the directory of the Mexican railways that the railways were prospering. That Pierce's scheme to down Cowdray, his rival in the oil business, in order to even things up with his competitor, the Pierce people sold the Mexican Central Railroad to the Mexican Government through Limantour, the stock being worth at that time four to five times as much as when Mr. Pierce acquired it. That everybody connected with the revolutionary movement against Diaz shared the view of Gustavo Madero as to the desirability of getting control of these railways, which Hopkins denominates as a house-cleaning incident of the political reactionaries and enemies of the revolution. Hopkins admits that he was acting both for Pierce and Madero, who had ideas in common (p. 785). That he went down to Mexico to bring these matters to the attention of the Mexican people and with a view to bringing about just what has taken place. Hopkins says that he was very familiar with the whole affair; that he was in Washington when the Battle of Juarez occurred, and that just prior to the Battle of Juarez he was in conference in New York with the father of the late President Madero, Mr. Limantour, the minister of finance of Mexico, also a director in the Mexican national railways, and Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez at the Hotel Astor. That the attack upon Juarez was delayed pending this conference, "where there were negotiations looking to a compromise."

Why, Mr. President, is it conceivable that three men meeting in the Hotel Astor in New York should hold in the hollow of their hands the fate of 17,000,000 people at the south of us? Is it conceivable that all of this dire calamity, the loss of life, the murder, the outrages committed upon women and girls, the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property, could all have been avoided if these three archconspirators had been able to agree upon a division of the railroad and the oil interests of Mexico? Yet that is what this man says under oath (p. 787). Hopkins admits that the Mexican Petroleum Co. finally arrived at an understanding with the Standard Oil Co., and that through this connection it is doing a very large business in Mexico, and says that the Mexican Petroleum Co. is practically owned by the Standard Oil Co., and "on one occasion Doheney & Canfield, who manage the Mexican Petroleum Co., were a little hard up for money and went to the Standard Oil office, 26 Broadway, N. Y., where they secured $400,000 in a few moments," as I was told by a man in the office of the Standard Oil Co., although I would not care to give his name; that the Waters-Pierce Oil Co. did everything they could to keep the Standard out of Mexico "and has been and is its greatest enemy in that country" (p. 791).

Hopkins says that he has "had a good deal to do with revolutions, also in maintaining constituted government." He says he knew that President Zelaya was going to be put out of the Presidency of Nicaragua some time before it happened (p. 788). That he imparted his information to certain people in Europe, notably the French banker, whom he had approached for a loan in behalf of the Mexican revolution. He said he knew exactly what was going to happen. When asked if that information came directly from our Government he said: "I should not say directly from our Government; I knew what was going to happen before our Government did, and stopped Zelaya's loan from going through."

You can not dismiss with a wave of the hand this man who can stop a loan from a European banking house to a government in Central America. You can not dismiss with a wave of the hand a man whose labors were sufficient to call for a personal appropriation out of the treasury of Mexico amounting to $50,000 in gold. This man is an acknowledged and professional revolutionary authority; has been close to the Department of State, and wields a powerful influence over the affairs of Central America. His hand can be seen in every vexatious movement involving the instability of Governments at the south of us, and in my opinion he and his associates are a menace to organized society.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was just about through with this statement. I am anxious to conclude.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wanted to ask the Senator if he might not, with perfect propriety, add to the indictment he has just eloquently drawn of those three men the further fact that every dollar of treasure to be expended and every life to be lost in the coming conflict, if there is one, should also be charged directly to the account of the same men and the same forces behind them?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I think that with his usual sagacity and experience as a lawyer, my friend from Colorado sees with unusual accuracy the consequences of this plot.

Mr. President, Senators may say, "Why was not this matter presented to the Senate before?" That is a fair question. When we returned to Washington after our labors we found our associates scattered from a long and laborious session of the Senate. We were unable to get our committee together. Unfortunately, several of the actors in this horrible drama were killed. Your committee was squarely upon the trail of Gustavo Madero and the Vice President of that Republic, Mr. Suarez, when their lives were snuffed out. The change of administration occurred, and the complexion of the Committee on Foreign Relations changed; a new situation arose. We had no power to go on. We could not complete our work. All we could do was to report the progress we had made; and we laid upon the desk of every Senator the testimony we had taken.

Talk about murders of Americans in Mexico! I have talked personally with several of the unfortunate children whose fathers were murdered on Mexican soil. I know of my own knowledge of many instances of this character. The condition of affairs in Mexico is most deplorable.

My associates upon the Committee on Foreign Relations did not agree that the House resolution was the appropriate resolution for us to adopt. We were unanimous in substituting the resolution offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] for the House resolution. Why did we raise any question over the House resolution? The House resolution directs its attention entirely to an individual, whom it seeks to divorce from his government.

If you divorce Victoriano Huerta from the Government of Mexico, with whose guns will he salute your flag? He has no guns as Victoriano Huerta. A private individual can not salute our flag. All a private individual can do is to express regret for an affront; and that, the President tells us, Victoriano Huerta has done. He has no guns, however, unless he is the de facto head of the Government of Mexico. It is only in his capacity as a representative of government that he can use the power that you exact from him. That is the reason our committee changed this resolution. We were all agreed about it—even the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who apologized for our course in committee and turned to Members of the House present in this Chamber a few moments ago and said he hoped they would insist upon their resolution.

With whose guns will Mr. Huerta salute our flag? With the guns of Mexico? If so, he must be in control of those guns as the representative of established government. When Sir Edward Grey was asked upon the floor of Parliament why the British Government recognized Gen. Huerta as provisional President he replied, "Because it is the policy of England to recognize the de facto government; we prefer this to anarchy."

Mr. President, I little thought when I took the floor that I would have either the strength or the desire to prolong the discussion as far as I have; and I am grateful to my colleagues for their generous consideration. I have left unsaid many things I ought to have said. But I am laboring under extreme pain, as the result of a slight accident; but even under such circumstances I felt that, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I ought at least to say that our committee, without prejudice or party spirit, without pique or unjust criticism, have resolved that we would stand better in the eyes of our countrymen and of the world if we disclosed the real situation existing in Mexico.

Does any Senator upon this floor doubt that our patience has been sorely tried? Does any Senator upon this floor doubt that our national pride has been hurt? Does any Senator doubt that American life and property are unsafe in Mexico as it is at present controlled? Does any Senator doubt that we should appear better before the world if we state the bald, simple unqualified truth about the condition of affairs existing in Mexico?

Mr. President, surely the Senate will not allow itself to be cramped and placed in a strait-jacket in a proceeding like this. I have often heard Senators on the other side of the Chamber criticize and condemn former Executives who sought to interfere with the constitutional prerogatives of Congress, yet I think the membership on the other side is patriotic, it is country loving, rising often above partisanship and personal rancor.

If we have been faulty in our treatment of Mexico, surely it has not been intentional upon the part of the American people. It is the result of accident or lack of information or misinformation. Whatever it is, let us not go blindly to the very brink of danger, but halt before it is too late and take solemn account of our doings. Let us take counsel of the fathers who brought credit and honor to our country in every crisis.

Mr. President, I have not often found it necessary to criticize my fellow officers in the management of the Government of our country, and never mean to do it unkindly. I think the policy which has led us into this error was a mistaken one, but we, at least, should meet the situation squarely now. The situation confronting us is grave in the extreme; the consequences may be very far reaching. The situation calls for our highest patriotism and greatest wisdom.

I heard the late President McKinley say the morning after the Maine went down that continuously he had combated war through many weary months. He had been a soldier himself, and he knew the dangers and the calamities and the misfortunes of war—I heard him say, "It is an easy thing to get into war, but no one knows where it may lead. I have been slow to get in, but wherever it leads we must go."

Now, Mr. President, I have nothing more to say, except that I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, because every statement in it is the absolute and unqualified truth. I hope that out of a situation so complex and so dangerous our country may come unscathed, without a blot of dishonor upon our flag.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. ROOT rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] desires to address an interrogatory to the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in charge of the measure.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WEEKS. Did the Chair recognize the Senator from New York?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado had been recognized previously.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state to the Senator from New York that the Senator from Colorado had been recognized and the Chair had requested the Senator from Colorado to give way to another Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts for the purpose indicated by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts informed the Chair he desired to make an interrogatory of the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WEEKS. I supposed the Chair was going to recognize the Senator from New York, and I would not wish to intrude upon his time except to ask a question. Having recognized the Senator from Colorado, who yields to me, I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if he has any information relating to a rumor which seems to be persistent in the press and which is well authenticated, I think, that our military forces at Vera Cruz have already seized the customhouse and that city?

Mr. SHIVELY. In reply to the question submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, I ought to say that I do not want to speak with entire positiveness as to just what has occurred at Vera Cruz. I may be mistaken. My impression is that the customhouse at the city of Vera Cruz has been taken; that it was taken to-day without the firing of a gun; and that it is in the possession of our forces.

Mr. WEEKS. Then, Mr. President, that being the case, I want to ask the Senator from Indiana——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There must be order in the galleries. The Senator from Massachusetts is concluding his interrogatory.

Mr. WEEKS. Assuming that that is the case, I want to ask the Senator from Indiana one further question. Does he not think it is a farce for the Senate to further consider a resolution sent here by the State Department asking us to give the President authority to use the armed forces in Mexico?

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I thought it was understood by this time that there is no resolution here asking Congress to give the President authority. The President made it very clear and distinct in his address that that was not the purpose of his errand. He has only asked the counsel and the support and the approval of Congress for things that he has the authority to do without coming to Congress.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has the floor, and the time occupied must be with his assent.

Mr. JAMES. If the Senator from Colorado will yield, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. He speaks of a farce in the Senate in considering this resolution. I ask him if he does not think it would have been a complete farce for the forces of the United States to have been delayed while the Senate talked and talked and talked and 2,000,000 rounds of ammunition and 250 rapid-fire machine guns were delivered to forces that perhaps we are to have to fight. I rejoice, if the President has seized Vera Cruz, to prevent the delivery of these munitions of war to the forces of Huerta.

Mr. WEEKS. It is noticeable that the administration has taken no action to prevent arms and ammunition from being taken across the border to assist Villa in his campaign against Gen. Huerta. I am informed that 2,700 stands of arms have been taken across the border within 24 hours for that purpose. Why is it found necessary to prevent arms and ammunition reaching one combatant and permitting them to be taken to the other? I simply ask a question for information, because it seems to me to ask us to justify the President to do something after he has done it is little short of ridiculous.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will proceed. The Chair will recognize the Senator from New York, a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, after the Senator from Colorado has concluded.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the proposal of the Senator from Colorado be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the printed amendment, as reported by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], line 7, after the word "Mexico," add the following words: "or any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty or control any of the territory thereof except as may be necessary to the enforcement of such demands," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

Be it further resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico or any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty or control over any of the territory thereof except as may be necessary to the enforcement of such demands.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall support the resolution which the majority of the committee has laid before the Senate, whether the amendment just read shall have been incorporated into it or not. I shall do it notwithstanding my conviction that the proposed amendment is of the utmost and far-reaching importance in the present crisis and that a solemn declaration should be given to the world that our purpose is not and will not be one of territorial aggression.

Mr. President, I shall vote for the joint resolution under no illusions as to its meaning or to what it will lead us. I am aware of the far-reaching consequences which will inevitably ensue from the ultimate action of Congress to-day. Mr. President, we are, notwithstanding the purpose both of the President and the committee, declaring war against the people of a sister Republic. This will be our condition to-morrow without reference to our purposes or intentions. It makes no difference, so far as the logical consequences are concerned, whether our resolutions are pivoted upon one cause or upon many causes, whether we single out one act and make it the prominent feature of our preamble or include all the acts of which complaint against Mexico has been made during the past two years.

I sympathize with the committee and with the President in their laudable efforts to preserve the peace, and I know that the President of the United States and his honored predecessor before him have done all that they could do as an alternative to ultimate interference and for the avoidance of military action.

Mr. President, Wendell Phillips long ago said that "revolutions are not made; they come." The war with Mexico which now confronts us had its genesis in that room in the New York hotel, that room in which three men met and assumed to determine the destiny of Mexico, and whose schemes have been so eloquently described by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. They sowed the wind, Mr. President, and the people of Mexico and of the United States are reaping the whirlwind, out of which, if benefits shall come, will flow to those who are responsible for these unhappy conditions. Interference, Mr. President, from whatever motive means war.

I am therefore, Mr. President, laboring under no illusions as to what present conditions mean. While we have been debating, the armed forces of the United States have effected a landing upon Mexican soil, and have taken possession of Vera Cruz.

Mr. President, history many times repeats itself. It has done so more than once in the history of this Republic. April has been a fateful month to America. We have waged four great wars since 1775. The shot fired at Lexington in that year, which was heard around the world, disturbed the stillness of an April morning, and the American Revolution was on.

On the 12th day of April, 1861, 86 years thereafter, the boom of cannon at Fort Sumter ushered in the mightest military drama in the history of mankind. And it was upon the 16th day of April, 1898, that the Congress of the United States formally declared war against Spain.

We are assembled here to-day, Mr. President, upon this 21st day of April, I fear, to begin, not a war of aggression, I trust not a war of conquest, but a conflict which the exigencies and the emergencies of the past few months have made absolutely unavoidable. I trust in God, Mr. President, that my apprehensions may prove groundless, and that from the dark forebodings of the present may come a brighter and a happier future than that which now looms before us.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that to-day is the anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto, a battle that marked the achievement of the independence of the Texans from Mexico.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator, Mr. President, for his reminder, for it adds another to the instances which have made April America's eventful month.

Mr. President, with the possible exception of that of 1812, the wars of this country have resulted in our territorial aggrandizement. Through them we have extended our domain to the west and to the south. That which we acquired in the War of the Revolution was our own. It is not surprising that the last two wars of this country, thus resulting, should, with the Latin races and Governments of the south, inspire the apprehension that beneath our cloak of philanthropic interference for Mexico's welfare is covered the darker design of further territorial acquisitions. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] very truly declared to-day that the white man was the greediest of mortals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit the Chair to merely interrupt him for a moment? The Chair begs to ask of the Senate such quietude as is compatible with its comfort, and he demands of the occupants of the galleries that they must cease conversation while a Senator is speaking from the floor. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. THOMAS. If we may speak from his history, the Senator from Mississippi might have added that the Anglo-Saxon white man is the greediest of them all. Beginning with his origin is his hunger for land, for conquest, for territorial expansion. It is a splendid attribute of the race, properly directed, because in its exercise we find those springs of advancement and development and of colonizing which have made that the first and dominating race of the world; but, Mr. President, we should not feel surprised if the motives of the Anglo-Saxon are challenged, if the Southern and Central American should believe that any conflict in which he may engage has for its ultimate, if not its only, purpose the further acquisition of territory, which, of course, means the spoliation of the vanquished.

Mr. President, the Monroe doctrine as originally promulgated had for its object the preservation of this continent to the great principle of self-government. Its purpose was to forbid colonization and to prevent Europe from interfering with the domestic affairs of any of the peoples of this hemisphere. Coincident with it was the declaration of Mr. Jefferson that we should confine all of our enterprises, all of our affairs, to this continent, and abstain from meddling with those of the older nations.

Yet, Mr. President, that doctrine south of the Rio Grande is perhaps less relished than it is anywhere else on earth. It is both feared and hated wherever the Spanish language is spoken on this hemisphere, and the peoples whose confidence we should have, whose self-constituted guardians we are, and for whose benefit and protection the doctrine was announced, are those, and precisely those, who are most vigorous in refusing to accept it, and in assigning sinister purpose and motives to us because of our support and defense of it. They realize, as we do, that it has been strangely construed and remarkably applied in later days. When they consider the result of the Spanish War, acquiring, as we did, additional territory in the Atlantic seas, reaching out across the Pacific and annexing to ourselves the Philippines; when they reflect upon the manner in which the Republic of Panama was created and defended and recognized; and when they reflect further upon the fact that troops were recently landed on, and I think, have never been withdrawn from, the soil of Nicaragua, it is not surprising, Mr. President, that they will see in our present effort to restore law and order in unhappy Mexico deep and dark and sinister designs to partition its territory.

The Senator from Mississippi referred to the joy and hilarity exhibited upon the streets of the city of Washington last Sunday night by those who shouted their approval of the possibility of armed conflict with Mexico; and you have noticed, Mr. President, as have I, in many public prints the assurance that wherever the flag is raised it will never be pulled down, and that territorial acquisitions will be, as a consequence, an accomplished fact with the invasion of Mexico by the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Colorado used the words "the Senator from Mississippi." Is the Senator quoting me?

Mr. THOMAS. I referred, Mr. President, to the Senator from Mississippi, who this morning said, among other things, that on Sunday evening last he heard sounds of rejoicing upon the street, and, upon inquiry, was informed that they proceeded from people who were celebrating the possibility of war with Mexico.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, the Senator quotes me perfectly correctly, then. I had misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I was drawing my own conclusions as to the prompting causes of that hilarity, which I believe to be the desire for more land, the hunger for conquest, the raising of Old Glory upon foreign soil, and the appeal to American patriotism to excitement and passion against its being taken down, to the end that we might have new lands to exploit and new provinces to govern.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado continue to yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I at first did not quite understand what was being referred to——

Mr. THOMAS. I hope I am not responsible for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit the Chair to request that he address the Chair in order that the reporter may gather his observations and record them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from Colorado will express his contempt for the people who have made that sort of an appeal to him or to me.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator did that himself this morning so much better than I can do it that I do not think it is necessary to repeat it.

Mr. President, there have been during the past year or two in the press, on the platform, and in the ordinary intercourse of man with man many expressions of a desire for war with Mexico. Many of the supposed causes for invasion have been exploited, many of them aggravated, in order to force this country to interfere with the armed hand in the affairs of Mexico. The men who have been engaged in that propaganda are not the men who are going to fight the battles of the Republic. They are the men who expect, through an aroused and perhaps an artificial public opinion, to provoke war and to receive the benefits consequent upon its successful prosecution. Many of them know, Mr. President, although they may not admit it, that war with Mexico is going to be no holiday affair, but they are willing to take their chances because of the gain which may flow from that conflict. Many of them know that it will be a long and bloody and expensive conflict, arousing and crystallizing eternal enmity between American and Latin; but what is that compared with the prospect of plunder?

Mr. President, I wish there were some power in the Congress of the United States by the exercise of which we could require that every proprietor of a newspaper, every man who edits one, every speaker upon the platform, and every man who in common intercourse with his fellow men has been demanding war with Mexico might be made to enlist as a private in the ranks for its entire duration. Some of them will go to the front with epaulets upon their shoulders, perhaps; many of them will secure fat Army contracts; but I have no expectation, Mr. President, of seeing any of them either in the front or the rear ranks with the men who fight the battles of the Union. Oh, Mr. President, it is the son of the middle-class man, the son of the artisan or the merchant or the lawyer, the sons of the laboring men and women, who must shoulder the musket and brave the horrors of the Mexican desert and the miasmatic jungles of the Tropics—for they will meet both in Mexico—the sons of these people, the news of whose bloody end upon the field or in the sweltering hospitals of that unhappy country will bring heartache and agony to fathers and mothers, wives and children, to sisters and sweethearts; but the men who made this war will never subject themselves to its awful horrors.

We, Mr. President, of the South and you gentlemen of the North, who have been through the crucible of these conflicts, know what it all means. It seems to be a law of nature that the offenses of men visit their consequences upon the heads of the innocent, the helpless, and the nonoffending. It is the wives, the widows, the mothers, the orphans, Mr. President, upon whom will fall the awful burden of the terrible agony that greets us beyond the border. The sweat and toil of the masses will be expended in providing the funds to sustain our efforts to restore peace to unhappy Mexico; and I, for one, Mr. President, want to see an amendment to this resolution which will circumvent the ambitions of the man who stays at home, the man who wants war for war's sake, the man who is proud of Old Glory only when it waves upon foreign soil and who pretends to love it only when he fears its removal from soil he wants to steal.

It is this class of men, Mr. President, who are responsible for the unpopularity of the Monroe doctrine in South and Central America, who will make their influence, their greed, and their purposes more effectual as the practical result of this war than any purposes of our own if we do not declare to them and to the civilized world that we do not want and will not retain one solitary foot of the territory of Mexico.

Why should we take it, Mr. President? This country has problems now confronting it which arouse the serious apprehension of every thinking man. Some of them are so grave as to defy solution by our best and wisest statesmen. The South is confronted with an age-old problem. Out on the Pacific coast are the advance guards of the hordes of a more populous race, presenting possibilities so serious and far-reaching as to make us wonder whether our Government is not still in its experimental stages and whether it can ride the waves of Asiatic immigration. From the southeast of Europe and from western Asia comes another tide of immigration, bringing with it problems perhaps deeper and darker still; and out of them all, Mr. President, have emerged those unsettled conditions which we characterize as difficulties between capital and labor, between wealth and opportunity, and which may carry within their bosoms the seeds of internal destruction.

We on this side of the Chamber have been sent here, Mr. President, as the result of the recent election for the purpose of solving, if we can, some of these mighty problems. We have endeavored, to some extent, to do so, but the greater task is still before us. What becomes of that legislation which we have promised to give to the American people—those restraints which we have covenanted with them to place upon expanding centralization of capital and of industry—if the minds and the energies of the people of the Nation are to be diverted to the conflict with Mexico?

If all our time and attention must be absorbed by such conditions, they must be, Mr. President, disappointed, and our duties may be forgotten or abandoned, if as a result of this war our boundary line moves southward. Mr. President, if there be one reason for moving it southward, there is every reason for carrying it to the Straits of Magellan; for the same problem will confront us from any other boundary wherever it may be fixed short of that line.

I say, therefore, that we ought to give assurance to the world that we not only do not want, but we do not propose to take, any territory from Mexico. What the Government of the United States, through the action of its wise and patriotic President, means is that the armed force of the country is to be used to restore peace and law and order to distracted Mexico—only that and nothing more. We do not want that country. We can not assimilate its people.

Mr. President, as far as I am personally concerned, I would not give one strong, clear-eyed, wholesome American boy, the pride and joy of a father's ambitions and the center of a mother's earnest love, for all the people and all the lands of Mexico. Yet how many, many of them will cross the Rio Grande never to return. How many will perish upon her inhospitable deserts. How many will be stricken by the diseases that infest her jungles. Let it not be said that they were sacrificed upon the altar of territorial acquisition. Let us make that plain to the world.

Mr. President, it is not alone the youth of our land whom we are about to sacrifice. No country ever entered into a war and emerged from it in the same condition. Modern wars are enormously expensive. A Mexican war may be unusually so. Everything that is consumed must be transported within her borders. Our debt will swell perhaps to undue proportions. The people of the world to-day are paying the cost of wars that were fought and ended over a century ago. It is said of the great Napoleon—in some respects far greater statesman than military genius—that he paid his way as he went. He never issued a bond nor placed a mortgage upon posterity. His maxim was that each generation should pay its way. He was conquered by the man who invented the deferred debt, who at that time was the ruler of England, whose people since that time in interest alone have paid that debt thrice over, while the debt itself is as large as it ever was.

The debt which the people of the United States incurred during the Civil War still rests its heavy burdens upon us. We have paid it twice over in interest charges. The debt incurred by the Spanish War, like Tennyson's brook, goes on and will go on forever. The debt which we are about to create is a debt which our children and our children's children must bear, all in the cause of a public philanthropic duty resting upon us to restore peace to the people of a sister republic. That is enough, God knows, without adding to the reproaches which may come from posterity—the added reproach of cupidity and of land hunger, finding expressions in terms of bonds and coupons through all the coming centuries.

The prospective Mexican War, if it may be so called, had its origin in the cupidity of Americans and Englishmen in a battle royal between those who had and those who would control the oil resources of Mexico. The Standard Oil Co., with its branches upon the one side, and Lord Cowdray, with his company and branches upon the other, fomented a rebellion, financed it to ultimate success and were doubtless responsible for the recommencement of hostilities.

Think of it, Mr. President. I confess that I was amazed and appalled by the marvelous and infamous conspiracy, whose beginnings and consummation were outlined by the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who read the awful story from the record. Oh, Mr. President, it is an awful thing to say, but truth requires me to say that every dollar of property destroyed, every life that so far has been taken, whether of Mexican or of foreigner, every woman who has been ravished, every outrage that has been committed, may be directly traced to that conspiracy for the control of the natural resources of Mexico. It is equally true that all the treasure that shall be expended, all the blood that may be shed, all the lives which may be lost in our efforts for the tranquillity of Mexico should be traced directly back to that sinister source. For it the liberties of 17,000,000 people were jeopardized and the peace and order of 17,000,000 people destroyed perhaps forever.

If the great American Nation is obliged to use its Army and its Navy, its young men, glorying in their strength and manhood, to undo in part the fearful wrong inflicted upon humanity by these conspirators, I would to God, if what the Senator from Michigan said be true—and I do not doubt it—that they might be carried with the Army and placed midway between the contending hosts of Mexico and Uncle Sam, there to expiate in part their crime against humanity, to the end that some of the misfortunes for which they are responsible might visit their consequences upon them.

But, Mr. President, it is these gentlemen and others like them who will buy our bonds! It is these interests that will advance us their money! It is to them that interest will be paid by us and our children's children until time shall be no more! They arise in war as they arise in peace, and honor is vindicated that they may wax fat with time. Unless we declare to all the world, and particularly to them, that not a single acre of Mexican soil shall be annexed to Uncle Sam's dominions; unless we give them to understand that one result of this war will not be the acquisition to American territory of those great resources, it will follow as the night the day that the powers which have been so potential in the past may be equally potential in accomplishing their ultimate result as one of the conditions of peace between the United States and whatever government is created in Mexico, and thus secure the prize for which they overthrew Diaz, assassinated Madero, and involved their country in a devastating war.

But I shall not detain the Senate longer. I earnestly hope Senators will incorporate this declaration into the resolution of justification which we propose to give to the President of the United States, I trust, by the unanimous voice of 95 Senators here assembled.

Mr. ROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to inquire whether it would not be possible to take a recess at this time, or soon, and reconvene this evening about 8 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In a matter of that kind the Chair, of course, necessarily defers to the Senators on both sides having in charge the resolution. The Chair will be glad if they will take counsel and then announce their conclusion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest to the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations the propriety of a recess at this hour, with the program of reconvening at 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, it is only fair to say that we are increasingly anxious for an early vote on this measure. If, by conserving the comfort and convenience of Senators by taking a recess, we shall expedite the matter, I will agree to it for that purpose.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 16, 1914:

S. 135. An act for the relief of Severin and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen;

S. 1884. An act for the relief of Phoebe W. Chase; and

S. 4943. An act to amend section 1 of an act of Congress approved April 9, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 80), entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes."

On April 17, 1914:

S. 54. An act for the relief of George W. Hoyt.

On April 18, 1914:

S. 75. An act for the relief of Theresa A. Murray;

S. 175. An act for the relief of Lawson Reno, collector second district of Kentucky; and

S. 3610. An act for the relief of C. E. Moore.

On April 20, 1914:

S. 1829. An act for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean.

FRANCHISES OF PORTO RICO (H. DOC. NO. 915).

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 32 of the act of Congress approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith certified copies of franchises granted by the Executive Council of Porto Rico, which are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War transmitting them to me. Such of these as relate to railroad, street railway, telegraph, and telephone franchises, privileges, or concessions have been approved by me, as required by the joint resolution of May 1, 1900 (31 Stat., 715).

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 21, 1914.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of House joint resolution No. 251.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands against Victoriano Huerta.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Goff	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Borah	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Hollis	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Hughes	Overman	Smoot
Bryan	James	Owen	Sutherland
Burleigh	Jones	Page	Swanson
Catron	Kenyon	Perkins	Thomas
Clapp	Kern	Pomerene	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Ransdell	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Vardaman
Colt	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Walsh
Cummins	Lewis	Root	Weeks
Dillingham	Lippitt	Saulsbury	West
Fall	McCumber	Sheppard	Works
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shively
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having responded to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Before the proceedings are resumed for this evening the Chair desires to say a few words to the occupants of the galleries. Many of you who are in attendance have been accustomed no doubt to visiting the galleries of the House and are not familiar with the rule of the Senate which prohibits any form of manifestation of applause or dissent. The Chair desires to advise you that it is not permitted, and trusts you will not violate the rule. If the rule is violated intentionally, the person doing so must vacate the gallery. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT].

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I shall not prolong very much this discussion, for I think that whatever action we take ought to be taken to-day without further delay. I do wish, however, to state the reasons for supporting the substitute offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in lieu of the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The President has asked Congress for its approval of a course which he purposed to follow to compel amends for an insult to the flag of the United States. A resolution has come from the House declaring that the President is justified in the course he proposes and naming Gen. Huerta as the person against whom the present action is understood to be directed. The Committee on Foreign Relations has reported a substitute resolution which omits all reference by name to Gen. Huerta, but so refers to the statements made by the President in his address that in explaining the justification of the course which he proposes the effect is substantially the same. We are not asked to authorize action; we are asked to justify it.

Mr. President, I have the highest respect—more than respect, I have regard and admiration—for the President of the United States. I have entire confidence in the sincerity of his purpose, in the lofty quality of the ideals which he pursues, and in the genuineness of his adherence to peace.

But we are asked not to express our opinion of the President of the United States, not to express our confidence in him or in his purposes. We are asked in the exercise of our duty as a part of the Government of the United States to declare a specified course of conduct under specified conditions to be justified. It is our duty that we are to perform, our duty as a part of the Government of the United States, our duty to the hundred millions of people of the United States, to the community of nations, to the credit and good name of our country, to the honor and glory that this great democracy has intrusted to our hands as its representatives. This duty we are called upon to perform.

The course which is proposed is the forcible armed compulsion of the people or some of the people of a friendly nation, the armed compulsion of a government which I think we all are agreed is an existing de facto government, having in its control the greater part of the territory of Mexico—the armed compulsion of that government to make amends to the United States for an insult to its flag.

What is the justification? We can not justify, sir, upon confidence which we all have in the President. We must justify upon grounds which commend themselves to our consciences, to our intelligence, to the conscience of the American people, and to the deliberate judgment of the civilized world.

What is the justification? Observe, sir, I do not say that there is no justification. I ask what it is. In the address of the President, in the plain implications and exclusive inferences of the resolution which came from the House, and equally in the resolution reported by the committee, the justification is to be found in a single incident. That incident was this: A boatload of sailors in the uniform of the United States, upon a boat flying the flag of the United States, landed the other day at a wharf in Tampico and were arrested by an officer in charge of a guard, taken through the streets, presently returned to the boat and set free—a very gross offense to the dignity of the United States, an insult which can not be ignored.

But, sir, immediate amends were made. The action of the officer who made the arrest was disavowed by the government under which he served, the de facto government of Mexico, under the de facto presidency of Gen. Huerta. It is stated that the officer was in turn arrested and was to be punished. The commandant at Tampico apologized for the act and, promptly upon being advised of the circumstance, the head of the de facto government, Gen. Huerta, also apologized. Those amends, which would be all that could be expected from private individuals, were, nevertheless, not satisfactory and not sufficient for the officer in command of the American fleet or squadron at Tampico, and he demanded a formal salute to the American flag.

Mr. President, I agree with the admiral that the amends were not sufficient as coming from the de facto government and that there should have been a salute to the American flag, but it appears that there was an interposition by our Government; there were communications between our State Department and our chargé in the City of Mexico, representations to the de facto government in Mexico, negotiations and conversations, as to the character of the further amends that should be made. The matter came plainly to be a discussion between the Government of the United States and the de facto government of Mexico. Not about the quality of the act that was done; there is no dispute about that. Not about the obligation to make amends; that was done. Not about the obligation to apologize; the apologies were made. But about the form of further amends, how a salute should be fired, what were the proper and customary obligatory incidents in the way of returning such a salute, and the number of guns which should be fired. It is upon that dispute—upon a dispute between these two Governments about the number of guns that are to be fired and about what the proper custom is as to returning the salute when it is fired—it is upon that dispute that this justification is made to rest in the resolution passed by the other House and in the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate.

Mr. President, I feel bound to say that while I would never for a moment fail so far as in me lay in preserving the dignity and honor of the flag of the United States, the dispute to which this incident has come seems to be painfully inadequate to the results which are to be drawn from it. If that is all—if there is nothing else except a question of the number of guns and the form and manner of salute—which stands between the hundred million people of the United States and this poor, harried, and distressed people, it seems to me that the occasion is painfully inadequate to the results that are to follow.

Is that all? We learn to-night that Vera Cruz has fallen, that 4 American marines lie dead in that city, and that 21 lie suffering from wounds. Is there nothing but this dispute about the number of guns and the form and ceremony of a salute to justify the sacrifice of those American lives?

O Mr. President, deeply and sincerely as the President of the United States desires to limit the scope of his action, deeply and sincerely as he desires the maintenance of peace, all history and human experience teach us that once lighted the fires of war can not be quenched at will.

It is intervention, technically, but it is war in its essence that we are to vote to justify to-night. How long it will continue, what its results and its incidents will be, no man can state. Men will die, men dear to us will die, because of the action that we are to approve to-night. American homes will be desolate; American women will mourn; American children will go through life fatherless, because of the action that we are to approve to-night; and when those children, grown to manhood, turn back the page to learn in what cause their fathers died, are they to find that it was about a quarrel as to the number of guns and the form and ceremony of a salute and nothing else?

We are to justify. What is the justification? Is there none but that? We, the representatives of the great peace-loving Nation; we, the representatives of the great democracy that prides itself upon demonstrating to the world that democracy can be peaceful and just; we are to justify these acts of war; and is there no justification that we can lay before our countrymen, before the world, before the community of nations, before the judgment seat of history, except our dispute about the number of guns and the form and method of a salute? O Mr. President, how inadequate! How can we justify ourselves if we have no justification but that?

But, sir, that is not all. If it had been all, the President would not have come to the Congress yesterday; if it had been all, we would not be discussing the subject here to-night. Back of the incident, back of the special circumstance which forms the whole of the resolution reported by the committee, there is a great array of facts, a long, dreadful history. Mr. President, if there were nothing else but the incident referred to in the resolution, would the American Government have thought for a moment of treating this poor, weak country in this peremptory way? Such things have happened hundreds of times before. Ignorant subalterns have many and many a time transgressed the limits of propriety, mistaken their duty and their powers, and have done acts which were insults to great governments. It has often occurred in the history of the United States. What have we done; what would we do to-day if a subordinate officer in a port of England or France or Germany or Italy were to mistake his duty, make an arrest of American sailors, as American sailors have been arrested before, and the act were disavowed by the Government he served and an apology were made, and regret and an intention to punish him were expressed—what would we do about the form and method of further amends? Sir, in the first place, we would settle the facts.

We are now engaged in signing a series of treaties designed to take in all the world, and already a very large number of nations of the world have signed, under which we agree with them that if there be any dispute about any question of fact a commission shall investigate and report, and no action shall be taken for one year, to allow the report to be made. We find here that, while our admiral reported that the American flag was flying on the boat, the Mexican officer reported to Gen. Huerta that no flag was flying. I believe our admiral, but can we think it strange that Gen. Huerta believed his officer? If there were nothing else—if this were all—should not that question of fact be determined by peaceful means?

The question of the proper, appropriate, and customary form and method of a salute is a matter of precedent and the usage of nations. It is the universal custom of civilized nations to present in diplomatic communications the precedents, the authorities showing that the custom contended for by one country is the true custom and that the other country is mistaken. In the case that I suppose, of such an incident occurring in a port of France or Germany or England or Italy, sir, we would have presented our facts, investigated the facts, made certain and clear the facts, presented the authorities upon precedent and custom, and by peaceable and friendly communication would have reached a result.

If that were all, that is what we would do. If this be all, is this Nation of a hundred millions, the richest upon earth, with its mighty power, to treat poor, weak, bankrupt, downtrodden, distressed, despairing Mexico in any less kindly and just a way? If this be all, how can we, in the arrogance of power, justify treating this weak neighbor with a peremptory harshness that we would not think of using toward a powerful nation?

Mr. President, what I have said is what the good people of our country and of the world will think if we finish our work to-night by the adoption of the resolution reported by the committee. There is no justification for us there. No; by the expression of one thing, the dispute about the salute, we commit ourselves to the exclusion of all other justifications. We commit ourselves to a condemnation that will weigh heavily upon the heart of many a good American who loves his country and her honor, and which as time goes on, and the judgment of the world and of the future is made up, will grow darker and darker.

But, Mr. President, it is not all—it is not all. There is matter of justification; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has sought to lay it before the people of America and of Mexico and of the community of nations by the recital in the substitute resolution which he offers. What is it? It is that lying behind the insult to our flag by this poor, ignorant subordinate are years of violence and anarchy in Mexico. Lying behind it are hundreds of American lives sacrificed, millions of American property destroyed, and thousands of Americans reduced to poverty to-day through the destruction of their property. Lying behind it is a condition of anarchy in Mexico which makes it impossible to secure, by diplomatic means, protection for American life and property in that country. Lying behind it is a condition of affairs in Mexico which makes that country incapable of performing its international obligations.

The insult to the flag is but a part—the culmination, if you please—of a long series of violations of American rights, a long series of violations of those rights which it is the duty of our country to protect—violations not, for the most part, of government, but made possible by the weakness of government, because through that country range bands of freebooters and chieftains like the captains of free companies, without control or responsibility. Lying back of this incident is a condition of things in Mexico which absolutely prevents the protection of American life and property except through respect for the American flag, the American uniform, the American Government.

It is that which gives significance to the demand that public respect shall be paid to the flag of the United States. There is our justification. It is a justification lying not in Victoriano Huerta or in his conduct alone, but in the universal condition of affairs in Mexico. The real object to be attained by the course which we are asked to approve is not the gratification of personal pride; it is not the satisfaction of an admiral or a Government. It is the preservation of the power of the United States to protect its citizens under those conditions.

If we omit from the resolution that shall be passed to-night all reference to the matters that are enumerated in the substitute, we omit the real object which forms the only justification for action. Without that, sir, upon the showing of the resolution reported by the committee we would be everlastingly wrong. With the facts that are enumerated in the substitute the action of the United States will rest with becoming sense of proportion and national dignity upon adequate foundation and cause.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] has observed, in effect, that the substitute resolution thunders in the index. Ah, Mr. President, the capture of Vera Cruz, the death of American citizens, the wounds and sufferings of men who lie there to-night demand something more than formal inducement. The recitals of the substitute resolution are weak in the face of death and wounds and sufferings of Americans in Vera Cruz. No less than the substitute resolution avers can justify us.

The conclusion of the substitute resolution, sir, is the same as that of the other. It justifies the President in the same course of conduct which the committee resolution justifies, but it gives grounds. It gives substantial grounds. It gives grounds creditable to the United States and adequate for the proposed action, instead of leaving this momentous movement of a great naval and military power to rest upon no justification but a dispute with a weak and helpless adversary about number of guns and the proper ceremonies of a salute.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the issue between the two resolutions can not be buried in rhetoric nor submerged in eloquence, however splendid their periods. The issue is, Shall we make general declaration of offensive action against all of the people of Mexico, or shall we hold to responsibility the present head of the de facto government which controls a part of Mexico? The question is, Shall we endeavor to drive all Mexico together to fight as one man, for what they will be led to believe is the preservation of their national integrity, or shall we say to the people of Mexico, as the President has asked us to say, "We have no quarrel with Mexico. We have no issue with her people. We contemplate no violence against her or her people. We merely insist that Gen. Huerta, who now holds military sway over a portion of Mexico, shall furnish to his subject people a fit example of the fact that the dignity of the American uniform and the sacredness of the American flag must be respected even upon the soil of Mexico"? That is the issue.

I have listened here to arguments which strike me as most astounding. We are told in one breath that "all of the trouble in Mexico resulted from a conspiracy foully born upon American soil; that the conspirators were Americans having selfish financial interests and Englishmen having equally selfish financial interests; and that the contest in Mexico, with all its long chain of disorder and suffering and misery, sprang from one common source, to wit, the conspiracy upon our own soil." We were told by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] in great detail of these circumstances; and we heard him, with eloquent tongue and plaintive tone, speak of the fact that our Government had not done its duty by the people of Mexico. Then we heard him join in the cry of those who would make war on all Mexico; join in the cry of those who would by armed force right every wrong that has happened upon the soil of Mexico, who would set forth every act of murder and rapine and outrage, whether done by government or done by private individuals, and heaping all together, massing all against the people of Mexico, demand in fact, if not in phraseology, that our armed forces shall sweep the entire territory of Mexico. That is the logic we hear from gentlemen who have so eloquently spoken.

On the contrary, the President of the United States, "with the patience and faith of the saints," has been endeavoring to preserve the peace of this continent. He has looked upon Mexico with real charity; his great heart has been and yet is filled with kindliness for its people; he has endeavored to hold back the hand of war. When at last insult was officially given to our flag and to our uniform, the President declared that the author of the insult should be held responsible and that the Mexican people should go acquit of that act.

It would come with better grace if gentlemen who plead for "poor, oppressed Mexico," who rehearse the story of her wrongs and charge them to the American people, did not at the same time insist that with fire and sword, with bayonet and cannon we sweep the entire land of Mexico and crush it beneath the iron heel of war.

What is the request of the President? He has said that our flag and uniform have been insulted by the only existing government at the City of Mexico; he has said that the Mexican Government as it exists at that place must properly make reparation.

The Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] asserts "that we are about to engage in war over a mere question of the number of guns to be fired in a salute." Mr. President, with all respect for the Senator from New York I say it is not a mere contest over the number of guns. It is a very much graver question.

Let us understand the point. Everything in this world is done by symbol. The deed to property is after all only a symbol of title. The flag is the symbol of a nation's sovereign power and honor. An insult to the flag is an insult to the national honor. The number of guns fired under certain circumstances is the answer to the question whether a proper apology has been made for an outrage committed against the national honor. Is that a trivial matter? Is it a light question whether proper apology shall be made when the honor of the United States Government has been assailed, its flag insulted, and the uniform of its soldiers and sailors violated?

Mr. President, I asked the question to-day, and I think I am warranted in saying it was not answered, whether in any single instance up to the one we are now discussing there had been official outrage perpetrated upon our flag, our uniform, or our people. We all understand that there have been acts of violence. We all know that roving bands of alleged soldiers have stolen horses and cattle in Mexico. We all know that banditti have outraged American citizens, and that they have in some instances committed murder. Those are the acts of violence which always occur in countries that are torn with civil dissension and rent by internecine war; but the act of Huerta is the first instance, to my knowledge, where the responsible head of a de facto government has insulted our flag or our uniform.

What was the significance of that act? The mere arrest of two or three men, taking them from a boat, carrying them a few blocks into the city, may in itself be a trivial thing, and it may be a thing of tragic importance. When these men were arrested they represented the Government of the United States. Their arrest meant an insult to the Government of the United States. The least the offending Government could do was to apologize, and to follow that apology by the particular salute which under the law and custom of nations was demanded by the circumstances. When Huerta refused to make that reparation he stood upon his insult and continued to defy the Government and people of the United States.

Now, sir, was that a trivial thing? Why do we insist upon respect for our uniform? Why do we insist upon respect for our flag? Is it because the uniform costs a certain number of dollars? Is it because the flag is composed of silk or bunting which has a market value? Not at all. It is because the uniform represents the majesty of our country and the flag typifies the glory and honor of our people. Whenever in Mexico an officer of the Mexican army can parade a soldier of the American Army or a sailor of the American Navy before the populace for their jeers and laughter, notice is given to every inhabitant of that country that the United States is not able to protect even the men who wear its uniform. Hence all are in effect told that free license may be had to prey upon the citizens of this country there residing.

To pass this insult in silence is to imperil the life of every citizen of the United States who may set foot upon the soil of Mexico. To pass this insult without demanding full, certain, and speedy reparation is to bring into jeopardy all American property and the life and liberty of every American citizen who is in Mexico. Nay, more; it is to bring our country within the contempt of all mankind. We are not, as has been said, standing here "on punctilios." We are standing upon national honor, upon national dignity, upon our rights as a free people; we are standing for the majesty of the greatest Government there is beneath God's bending skies.

For one, as long as I live I will never subscribe to the pusillanimous doctrine I heard here this afternoon that "the uniform is nothing," and that it is "a mere punctilio" to demand that our flag shall be respected.

We are told that if we do not put in the preamble of this resolution a recitation of all our wrongs the child of the future will read the resolution and ask in wonder, "Why was my father sent to his death for so slight a cause?" We are told that the people of the United States will with astonishment ask, "Do you fight because of the number of guns to be fired in a salute?"

Mr. President, the children of the future may be ignorant, as the Senator appears to anticipate—I hope they will not be—but I can say to the Senator from New York that the great body of the people of the United States now living know every fact that the Senate of the United States knows with reference to our troubles in Mexico; and though we do not recite the murders done or the anarchy which exists in Mexico, though we recite none of these things, the people will understand that this insult to our flag was the culmination of aggravated conditions, and they will know how to give to our act its proper setting.

Why, sir, the world knows the facts. The world looks with astonishment at the patience we have hitherto displayed. Will it not applaud us if we now limit our demands and the extent of our reprisals?

Since I began speaking the telegraph reports that blood has already been spilled at Vera Cruz. The report may unhappily be true; it may be that red drops will yet sprinkle every acre of Mexican soil; it may be that there will be vacant chairs in the American homes; it may be that we shall ride with fire and sword across that country and plow its fields with cannon shot and shell; but down at the other end of the Capital sits a man who hopes that this fire can yet be circumscribed within the area that is controlled by Gen. Huerta, and that the rest of the country need not be invaded. Meanwhile you who talk of "poor, weak Mexico" and of the "awful crime it is to invade her" insist upon a resolution which means war not with Victoriano Huerta but with all the people of Mexico.

I am astounded, sir, at another sentiment uttered here, uttered twice upon this side of the Chamber, that "the American is the greatest land thief in the world." At this crucial hour, when men are dying down there in Vera Cruz, we certify to all the Mexican people from the lips of American Senators that we are land thieves, and they must look well lest we shall steal their homes.

I deny, sir, that such indictment can be brought justly against the American Republic. We acquired by purchase nearly all the land we occupy. We were compelled to take some of it from Mexico in a war that was clearly and absolutely justified, a war that did not begin for the purpose of getting land, a war that was begun for the protection of human beings, a war that was lighted by the glorious flame of Texan patriotism.

We made war with Spain. We took Cuba, situate within 90 miles of our coast; we poured out some of our blood and much of our treasure; we camped upon the soil and helped establish a free government; we returned to strengthen the government, to enable it to grow, so that it could stand alone, and we are to-day protecting the Cuban government and people by the Army and Navy of the United States. We did not steal Cuba; we gave it liberty.

We bought the Philippine Islands, and we have at the expense of scores of millions of dollars set up there a government which every day is being yielded more and more into the hands of the native population, and which, ere this administration shall have expired, I trust, will be turned completely over to the native people of the islands.

I deny, sir, that we are land thieves. I say that Mexican citizens can well turn their eyes toward this Republic and say: Yonder is the only nation that in all the tides of time that has conquered provinces and overrun countries and established governments for the conquered people and turned over to the conquered both the land and the government.

I deny that we are land thieves; I deny that we enter into this contest with so base a purpose.

Mr. President, it was even said we were worse than any other nation. Thus we tell the Mexican that we are more greedy than Cortez, more grasping that Pizarro. We proclaim ourselves more cruel than these monsters who extorted wealth by the torture of fire. Ah, Mr. President, those were unfortunate words. It were better they had not been uttered.

The President of the United States is charged with a great responsibility. He has asked merely that his acts in enforcing proper reparation shall be justified. He seeks to confine this trouble within a narrow compass. He hopes that the bonds of peace between the United States and the Mexican nation may yet be maintained unbroken. That request, so modestly preferred, meets with an insistent demand that we shall take such action as we all understand means a general declaration of war against Mexico instead of a mere act of reprisal against Gen. Huerta.

Mr. President, I have this to say in conclusion. We heard it said to-day that it does not matter how many guns are fired or whether any guns whatsoever are fired. We have been told that the man beneath the uniform is more important than the uniform; we have heard it declared that we are standing on punctilios. Sir, the uniform of our Nation, the flag of our country, the honor of the Republic, are not punctilios. The nation which ceases to defend the uniform of its soldiers and enforce respect for its flag will soon cease to be a nation.

The flag and the uniform are not trifling bits of cotton or woolen or silken fabrics; they represent the majesty of a great people. The flag of this country typifies the only real freedom there is beneath the skies; it is not run up merely because its colors are pleasing to the eye. It is emblematic of all the battles that have ever been fought in the cause of human right. About it hover the souls of all the dead who have died in the battles for liberty.

For centuries the votaries of freedom were beaten down. Again and yet again they renewed the contest, until at last their triumph came upon the battle fields of the American Revolution. Every soldier of the American Revolution who marched to his death did it with eyes fixed upon the flag of the United States. It was baptized later in the blood of 1812; it was dipped in the crimson tides of the great war of 1861; it was rechristened down on the plains and in the woods and the morasses of Cuba; it has floated in glory over the heights of Chapultepec. An insult to the American flag is an insult to all the patriots dead. It is an insult to every patriot living.

So far as I am concerned I insist that an American sailor in an American boat, with the flag of this country floating at bow and stern, shall be protected though it requires all of the armaments of our Navy and all the soldiers of our Army, for as we protect him we protect ourselves, our property, our liberty, and our country, and we preserve the blessings of liberty to the children that are yet to come.

Mr. President, we have talked long. Can we not vote? Down in Mexico they are dying, so the wires tell us. Let us at least certify to the American people and to the world before this night shall be over that the Congress of the United States is with the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States; that it is not splitting hairs; that it is not cavilling about the form of sentences or the construction of preambles, but that as one man, with one heart, one soul, and one purpose, the American people stand with President Wilson in his demand that the flag of the Republic shall be respected in Mexico as it is by the other nations of the earth.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, in one respect at least I sympathize with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I do not recall that I have ever spoken on a question after which I was not ready to vote; and his appeal just now that we might vote after he had thoroughly discussed the question is characteristic of all of us. I am only taking the time of the Senate to say a few words, because it has been, and it is now, my intention, unless the resolution which is pending and which is likely to be adopted to-night is materially modified, to vote against it.

I am embarrassed, however, by a change in conditions which existed at the time we met this morning and those which exist to-night. A citizen and a Senator is justified in criticizing the administration even in an important international affair before war is undertaken, but it is the duty of every citizen, and every Senator especially, to support the administration to the utmost limits when war has been undertaken. This morning war had not been undertaken; we had been asked to consider an important justification of the President's purposes, involved in which, in my judgment, was a justification of the President's acts in Mexico during the last 13 months; and while we are engaged in discussing that subject we are informed that 4 of our men in Mexico have been killed; that 21 have been wounded; and we know not what other movements are on foot.

I need not say to Senators that that means war. The President may say to us that we can not make war against the Mexican people; that we are making war against a man and the supporters of that man; but we need not delude ourselves with any such specious plea as that, for our men have been killed and wounded in action. We have commenced an undertaking which will cost this Government hundreds of millions of dollars and thousands of lives and years of time. Let us not delude ourselves with minimizing or lessening the importance and the solemnity of this occasion and of this undertaking in which we are embarked.

If we were not engaged in war, I had intended to call the attention of the Senate to some of the reasons why it seemed to me we should not indulge in haste in so important a matter, and to compare the present action with what has been done on similar occasions in the past. For example, I wanted to call attention to what is known as the Virginius case. Forty years ago an American ship, flying the American flag, was captured by a Spanish man-of-war; her people were taken ashore, were tried by a drumhead court-martial, and more than 50 subjects of Great Britain and America were summarily shot. That was an occasion that tried the temper and the forbearance of this country and of the people of this country, and yet did we demand the kind of reparation which some Senators would ask us to demand on this occasion? We did ask for reparation. The Spanish authorities informed our Government that they believed the ship was not an American ship; that the use of the American flag was not justified; and we gave 30 days to investigate that condition. The result proved the correctness of the position of the Spanish Government, and we never at any time demanded that our flag should be saluted as a result of this incident. Many years ago——

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. Did not the United States withdraw its demand because in that instance it was found that the registration was fraudulent and that the owner of the ship was a Cuban?

Mr. WEEKS. That is exactly what I have stated, Mr. President, but I also said that we did not ask for a salute to our flag even under those conditions.

Twenty years ago, in Chile, many of the sailors of the U. S. S. Baltimore were ashore in the port of Valparaiso, where they were attacked by the soldiers and the police of that city, and several men were killed. There was great public excitement as a result of this incident, and yet we find, 90 days after the incident itself, the President of the United States giving to Congress the facts which applied to the case, and during the intervening time the local courts of Chile had been occupied in investigating the case. There were at that time unsettled conditions in Chile not dissimilar to those which now exist in Mexico. During this interval our Government abstained from making unreasonable demands, and in the end Chile apologized for the attacks which had been made. Incidentally I want to read what President Harrison said in submitting the matter to Congress, and also to call attention to the fact that he submitted to Congress all the correspondence which had passed between the two Governments, so that Congress at that time had all the information which existed, while we are asked to act on this occasion without being furnished with any of the correspondence or with any other matter which would enable us to come to a correct conclusion. This case does not differ materially from the one which we are considering, for while the flag is involved in the Tampico incident, it does not differ from the Chilean affair in its essence, as President Harrison pointed out. He said:

> It is not claimed that every personal collision or injury in which a sailor or officer of such naval vessel visiting the shore may be involved raises an international question; but I am clearly of the opinion that where such sailors or officers are assaulted by a resident populace animated by hostility to the Government whose uniform these sailors and officers wear and in resentment of acts done by their Government, not by them, their nation must take notice of the event as one involving an infraction of its rights and dignity; not in a secondary way, as where a citizen is injured and presents his claim through his own government, but in a primary way, precisely as if its minister or consul or the flag itself had been the object of the same character of assault.

And yet under these circumstances we waited 90 days before we pressed our demand for reparation. Even then we did not demand that our flag should be saluted, but an apology was made as a result of the investigations made by the Chilean Government.

During that insurrection which took place in Chile at about that time the fleet of that country rebelled and five ships put to sea under the leader of the rebellion. They were met on the high seas by our Pacific Fleet. The rebel fleet, flying the Chilean flag, saluted our flag as the fleets were passing, outside the 3-mile limit, and the salute was returned gun for gun, as is always done when a salute is fired under such conditions. I point that out because the point has been so frequently made in this discussion that the provisional president of Mexico has demanded that we return a salute in kind. That is nothing but a matter of custom; it can not be returned in any other way, and never has been done in any other way when a salute has been demanded and the demand has been acceded to. Therefore, we ought not to make a point, in my judgment, against Gen. Huerta because he has, presumably, requested that the salute be returned gun for gun.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Senator intend to create the impression that such a point has been made by any officer of this Government?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it is pretty difficult to find out just what has been done. We are dependent here to-night on newspaper reports for what has been taking place in Mexico and as to what has been the correspondence between our Government and that of Mexico during the past week. We are asked to justify the acts of the President, and yet we do not know exactly what the President has had in mind to do, and we do not know what has been done or whether or not his proposed action should be justified.

Mr. HUGHES. I am in the same position——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. I am in the same position as is the Senator from Massachusetts; I am dependent upon the same sources of information; but my clear understanding of the matter is that it was understood by all parties on this side of the Chamber that it would be proper for the American fleet or the American authorities to answer any salute fired by the Mexican authorities. The only question raised with reference to that matter came from the minority members of the committee, and it was argued with some force by them for some time that that would be a recognition by the United States Government of the Mexican Government. Afterwards, as I understand, according to the public prints, the same sources of information which the Senator has, that position was abandoned.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not know. I wish I did know. I wish I had more information on which to form my own decision as to what should be done in this matter. It is possible the Senator from New Jersey is right, but, in any event, if a national salute is fired on a demand from us by the Mexican authorities or any other authority it should be returned gun for gun, because that is the customary proceeding, and if Gen. Huerta has asked that this course be followed he has been within his rights.

But why discuss these questions? We have passed the stage of resolutions. We are at this moment in a state of war, and under such conditions, after I have voted against this resolution—which I am going to do, because I can not justify the course that has been followed by the administration in Mexican affairs for the past 13 months—in fact, I am unalterably opposed to what has been done. I am a supporter of the administration in the prosecution of the war; we have reached the point where action must be taken, and I hope that every Senator as well as every citizen of this country, under these conditions, is going to do his very best to support the Government. I certainly am, and after my vote has been cast on the resolution I expect to do what I can do as a citizen and a Senator to uphold the hands of the Government, much as I regret the situation in which we now find ourselves.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the resolution now under consideration by the Senate ought to have been passed yesterday. I had hoped that the House of Representatives would pass it unanimously and that it would come to this body, and that here, with the same unanimity, we might say to Mexico and to the world that the Congress of the United States stood behind President Wilson. It seems, however, that some of our friends upon the other side are right hard to satisfy. Some of them tell us that we ought to accept what Huerta has already offered. Others of them tell us that we should have agreed to fire gun for gun, the conditional salute demanded. Others of them upon that side say that we should have recognized Huerta as President of Mexico.

In another body the distinguished leader of the Republican Party went so far as to criticize the President of the United States, saying that his action in coming before Congress asking for the passage of this resolution was for personal revenge and for personal spite. All this is finding its way to Mexico. And every move and criticism of the President made here beyond the Rio Grande was quickly taken as evidence of a divided country.

A Senator rose upon the floor to-day and asked whether or not Vera Cruz had been taken, and inquired whether or not we should consider further this resolution—if it was not a farce to do so. In God's name, what were you to expect of the President of the United States and the forces at his command? Did you think they were to remain idle while the 250 death-dealing rapid-fire machine guns and 2,000,000 rounds of ammunition were delivered at the port of Vera Cruz by the German steamer, and quickly loaded on trains waiting with steam up, and hurried to Mexico City, to be put into the hands of Huerta's soldiers for the purpose of shooting down our boys who wear the blue? Did you think the President would wait for the Senate to talk, talk, talk, and permit these death-dealing machines and ammunition to be placed in the hands of those Mexicans to fight our soldiers? The President has acted. Vera Cruz has been taken. The guns and ammunition intended for Huerta's soldiers are in our possession. And every American heart will beat with pride, and every American lip will approve the action of the President.

Mr. President, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] stated in his address to the Senate that the United States ought to have recognized Huerta. He offered a copy of a letter from the State Department, signed by Ambassador Wilson, directed to the Secretary of State, suggesting certain reasons and giving certain conditions for such recognition. When I asked the distinguished Senator if he could also supply us with the telegram that Victoriano Huerta had sent to President Taft, he said that I could "do that in my own time"; and it is now my pleasure to do so, and read the copy of the telegram which Huerta sent to President Taft, which is as follows:

CITY OF MEXICO, February 18, 1913.

President TAFT:

I have the honor to inform you that I have overthrown this Government. The forces are with me, and from now on peace and prosperity will reign.

Your obedient servant,

VICTORIANO HUERTA,
Commander in Chief.

Senators seriously contend upon the floor of this great Chamber that the President of the United States should recognize this man who says that he has overthrown "this Government." Yes, Mr. President; he had overthrown the Government by the assassination of its President, the President who was elected by the people. Huerta was the commander in chief of the army; he was sworn to support President Madero. After he had him assassinated and he had assumed the dictatorship of Mexico, he said the "forces are with me."

What forces, Mr. President, did he mean? Forces of right, forces of justice, the forces of the consent of the governed, or the brutal forces of assassination and fear—the forces that he himself commanded? Heretofore in this country, happily, I may say, we have consigned to the gallows those who have assassinated Presidents. Shall the United States—enlightened, civilized, Christianized United States of America, whose juries and courts have sent to death three assassins of Presidents—set before all of the civilized world the awful example of saying that the highway to rulership in Mexico and to recognition by us is by the assassination of the President? Suppose Booth, after he assassinated Lincoln, had cabled to England, "I have overthrown the Government and the forces are with me." What would the world have said if it had been suggested that he should be recognized? What would the countries of the earth have said if Guiteau, after he had fired the fatal shot that took the life of the great Garfield, had written with his bloody hands a cablegram to the countries of the earth, "I have overthrown the Government and the forces are with me"? Who would have suggested recognition of him to rule the people? Mr. President, what would the civilized world have said if Czolgosz, after he had fired the fatal shot that killed the beloved McKinley, had sent a cablegram to the powers of the earth, "I have overthrown the Government and the forces are with me"?

Mr. President, Victoriano Huerta has had no more right to rule in Mexico than any of these assassins would have had to rule in the United States of America. He has no more right to rule the people of Mexico than any other assassin would have the right to rule in any other country where his treachery, his treason, and his murder had caused the death of the ruler. There is this difference between Huerta and an ordinary assassin: The ordinary assassin at least has the brutal courage to perform with his own hands his awful act, while Huerta lacked that, but he had it done by those under his control.

The granite rock upon which republics rest and upon which governments are builded is the consent of the governed. Our soldiers went to war to give this right to the oppressed people of Cuba, to free them from the tyrant, and now shall we destroy that glorious history by recognizing a tyrant to rule a people?

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] says that according to national law there is no justification for war or for the President of the United States to demand that the insult to our flag should be apologized for. Let us consider for a moment what would have been said of the President of the United States by our political enemies if he had pursued the course advocated by the distinguished Senator. Senators upon the Republican side have grown vehement in their denunciations and criticisms for "watchful waiting." They sneered at that, and now when the President is acting they complain of that. Admiral Mayo, of the Navy, and not President Wilson, said that this insult called for a salute from the guns under the control of Huerta. I have not the slightest doubt, Mr. President, if President Wilson had said, "Oh, no; that is too much; just let him apologize; that will be all," that Senators upon the other side would have flouted his name. They would have declared he was unworthy to be President of this great Republic of brave men. They would have declared that he was unwilling to protect the flag of the Republic. President Wilson backed up the demand of Admiral Mayo for an honorable amend for the insult cast upon our soldiers, our country, and our flag.

Huerta insolently refused to grant the demand, and the President has asked our approval of the course he proposes to take. Some Senators say that the soldier and flag incident was immaterial. Why, Mr. President, I can not agree with them. The American citizens who have gone to Mexico have gone for the purpose of making money. They have a more fertile field to ply their trades than the one here offered them. They have greater opportunities to get rich, to accumulate and to build up a fortune.

When war broke out the President notified them of the danger. This great Republic offered to pay their expenses to leave Mexico, knowing, of course, that in a great war between forces the danger to a citizen, though a noncombatant, is practically as great as that to the soldier in the field. Many of them, thousands of them, took advantage of that opportunity and came home. Senators grow eloquent in describing newspaper reports and in reciting unconfirmed rumors about deaths of American citizens that have occurred in Mexico. I deeply deplore these casualties, as much as they do; but, Mr. President, has the soldier of this Nation, the boy in blue, nothing to be said for him? He did not go to Mexico looking for a fortune. He did not go there of his own consent. He had dedicated his life to his country's service. He was ordered there by the great commander of this Nation's Navy.

When he landed upon Mexican soil, with the Stars and Stripes above him, to do the service of this country, he was entitled to the protection of the forces that were in control of this Government. These soldiers were arrested; they were insulted; they were thrown into jail. This was an assault not upon one of the citizens who was trying to make a fortune in Mexico, who had been advised to leave there on account of the dangers of the war, but this was an assault and an insult to the whole people of the United States—to the farmer in his furrow, to the workman at his bench, to the millions of men in every field of endeavor everywhere throughout the Nation. Senators say, "You talk of the soldiers, you talk of the uniform, you talk of the flag"; but, Senators, remember this: If you do not protect the flag and the uniform, a day will come when you will have nobody willing to wear the uniform and no one willing to fight for the flag.

The difference, Mr. President, between the citizen who entered Mexico for the purpose of making money and the soldier who was insulted, arrested, and thrown into jail is that one was a soldier of fortune and the other was a soldier of his country.

Mr. President, in my judgment if the Senate had acted last night—and I cast no reflection on those who wished to debate the resolution—it is possible that no blood would have been shed at Vera Cruz. Whatever has occurred there, however, or might have occurred, it is now the duty of every Senator, it is the duty of every American at this time to uphold the acts of the President of the United States of America. It is no time to quibble now, Mr. President, about whether or not the preamble to the resolution is exactly right; no time now to dilly-dally about whether or not all of the reasons that could be suggested are given.

My understanding is that the Republicans agree that the President had a right to go to Mexico, but their objection to the resolution is that certain other things ought to be set out as the reason for his going. That time has passed. There is no time now for hairsplitting. Our soldiers are upon Mexican soil. Their blood has been spilt. The flag of our country flies from the parapet of the Vera Cruz fort. It is the duty of every Senator here to uphold the glory of that flag. It is no time to play politics.

Politics ends at the Rio Grande and patriotism takes its place. Mr. President, Senators who criticized the President of the United States a few hours ago must remember that this night, upon Mexican soil, President Wilson walks side by side with Uncle Sam, clad in the blue uniform of the greatest, freest Republic in the world, holding aloof in his hands the flag of this Nation—the flag of no party, of no creed, but the flag of a common country. With every star ablaze and every stripe aglow, it speaks the language of all our people, our love for its glorious past, our hope for its more glorious future. It is your flag, my flag, our flag, the country's flag.

Mr. President, I sincerely trust that before many hours shall have passed this Senate will pass this resolution, asked for by the President and say to Mexico and to the world that we are a united people, standing in solid phalanges against a common foe.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, since I have been in this body, a Member of the Senate, I have never made a partisan speech. I believe I have never referred to politics in the Senate of the United States. I certainly shall not make a political nor a partisan speech upon this occasion.

On the 22d day of July, two years ago, I made a speech in the Senate of the United States upon the same subject which has been discussed here all day—the Mexican question—which at that time, to those who knew it, was of as much importance as it is to-night. I pointed out to the Senate of the United States at that time that affairs in Mexico, if allowed to drift as they were drifting, would result in dragging this country into a war; and at that time I referred to the acts of the Republican administration, then in power, as weak, imbecilic, and pusillanimous. I realize the fact that the present administration came into power with the Mexican situation complicated beyond the point which it had reached when I first spoke of it in this body. I have recognized the difficulties under which this administration has labored in dealing with the Mexican question, but I was not deterred then from expressing my convictions plainly and openly because of hope of patronage dividends, and I shall not be deterred now because of criticism from some man who has allowed American citizens to be murdered in Mexico without lifting his voice and only now feels his latent patriotism aroused when the American flag is, as he says, insulted at Tampico.

Who speaks of war in connection with the resolution which has been offered? Who refers to the possibility of war? The President of the United States, when, in his message, he says that in the event war should follow this peaceful action which he has now taken, and justification for which he now asks, the people of Mexico then would understand or should understand that it was only war against Victoriano Huerta and those who might support him.

The President has suggested war, and, with 4 American marines lying dead and 21 wounded and the Associated Press reporting that the Prairie is shelling the heights beyond Vera Cruz and 200 Mexicans have died, you know it is war now. What is it to those 200 men in the uniform of their country, soldiers obeying the orders of him whom they recognize as the constituted authority in Mexico? What is it to them, what is it to their families that the Senators report here what they declare to be a peace measure? Peace to the families of the American marines, peace to those writhing in their wounds, peace to the dead Mexicans, peace to those yet to die!

My God, Mr. President, if war is horrible, what is the appearance of this kind of peace? Mr. President, if a man dies for his country, as these Mexicans have died, or dies for his country as these marines have died, what is the difference to him that some orator in this assembly chooses to cry peace and that some committee in this assembly reports a resolution justifying his death in the name of peace?

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] said that we sought by the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to combine the opposition in Mexico, while every effort on the part of the committee was to prevent this very combination. There is not a Senator upon the other side who does not know that read into your resolution is this same amendment which is offered, as has been said by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. There is not one of you who could justify your acts upon any other ground than that the people of the United States, the people of the world, and that posterity, judging your acts, will despite your vote read the debates upon this resolution and read into the resolution what you mean—that your only justification is the outrages upon American citizens, the destruction of American property, and the outrages yet being committed in the name of peace by those whom this resolution seeks to invite as allies of the "Prince of Peace" himself.

Mr. President, what message are you sending to my people on the border of this country? What message are you sending to the people of Texas, of Arizona, of New Mexico, of California? What message are you sending to the families of those women outraged by the people whom you invite to become allies of the United States in its attack upon Victoriano Huerta? What message are you sending to the fathers or brothers or mothers or sisters of those Americans who have died in Mexico, where they were invited to go by the silver tongue of your Secretary of State when he preached to the people of the United States of the beauties of Mexico and its advantages to investors, to American citizens, when he was so much impressed with its prosperity under free silver. [Manifestations in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The Chair will insist upon the rule that there must be order maintained, and no demonstration disclosed in the galleries. Otherwise they will be vacated.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, what message are you sending to the 30,000 American citizens who have been driven out of Mexico without a protest from this Government? On yesterday I received a communication from an old American, a veteran of the Civil War, now living upon charity in Passaic, N. J., who has been writing in vain to the Secretary of State that some little something might be done for him, because he had come out of Mexico at the call of the President and left his all there. From Mexico itself and from every State in the Union practically, sir, I have had pleas for help. In the past the Congress of the United States has listened to those pleas. You have allowed American citizens to be driven from Mexico, and you have voted money to pay their way to their friends when they were driven across the border at the muzzles of the guns in the hands of those whom you are now inviting to become your allies in your attack upon Victoriano Huerta.

I have here, sir, a list of 284 men, 301 women, and 1,286 children, American citizens, a list giving their names, who have been driven from their homes in Mexico, and an affidavit from P. H. Carlin, a former citizen of the State of Michigan, as to the circumstances under which they were driven out of Mexico. He tells you under his oath that these people were driven out after the revolutionists, some of whom are those you now welcome to your arms, had placed rapid-fire guns at the ends of the streets of the little towns in which they lived and had demanded that 10 citizens from each town be surrendered to them and that they should be killed. He proceeds in detail to tell you that after night, overland for 167 miles, they made their way to the American border, where stood the American troops and where waved the American flag, and that following every step that they took, hounding them night and day, were these constitution lovers, whom you now invite as your allies in war upon Victoriano Huerta.

This is the message which you will send to the people of the border. This is the message which you will send to those who remain behind mourning the American citizens whom the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] dares to name as mere soldiers of fortune who have gone to an unmarked grave in the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. President, this is one gigantic mistake. It is time that attention was called to the sources of information which have impressed the Secretary of State of this great Nation apparently with the fact, as he understands it, that Pancho Villa is something more than an ordinary thief and murderer.

Why, sir, at the time the President of the United States sent his personal representative to Vera Cruz, to be close there to the scene of action in the City of Mexico, the Secretary of State, as reported by the papers, sent his personal representative to the southern border of the United States, there to enter into a conference with and to report upon conditions among the so-called constitutionalists.

Now, who was this representative? I think the records in the case, in the hearings reported by the committee, which have been referred to once before to-day, will show that Mr. Del Valle was at one time the paid attorney for the Maderos, who are backing the so-called constitutionalist revolution; and I think, further, and I take it upon myself to say, Mr. President, that the truth is that if the records do not show it the fact can be proven that the special representative of the State Department to-day is a business partner of the Madero family, Mr. George R. Carrothers, the acting consular agent at Torreon and special envoy extraordinary to the court of Pancho Villa. This simply means prejudiced information or misinformation. It means an inaccurate judgment necessarily based upon facts which are not correctly stated. It means that no correct judgment could have been formed, and, as we of the border who are familiar with Mexico know, no correct judgment has been formed by the President of the United States as to the true conditions existing in Mexico.

I want to say, sir, now, in passing, that I have approved of the action of the President of the United States in refusing to recognize as the President of Mexico Victoriano Huerta. It is not love for Huerta which causes me to say to you upon my word as a Senator, one who for 32 years has been familiar, as I believe possibly no other Senator here has, with actual conditions existing in Mexico and with the Mexican people and the Mexican character—upon my word, I say to you that the President of the United States is at this moment uninformed or misinformed as to the conditions in northern Mexico. Otherwise, sir, he, as a Christian gentleman, as an intelligent man, as President of the United States, could not and would not have held out to Pancho Villa or Carranza not only the hope, but the promise, that if they did not directly support Mr. Huerta—for that is what he says in his message—no war would be made upon them, absolution would be granted for all the deaths which have occurred, and pardon would be extended for all the insults and outrages which we have endured at the hands of these bandits, and, substantially, that an alliance would be made with them, provided they would not support Huerta. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] says that this is the issue which is drawn between the substitute proposed and the resolution offered by the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FALL. I will state my proposition, Mr. President. This is the issue which the Senator says is drawn, that upon the one hand the committee says that we will divide the Mexican forces, and upon the other that the Senator from Massachusetts says by his resolution that all murderers look alike to him, whether they are pets of the Department of State or not.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. FALL. For a question.

Mr. REED. The Senator has just stated that the President of the United States has said to Villa that he shall have immunity for all the murders he has committed. In what document——

Mr. FALL. I decline to answer any such question. I do not mean to be disrespectful to the Senator.

Mr. REED. The only refuge that the Senator can have is in declining to answer that question.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs to recall the attention of Senators to the rule touching matters personal in debate not intentionally violated. The Senator from Missouri resumes the subject. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FALL. No; the Senator from Missouri can not raise any personal question with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico will proceed.

Mr. REED. What was the last remark of the Senator?

Mr. FALL. I said the Senator could not raise any personal question with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will reply to the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from New Mexico declined to yield further, and the Chair is compelled to respect the Senator's wish on that statement.

Mr. REED. I could not understand the remark. I could not hear it.

Mr. FALL. Kindly allow me to reply for myself. I said the Senator from Missouri could not raise any personal question with me.

Mr. REED. I have not sought to do so.

Mr. FALL. The Presiding Officer said a Senator could not engage in personalities. Is that explanation satisfactory? [Manifestations in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries must maintain order. It is not a matter for the amusement of the galleries, but for the intelligence of the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have said that you are sending a message to the people of the border, and I will ask to have read from the desk some telegrams from the people of the border. I will just read one, as I desire that one name mentioned in it shall not be published:

Senator ALBERT B. FALL, Washington, D. C.:

Is it possible our Government is proposing partnership with the thieving combination of pelados—

Which term might be translated as the lowest class of inhabitants—who are trying to confiscate all property for personal use? Villa, his brother Alberta, Madero—

And one name which I refrain from repeating—bringing out cotton and droves of cattle for their own private speculation. This outrage is unprecedented and will lead to serious trouble, even if our Government does approve.

I will ask that the Secretary may read the other telegrams, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

EL PASO, TEX., April 20, 1914.

ALBERT FALL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Press reports Mexican ports in control of Huerta faction will be placed under blockade, and intimate that those in control of Carranza and Villa will be permitted to remain open. We hope these reports untrue. Enormous quantities of war munitions being entered through this port for Villa's forces, which we believe will be eventually used against the United States. Sincerely believe it is to the interest of our Government that all ports be closed. We personally know that situation in northern Mexico is bad, unstable, unreliable; and the rank and file of Carranza-Villa forces are against Americans, regardless of representations of leaders, and we are unalterably opposed to Villa as our ally.

TOM LEA.
CHAS. F. HUNT.
HARRIS WALTHALL.
R. M. DUDLEY.
GEO. CURRY.
J. R. FULKULSON.

EL PASO, TEX., April 20, 1914.

Senator A. B. FALL,
Washington, D. C.:

In honor and dignity don't let our country put in with these northern revolutionists who have robbed and murdered us at their pleasure. Take the whole country or none.

GEO. LOOK.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the President of the United States has said that this is not war; that—

It is only an issue between this Government and a person calling himself the provisional president of Mexico, whose right to call himself such we have never recognized in any way.

Mr. President, is it possible that the President of the United States could believe for a moment that in undertaking to deal, or in asking Congress to justify him in dealing, with Victoriano Huerta, as he does ask and as he has asked—that Victoriano Huerta, recognized as the President of Mexico by all the great countries of the world with the exception of this; that Victoriano Huerta, recognized in San Luis Potosi; in Tampico; in Guaymas; in Nuevo Laredo in the north; in Guadalajara, the richest city for its size probably on this continent, and the Athens of Mexico; with Guanajuato, the greatest silver camp in the known world; the City of Mexico; and the capitals of all the States of the 27 in the Mexican Republic in his hands except the capital of the State of Chihuahua and the capital of the State of Sonora alone—is it possible that the President of the United States has hypnotized himself into the belief, or has been hypnotized by his Secretary of State into the belief, that his attack upon Vera Cruz is an attack upon "a person calling himself the provisional president of Mexico"?

Mr. President, not in my words, but in the words of one of the leaders of the Democratic Party, sometime known to the President of the United States, Col. George Harvey, I may say that "never before, to our knowledge, while their countries were at peace and resolved—as the President says these countries are—to remain in amicable relationship, has one President declared war upon another President."

The Congress of the United States was called into joint assembly several months ago to hear the President of the United States read to them the instructions which he had given to his personal representative, John Lind, with reference to Mr. Huerta's title to the office which he claimed and as to the wishes and demands of the President of the United States with relation to the occupancy of the office; but, in so far as I know, never to Congress, nor even to the Committee on Foreign Relations, has been communicated that message which John Lind himself delivered to Victoriano Huerta.

Again referring to the authority to which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] was referred by the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the public press, and again quoting that eminent Democrat, Col. George Harvey, as my authority, I find that he says that the communication served upon Victoriano Huerta was as follows:

That unless Huerta, voluntarily and on his own initiative, retires at once from power and abandons every idea of controlling the organization of the Government and the conduct of negotiations, the First Magistrate—

In polite Mexicanized Spanish "the First Magistrate" is the President of the United States—will find himself under the necessity of intervening by means of an ultimatum; and if this is not accepted, he will be obliged to propose to the Congress of his country the adoption of practical measures of a most serious nature.

But apparently the President has only found it necessary to appeal to the Congress of this country for justification of his act in committing an act of war, in sacrificing the lives of American soldiers, and in taking the lives of the poor, deluded Mexicans who went to death believing that Victoriano Huerta was the President of their country, irrespective of the opinion of the Chief Magistrate of this country.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the fifth article of this most remarkable document reads:

That such a course is absolutely necessary to the end that he [the chief executive]—

Polite Mexicanized Castilian for Victoriano Huerta—merit the approval of the First Magistrate—

The President of the United States—for the reason that the Government of the Chief Magistrate has firmly and irrevocably decided—

What Government of the Chief Magistrate? The Government of the United States—by one method or another, to eliminate completely all assistance that Huerta believes he may receive from foreign sources if he persists in his proposal to remain in power, it being a further fact that only for a few days longer will he, Huerta, be free to select the course he chooses to follow.

Mr. President, in all my reading of the history of this or of any other country, and in my limited study of diplomatic correspondence, I have never yet known such a document as this to be issued by any Government or the representative of any Government.

What do those telegrams mean which have just been read from the desk? This flag, our glorious flag, to prevent a stain upon which some of our friends are so zealous—this flag, which to them means all, is to-day floating over the customhouse in the city of El Paso, Tex., in sight of fugitive Americans, driven from their homes in Mexico. They have appealed to those who have it in their hands, as the Senator has said, upholding it, and they have appealed in vain. It is floating there in the view of 720 Spaniards, driven from Torreon and forced to seek hospitality under its folds or to die the death pronounced upon them by Francisco Villa. There these Spaniards and these American citizens, of the same class as the Englishman Benton, who was driven from his home by Villa, are compelled to stand day by day and see their property stolen from them by Francisco Villa and brought across the line into the United States and in view of the flag of this Government taken from them and their heirs forever.

These Spaniards were robbed first by Francisco Villa a few months ago upon his entrance into Torreon of ₱3,000,000, a million and a half dollars in gold—all the ready money which could be raised in the city, and $500,000 more than all their ready money. The Secretary of State of this great Nation demanded, through George R. Carrothers, that the Spaniards seized by Pancho Villa at Torreon should be released; and he laughed in the face of the representative of this great Government, and sent his brother to the First National Bank of El Paso, Tex., with the drafts forced from these Spaniards under the fear of death, and had him remain in El Paso until those drafts were sent to New York for collection and the money was collected. In the meantime he held the Spaniards, in defiance of the order of this Government, as hostages for the payment of this $500,000.

Now he enters Torreon again, and he drives from his home every Spanish citizen in Torreon, and drives them from the cotton plantations of the Bolson de Mapimi district, the greatest cotton district south of the State of Texas, where millions of dollars' worth of cotton per annum are produced. When he takes the city of Torreon he finds upon the railroad platforms of Gomez Palacio, Torreon, and the surrounding towns, thousands of bales of cotton belonging to these poor Spaniards whom he has despoiled, and, having driven them from the country, he is now sending into the United States with impunity the cotton which he stole from them and is selling it under the folds of the American flag, to which they have appealed in vain.

Mr. President, George Look is an American, a large property owner in the city of El Paso and also a ranch owner and cattle owner in the State of Chihuahua, but he is compelled to see his cattle stolen by Pancho Villa, or like bandits, and driven across the line or butchered in Villa's butcher shop in the city of Chihuahua and the meat sold in the markets of El Paso, and he can not protect himself nor will this flag protect him.

Several months since I presented to the Secretary of the Treasury of this great United States a request that the rules providing for the shipment of goods in bond from Mexico might be amplified in a certain way; that is to say, Mr. President, I transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury undisputed information that over ₱800,000—$400,000—worth of hides bought up by Americans and others in Mexico, who handled the hide business of northern Mexico, and baled for shipment, had been stolen by Pancho Villa and his bandits, and were then being shipped into the United States; and being fearful that under the laws of the State of Texas this property might be replevined by its owners, they billed it through in bond to Canada and then "dumped" it into New York.

I presented the request from the collector of customs, as well as the owners, that in making these shipments they should be compelled to put upon their manifest the brand on the hide, so that when it arrived in El Paso, Tex., the property could be proven. The great United States Government refused even to compel them to make the manifest show the only evidence by which the owners could prove property; and those hides were shipped through, with their owners telegraphing here for protection under the flag.

Mr. President, in the eyes of the Nation, or at least of these outraged citizens of other nations, under the peculiar circumstances existing as they do, with Pancho Villa and Carranza marauding with impunity because they can not be reached by Spain or by England or Germany—they control no ports, they touch no seacoast, and the only power that can reach them is the United States of America, unless we choose to permit the passage of armed forces of other nations through our borders—under these peculiar circumstances this nation, under its flag, stands to-day as a "fence" for the burglars, the bandits, the looters, the murderers of northern Mexico. We stand indicted in their eyes as receivers of stolen goods, and we propose to seize the ports of southern Mexico, to make war on Victoriano Huerta, and to accept these people before the eyes of the world as our allies in such war!

No, Mr. President. I know and you know and the President knows, as I said, that read into this resolution which you may pass, because it is written on the White House typewriter, is the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] whether you adopt it by your votes or not.

Do you suppose that had it not been for the protection extended by geography and this country Great Britain, whose proud boast during the ages has been that where an Englishman stood there was British soil, would have rested satisfied for one moment with what is now acknowledged by Pancho Villa himself to be his deliberately lying account of the death of Benton? Do you suppose that Spain, shorn of all her power as she was by the result of a war with this country—that power at least which would enable her to meet upon equal terms any first-class nation—would for one moment stand idly by and see her citizens despoiled of their property in violation of solemn treaties, driven from Mexico, and murdered if they remained in Mexico? Never, except because of the circumstances to which I have called your attention.

We have stood between these murderers and bandits and the righteous wrath of the other nations of the world, and this flag to which you appeal has not been carried to the assistance of one of your own 40,000 citizens, 50,000 of whom have been compelled to leave Mexico, 4,000 of them at the muzzles of guns.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico, who has such intimate knowledge of these transactions, why it is that the Spanish Government remains quiet when the citizens of that great country are driven out of Mexico and despoiled of their property; and why it is that Great Britain, which on a memorable occasion sent an army into Abyssinia to rescue a British subject, remains quiescent over the death of Benton?

Mr. FALL. Because, Mr. President, the United States—at least, so we are informed, again appealing to the only vehicle through which we receive information, the public press—has requested Great Britain and Spain and the other countries of the world to acquiesce in the "watchful waiting" policy which apparently has proven such a miserable failure. It is because of this, and because of the physical, the geographical, difficulty that these people can not be reached by the forces which Great Britain sent into Abyssinia or by the Spaniards, except by crossing American territory. It is because, again, under what is known in the other countries of the world as the Monroe doctrine, if not so recognized here, this country has more than once refused to admit that any other country could invade a State upon this continent with the intention of remaining for any length of time upon its territory.

When in the throes of Civil War, as we were, and unable to enforce our demands, unable to carry out our policies, one country of the world did invade Mexico for the purpose of demanding and obtaining reparation, for the reason, as she answered us, that her citizens had been murdered and reparation had not been given. When the United States was in a position where it was able to make known its views and to enforce its demands the United States compelled that nation to retire.

There are ample reasons, Mr. President; but, sir, if Victoriano Huerta had committed these crimes and these offenses which have bloodied the hands of the bandits of the north, despite your Monroe doctrine and because of your "watchful waiting" policy, Great Britain and Spain would have been in Mexico, hammering at the gates which you are now opening with cannon, and demanding reparation and satisfaction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico further yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite understand that the Monroe doctrine, if carried out, would prevent colonization on American soil on the part of foreign Governments, but I did not suppose a demand from a foreign Government for reparation for outrages upon its citizens would involve that question. For that reason it is a matter of great wonderment to me that these foreign Governments have not in some way sought reparation. If I remember correctly, a citizen of the Empire of Germany was killed, or some outrages were committed upon him, months ago, and that Government did get reparation from Mexico. Am I correct?

Mr. FALL. The Senator is correct. Multiply it by 3, and make it $100,000, and the Senator would state the correct figures. That is true. As it happened, these citizens of Germany were killed at Pachuco, in the southern portion of Mexico, and they were not protected by the American Government nor the American flag.

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that the American flag should be sustained by every American hand, and that when that flag is endangered, or when the voice of its bearer calls to its defense the citizens of this country from the remotest corners of the earth, they owe a sacred duty not only to defend it from attack but to follow it wherever it may go in aggression. I am one of those who believe that when this country calls its citizens to its flag their answer should be, "My country—right or wrong, my country." But, sir, I am also one of those old-fashioned citizens who believe that when you teach the children of to-day that the flag is nothing but a "fetish" to be worshiped as it floats over the White House; that it does not mean to them protection upon every sea or protection upon every soil; when you teach that doctrine, when you denounce an American citizen as a "soldier of fortune," not worthy of defense, because he may have crossed the border of this country, when you announce the doctrine that when he steps across the border no longer does that flag represent to him the mighty power of this Government standing behind him, with its 90,000,000 population and its untold wealth—whenever you inculcate that doctrine, then, sir, you can no longer call upon the patriotism of the citizens born under this flag to come to its defense nor to follow it into the field.

When the individual surrenders to and becomes a part of organized society or a unit of organized society, when he surrenders his individual right of self-defense and of aggression to the community at large, when he promises to that society or to that Government, right or wrong, his support, then when he is right, obeying the laws of the locality in which he may be residing, he is entitled to the protection of all we are accustomed to understand that the flag stands for.

Mr. President, when you announce a contrary doctrine, then, sir, you who announce it tear from that banner its stars and pollute its stripes. Are you afraid to announce that doctrine in the face of the world? Are you afraid to place even more power in the hands of the President than he asks? No one on this side is presuming for one moment to restrict the President in any way, but we are justifying him not only in what he proposed to do and in what he has done but what he may do. Let him go to the end, and we will follow him. We will follow him not only in peace but in war. We know that he has entered upon war. We are not disguising from ourselves the fact.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] appealed for the support of the flag. I answer him, sir, that when volunteers are called for, as they will be called for, while I can not speak for Massachusetts except by her history, for every man who goes from Kentucky behind that flag there will be at least one of the descendants of those who fought at Lexington and Bunker Hill.

There is no sectionalism, Mr. President, in love of the flag. When you reach down into the heart of the American citizen and let him understand the issue, there is no difference of opinion as to the duty of this Government to support its citizens and to protect them and to avenge them. Let it go out to the world that you propose this restricted resolution that you may not meet united opposition in Mexico; ally yourselves with thieves and bandits and murderers, and then you will find where the American people stand. I, for one, want to save the Congress of the United States; I want to save the President of the United States from the results of his error.

Mr. President, what objection can there be to the Congress of the United States, in the face of actual warfare, as the Senator from New York has said, laying at least as a predicate for the acts already committed—or rather as an excuse for those already committed—a proper foundation which you all know to be behind the request of the President? What pride of opinion have you in this particular resolution? Do you take your inspiration only from the White House? Has the Congress of the United States reached that point where the majority of its Members not only will follow as they should where their leader goes, but that they will only follow the precept and the word of the leader; that you do not dare to change one line or add one reason to those reasons given by your committee upon which action is to be based? What is the objection to it? Why could your committee not write a resolution of its own? Why were you compelled to take a resolution handed you by some one else? Have you surrendered, Senators, all your prerogatives?

I am willing to admit that I think the President is in some respects an abler man than any Member of this body; but, Mr. President, I have not yet arrived at the point where I am willing, as one Member, to delegate to him the legislative powers completely. I am willing to follow his lead wherever he may take the flag, and not only with my voice and my vote but in any other way that he may need me; I am willing to follow him through this resolution if you insist upon having it in the hypocritical terms in which it is couched, because you know that embraced in it, underlying every word, and to be read between every line are the reasons announced in the substitute and spoken of so eloquently by the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate a greater length of time than I had intended. I hope that you will follow the suggestions offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I certainly hope that my children may not be compelled to delve through the archives of this debate to ascertain my true reason for following the President of the United States into war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Previously to recognizing anyone the Chair desires to say to the Senator from New Mexico that the Chair clearly misunderstood the observation between himself and the Senator from Missouri, and the observation of the Chair touching the question of personal matters in debate was unnecessary.

Mr. FALL. I thank the Chair. It was entirely unnecessary for the Chair even to refer to the matter at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Indiana for the purpose of submitting a request, and then the Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. KERN. I desire to ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on the substitute at 1 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that immediately following it there shall be a vote on the principal resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there may be other amendments to be offered.

Mr. KERN. Well, on any other amendments offered.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. My purpose in making the request is that we may conclude this debate and have a vote within a reasonable time, it being the purpose, in so far as we may control matters, that the Senate shall remain in session until a vote is had upon amendments and upon the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Indiana permit the Chair to suggest that he would like the Senator from Indiana to observe Rule XXIII and advise the Chair whether he thinks the suggestion made by himself could be under that rule enforced; that is, respecting the preamble of the resolution?

Mr. KERN. Yes; a separate vote would be taken on the preamble. A vote on the preamble is included in the request for a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is compelled to suggest to the Senator from Indiana that the rule indicates to the Chair that the preamble must come up for a separate vote. The Chair may take the liberty to read the rule:

When a bill or resolution is accompanied by a preamble, the question shall first be put on the bill or resolution and then on the preamble, which may be withdrawn by a mover before an amendment of the same, or ordering of the yeas and nays; or it may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill or resolution, and shall be a final disposition of such preamble.

Mr. KERN. The purpose of my observation——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. KERN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I propose to modify my amendment so as to offer it with the resolution as a substitute for the whole report of the committee.

Mr. KERN. I so understood.

Mr. LODGE. That will avoid any difficulty about the preamble. I do that because the resolving words in the committee report differ, as I found after I had offered my amendment, from those which I had had. That will dispose of the matter of the preamble. It will be offered as a simple substitute for the resolution.

Mr. KERN. The idea I intended to convey was that there should be a vote on all pending questions connected with this subject matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Indiana is in order under the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts. Does the Senator from Indiana desire to press the consideration now of his proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. KERN. I desire to ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken at 1 o'clock.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think we can get along very well——

Mr. WILLIAMS. A vote on the resolution and all pending amendments.

Mr. KERN. That is understood.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think we can get along very well without a unanimous-consent agreement for the present at least. I notice that one or two Senators who are not present expect to speak, and I would not want to consent to a unanimous-consent agreement in their absence.

Mr. KERN. The Senator from Kansas objects?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is recognized.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is danger that we will lose sight of the true issue which is before the Senate of the United States to-night. That issue is a simple one. Expressed in the fewest words it is included in the question, Shall the Congress of the United States sustain the President in the exercise of his constitutional power in the action which he is now taking?

The question is not, Mr. President, whether the President of the United States was wise or unwise when he declined to recognize Gen. Huerta as president of the Mexican Republic. The question is not whether Gen. Villa is a murderer and an outlaw. The question is not whether Huerta is a drunkard and a despot. It is not even a question as to how far the United States may ultimately be compelled to go in performing its duties to civilization and to its southern neighbor. The simple question before the country to-night is whether the Senate will join the House of Representatives in sustaining the President who is within his constitutional powers and who is doing his duty as every one believes conscientiously, intelligently, and fearlessly.

Mr. President, that issue is presented in three alternative propositions to the Senate to-night. The first is the resolution which has been presented by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is a simple resolution. It does not direct the President to do anything. It does not seek to analyze the Mexican situation. It simply contains the resolve that the President is justified in employing the armed forces of the United States if necessary to enforce demands of this Government for the unequivocal amends for affronts and indignities committed against this Government.

Mr. President, I do not see why the Senate should long hesitate in such a situation. If the President is within his legitimate power, his constitutional limitation, if the acts which he is taking are in the interest of the dignity and the honor of the American flag, why should the Senate quibble on the terms of the resolution indorsing his course?

The proposition presented here in the substitute offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] contemplates that the President shall be directed to abandon his efforts to exact amends from the government in Mexico and shall accept as sufficient the apology already made for the affront received by our marines in the harbor of Tampico. I am glad to say that there is probably only one Senator in this body and certainly few people throughout the United States who think that such a course should be pursued.

The third alternative, Mr. President, is presented by the substitute offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I have a high respect for the Senator from Massachusetts and for the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who so ably advocated the adoption of that substitute, but I feel justified in saying that that substitute is, above all things else, a covert attempt to criticize the President of the United States for his policy of the past year and to force upon the country a reversal of that policy on account of the internal conditions in Mexico.

That this is the proper construction to place upon that substitute is plainly shown, particularly by the speech of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], who takes occasion in advocating the adoption of that substitute to denounce the President for his policy and to bring in here again all the criticisms of the past year and to seek to array here a partisan spirit in the very hour when the Senate should be united behind the President of the United States in the performance of his duty.

Why should we, the Senate of the United States, in this hour indict a miserable people and recite their shortcomings, their evil deeds, and their crimes committed during the last year? Can anything be gained in this hour by inflaming public opinion in this country and exciting antagonism and animosity in Mexico by the long recital of the crimes and miseries all too well known to exist in that Republic?

Mr. President, I can not view the substitute offered in this hour, and supported, as it is, by the rather violent attack upon the President, as anything less than an effort to take a partisan advantage of the situation and embed in a resolution of the Senate a criticism of the President for his policy in Mexico during the last year. The last paragraph of the proposed substitute resolution is practically a demand that that course be changed, and I regret to see that in the hour when the Senate of the United States should stand behind the President without respect to party, an attempt is made in this carefully phrased substitute to raise a partisan issue and to inflict an injury upon the President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska, in all seriousness, if the preamble which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has submitted is a criticism upon the present President, is it not equally a criticism upon the last Republican President?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, it may be, but I am not interested in that matter. The last administration is "a tale that is told."

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, my suggestion was that it can hardly be called a partisan attack upon anyone.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very much afraid it is, Mr. President, and my first suspicions to that effect have been gradually increased as I have heard the speeches on the other side of the Chamber by some Senators whose views are well known, who have been standing for armed intervention for months, and who have sought on every occasion to arouse public indignation against the President for his laudable attempts to preserve peace and, if possible, to avoid war.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. There is much force, no doubt, in what the Senator is urging as to the preamble being a reflection; but does the Senator feel, in view of the conditions that have arisen since this resolution was introduced yesterday, that a mere reference to the facts presented by the President—which, of course, go to the insult—in view of the disparity of the strength of the two nations, is a sufficient warrant for pursuing a matter which already, if the reports are to be relied upon, has reached the point of war, call it whatever we may? I ask this question in all seriousness. I dislike to leave as a legacy a vote that amounts to a vote of war upon the mere circumstance of the arrest of these men, in view of the apology which those responsible for the arrest made, and in view of the great disparity between the two countries. If it were some great power I should not hesitate a moment.

Now, I want to ask the Senator, if it might not be well at the end of the first paragraph of the resolution, on page 2, to add the words "and to insure the peace and security of life and property of citizens of the United States," in order that there might be something in the authorization, if it amounts to that, in the justification, if it amounts to that, in the approval, if it amounts to that, beyond the mere effort to require reparation for the insult?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the President of the United States is wise in taking one step at a time. There is abundant time for war. As the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations (Mr. SHIVELY) well said this morning, we can declare war at any time. The present duty, the highest duty, for the Senate of the United States is to support the President of the United States in endeavoring to preserve peace. If the occupation of Vera Cruz shall serve as sufficient warning to "the powers that be" in Mexico, it may well happen that our operations in that Republic may begin and end in that city. Certainly in taking the action which he did the President was within his constitutional power. War may be necessary, as we all know, but it is still possible to avoid it; and so long as the President of the United States holds out the hope that war may be avoided, I think it is the duty of Congress to stand by him and insert nothing in the resolution which will contemplate going any further than is necessary to secure what the President seeks to secure by the occupation of Vera Cruz.

Mr. President, how idle and how false would be the last paragraph of these resolutions read if the proposed preamble were adopted:

Be it further resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico.

How idle and false would be that preamble if we adopt the preamble proposed as an amendment by the Senator from Massachusetts, with all the serious and grave charges against the people of Mexico which it contains.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] today suggested substantially the same amendment to the resolution reported by the majority of the committee as that proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. What has the Senator to say to that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not discussing that, Mr. President. I stand for the resolution as it was reported from the committee, without any amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Then the Senator would not favor that declaration as an amendment to the resolution as reported by the majority of the committee?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I favor that declaration, that in taking this step, even though it be a bloody step, at Vera Cruz we do it without any malice or hatred toward the Mexican people.

Mr. CLAPP. But the Senator does not understand my question. The Senator from Colorado this afternoon sent up and made a speech on an amendment containing substantially the same provision that is contained at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts; that is, disclaiming any intention to take any part of Mexico. Now, the Senator is criticizing that feature in the preamble offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is mistaken——

Mr. CLAPP. It strikes me to be just as much the subject of criticism when offered as a separate amendment to the resolution as reported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is in error. I am not referring to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. The resolution offered by the committee of which I am a member contains this final paragraph:

Be it further resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico.

I say that declaration would be idle and would be false, if we preface it with a declaration that in Mexico there has been a state of "unrestrained violence and anarchy"; that there have been "numerous unpunished murders of American citizens and the spoliation of their property"; and then follow those statements with a further recital of all the evil deeds that have occurred in Mexico during the past years. I say it would be a contradictory thing for us to introduce a resolution with such a denunciation of the Mexican people and wind up with a declaration of friendship and affection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to his colleague?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of my colleague whether, in his judgment, any of the claims made in the so-called substitute are untrue?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, I hardly think it is a proper thing to enter into a discussion of that. I presume there is some truth in the statements referred to, and I think there has been also much exaggeration. I think it is beside the case, however, to discuss that now. But if it is true that there has been "unrestrained violence and anarchy" and "unpunished crimes against American citizens and others," certainly the course of the President in landing an armed force at Vera Cruz and asserting the dignity and strength of the United States will have a restraining influence in the future.

Mr. NORRIS. If they are not true, that fact alone would be sufficient objection to any such statement, I take it; but if they are not to be considered and it is not proper to consider them, whether or not they are true, does the Senator himself base the justification that we are going to adopt by our resolution entirely upon the fact that there has been a dispute about how a salute should be given? Does the Senator think that, standing alone, without anything else, such a dispute is sufficient reason even for us to take Vera Cruz?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, my colleague is mistaken in saying that the issue between the United States and the Huertista government is a question of the number of guns or the method of firing a salute. That was the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], but it is inaccurate.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not made that statement as to the number of guns, but I think my colleague will certainly agree that had there been no dispute about the salute between the Government of the United States and Huerta the President would probably not have delivered his message and we would perhaps not have this resolution here. What I want to get at is the judgment of the Senator as to whether a dispute, not necessarily as it was defined by somebody else, but a dispute, I think, admitted by everybody, about the salute would be of itself a sufficient ground for us to take the step that has been taken and that we are asked to justify?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I see no ground for the contention stated by my colleague. The United States is not taking the step because it disagrees with Gen. Huerta as to a salute. The United States is taking the step because Gen. Huerta refused to fire the salute, and in refusing to do so he practically added insult to injury by the nature of his statements and his contentions with our Department of State.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I will put the question in another way and take his statement for it, which may be more accurate than mine; I will not quibble about that. Is the fact that Huerta refuses to salute the flag, in the judgment of my colleague, a sufficient reason for the steps that have been taken and that we are asked to justify by this resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I regret to see that there has been an attempt to narrow this question down to the diplomatic correspondence between Huerta and the United States on the question of the firing of a salute. The Senator will remember that in his address to the Congress the President enumerated a number of affronts and indignities which the Huertista government had inflicted upon the representatives of the United States and upon the representatives of no other nation doing business with him in Mexico.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, I should like to ask my colleague if there are other reasons, what objection there would be to stating those reasons in the resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The resolution states those reasons.

Mr. NORRIS. I think not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The resolution is as broad and comprehensive as the case warrants, and the Senator from Nebraska, my colleague, will find it in the preamble, which reads:

In view of the facts presented by the President of the United States in his address delivered to the Congress in joint session on the 20th day of April, 1914, with regard to certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States in Mexico,

Under those circumstances this resolution approves the course of the President and justifies his acts, not because of the failure to fire a salute but because of those indignities and affronts committed against the United States. One was the arrest of an officer from one of the vessels who went ashore to get the mail. Another was in seizing and holding—and I do not know but in opening—a dispatch of the United States to the chargé d'affaires in Mexico City.

Mr. NORRIS. Those were all, I believe, that the President mentioned. Now, I will ask the Senator whether any demand has been made by the United States for reparation excepting for the refusal of Huerta to fire the salute? Has our Government asked for any reparation, any apology, or anything that has not been complied with in reference to the holding of the mails or the arrest of the other official, or anything else that complaint has been made about on our part?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not think my colleague expects me to go into the details of those diplomatic negotiations. I am not acquainted with them. They came before the President, and the President has acted. He is within his constitutional power in acting. He could have gone on acting and not have referred the matter to Congress at all; but he came to Congress. Shall we now present before the world the spectacle of even hesitating to justify the President in what he did?

Mr. President, I have said that this substitute, as offered here and supported by speeches from the other side of this Chamber, however carefully drawn and however ingeniously worded, is in its effect a criticism upon the President of the United States for his policy toward Mexico during the last year, and a demand upon him to change that policy and take those conditions into consideration in the future policy of the United States in Mexico. The substitute preamble is fairly worded, and it reads like any other preamble. It has the appearance of respect. It has the appearance of deliberation. It has the appearance of sustaining the President in what is he doing. But, Mr. President, while the voice is the voice of Jacob, the hand is the hand of Esau; and an unfair and an unwise attempt is being made to make of this occasion an opportunity for criticizing the President in the performance of his constitutional duty.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to speak at length. I simply desire to give, in a brief way, the reasons for the vote I expect to cast upon the resolution and the amendment.

We are called upon to approve the action of the President. Believing that the President has committed a great blunder and that his attitude is wrong, I can not vote to approve it.

I have not been one of the special advocates of peace that have been parading before the country during recent years. I have not made the advocacy of arbitration treaties a specialty, but I shall not give my consent to dragging my country into a war the results of which can not be foretold, unless the gravest situation confronts us and unless I am convinced it is a matter of vital concern to my country.

I am not one of those who believe that the period of military conflicts is past and have so stated from the public platform in recent months. I believe the world still will be afflicted with war. But I want to say that I am somewhat surprised that an administration which we were led to believe was devoted to the promotion of peace should be so hasty to plunge the country into war upon the first occasion that seemed to favor it.

I believe I am patriotic. I believe I love my country as well as any one of her citizens, but I do not believe it adds to its glory to bow to Great Britain, to shiftily avoid a controversy with Japan, and then, with a lion-like boldness, attack Mexico, as has been done this day.

Ah, my friends, I can not vote to approve that course, for I do not believe it is right. I shall vote for the Lodge resolution, as a substitute, if offered as printed, for I believe that if there are any reasons for war that resolution recites them. If that resolution is defeated, I intend to vote against the resolution reported by the committee, and if the Lodge amendment is adopted as a substitute, I believe I shall vote against its adoption as amended, because I am not yet ready to declare war upon Mexico.

No man can tell where the action of this day will lead. There have been quoted here to-night—and they impressed me with great solemnity—the words of President McKinley when he was struggling against the Spanish-American conflict—that it was easy to get into war, but the end was beyond control.

I must admit that I am under some embarrassment to-night. The President, in my judgment without justification, has made an attack upon Mexico. He has blockaded a harbor. He has taken a city. If the press dispatches are true, he has taken the lives of hundreds of the Mexican people and sacrificed the lives of American marines, and that is done in the name of peace.

I can not approve it, because, instead of leading to peace, it plunges us into war, and for what purpose? Is it to pacify Mexico, to restore peace and order there? If so, how?

Why, Senators, those of us who have given some study to the Spanish-American character know that we can not set up the same standards for them to follow in the administration of their Governments that we set up for ourselves, and the only way peace and order will be maintained in Mexico according to the standards we set up for ourselves is for the United States to administer the government of Mexico. Then, after the conquest has been completed, after we have set up a government there, after we have sustained that government, when shall we withdraw? Who will pay the bills? For what purpose will the sacrifice of treasure and life have been made?

These are questions which we should consider before we approve of the action that has been taken. I want to disagree with my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] when he says that he believes the President had a constitutional right to start this war—for that is what he has done.

I understood that Congress alone declared war. What is the avail of such a provision in the Constitution if war is begun by the President and is actually in progress before Congress is permitted to act? What, then, is there for the Congress to do? Of what use is a declaration when the armies of the United States and her navies are attacking cities, destroying fortifications, and blockading harbors?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator and myself are much in sympathy. We have talked over this matter a good deal together, and what I ask is not in any spirit of criticism.

The consideration of this resolution 24 hours ago, to my mind, was one thing. Its consideration now is another thing. War has begun. There is no question about that. Now, the question is, can we limit the operations, can we lessen them, by refusing to adopt this resolution and conveying to Huerta the suggestion that there is a divided sentiment here, or can we more likely hasten their termination by giving Huerta to understand that this country is a unit?

I ask the question because it is one that the Senator and myself and all of us will have to face. I will say that I have no idea myself which way I will deal with it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am free to admit, as I said a few moments ago, while the President has asked us to approve what he proposed to do, he has proceeded to do it before we had an opportunity to approve or disapprove. He has proceeded to plunge the country into a war. Now we are told that a disapproval will be alleged to be a refusal on our part to sustain our country when engaged in war with an enemy. I do not propose, however, to be put in that attitude. It has been said here to-night that we are to approve or disapprove what the President has done. I think he has done wrong, and I intend to say so by my vote.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas continue to yield?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The things the President has done since the scene in the House yesterday have now become history and are a part of the many mistakes that have been made in dealing with this question. We now face the question as to what will best serve toward terminating the warlike operations in Mexico. It seems to me that we have got to face it from the viewpoint of the present rather than the viewpoint of the time when the resolution was drawn.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to take it from that point of view.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas the same question which the Senator from Kentucky propounded a while ago. Does he think the President of the United States did wrong when he prevented the landing of 250 cannon and 200,000,000 rounds of ammunition to be used against us?

Mr. BRISTOW. As to whether those munitions of war would be used for us or against us would depend on whether or not we went to war with Mexico. If we did not declare war upon Mexico, they would not be used against us. I am not going to vote to declare war. If the President knew that war was going to be declared, he may have been justified; but I have understood that it was the business of Congress under the Constitution to declare war.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me a further interruption, does the Senator think the preamble offered to the resolution by the Senator from Massachusetts is a correct recitation of facts? He said he was going to vote for it. Does he think that it is a correct representation of facts?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I think substantially so. I have said there is anarchy there and has been, and I intend to vote for the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, if I can do so without justifying the attack upon Mexico, as a substitute for the resolution of the committee.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator think that it is a correct representation of facts, and upon top of that, under the circumstances, that American sailors from our man-of-war were arrested in the very boat flying the American flag; adding all that together, does he propose to say that the President did wrong when he stopped the landing of the munitions of war to which I have just referred?

Mr. BRISTOW. So far as the arrest of marines is concerned, I think that Huerta—and what I say now is no justification of the Huerta régime, for four or five months ago I justified the President in refusing to recognize him as the lawful head of the Mexican Government—I think Huerta has made reasonable amends, and that the differences as reported to us between the Huerta government and the President in regard to the additional amends which the President desired were not a sufficient justification for the action the President has taken.

I am not ready now to say that if the Lodge amendment is adopted by the Senate as a substitute I shall vote for it in its final passage, because I do not believe that we have sufficiently exhausted all the diplomatic means for restoring peace in Mexico. In my opinion we are not yet justified in making war upon that helpless people.

Mr. REED and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit me to finish what I was discussing with him——

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. REED. Would the fact that a battle is now on and that American sailors are defending our flag and are being attacked have any effect upon the judgment of the Senator?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator puts that in a false light. Mexicans are defending their country against an attack from us.

Mr. REED. Made, as the Senator says, for he says he is going to vote for the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, after a state of anarchy has existed, after numerous murders have occurred, and after our flag and uniform have been insulted. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must impose on the occupants of the gallery obedience to the suggestion made that there shall be no demonstrations in the gallery. The Chair hopes that it will not occur again.

Mr. WEEKS and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi or the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BRISTOW. I can not yield at this time. I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will yield shortly, but not at present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; I want to respond to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to have the Senator yield for a minute, if possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must hold that the Senator from Kansas declines to yield, but he says he will yield a few moments later.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted to tell the Senator that the war is on, and that American sailors and soldiers have been already killed at Vera Cruz.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator from Missouri is mistaken. I do not intend to vote for the adoption of the resolution, even if amended by the Lodge substitute. Mr. President, I know that at the beginning of a war, before the burdens of the conflict appear, before the enormous drains upon our resources have been had, before lives are lost, before homes are devastated, it is easy to arouse the martial spirit of a conquering race, but I shall not be one to precipitate and start our country into a war without the gravest provocation—one more grave than has been presented here yet. It is, in fact, military conquest, against which we have protested from the beginning. I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas yields to the Senator from Massachusetts, having been under previous obligations. The Senator from Mississippi will defer for a moment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Since the Senator from Massachusetts is not here at this moment, I want to read a statement from an extra of the Washington Post. It says:

A detachment of American Regulars were captured by the rebel forces just across the border near Hereford, Ariz., by Villa's bandit leaders. The troops were on border patrol, and as soon as they had crossed the international line were surprised and taken captives.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that there is not a particle of official confirmation of that statement up to this moment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not know anything about it. I am just reading it. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the occupants of the galleries the Chair desires to say it would very freely grant permission to display sentiment respecting any patriotic feeling as American citizens, but the rules prohibit any expression of approval or dissent, and the Chair respectfully asks that the occupants of the galleries shall respect the rules of the Senate. It is a deliberative body and not an amusing one.

Mr. BRISTOW. The quotation that I read was from the Washington Post, an extra of 10.30 p. m. I have here an extra of the Washington Star, and in that I find this dispatch:

TENTH UNITED STATES CAVALRYMEN HELD.

DOUGLAS, ARIZ., April 21.

A special to the Douglas (Ariz.) International from Tombstone says news reached there to-day that 15 members of Troop B, Tenth Cavalry, were being held by constitutionalist troops at a point just below the border between Naco and Hereford, Ariz.

The troops, who were on border patrol, wandered across the line last night, without being aware of the fact. It is reported they were surrounded and taken prisoners by a large rebel detachment.

Troop A, Tenth Cavalry, left Fort Huachuca to-day to investigate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator from Kansas any information whether or not the United States Government has taken steps to require Gen. Villa to salute the flag?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will state to the Senator from Washington that I realize the pertinency of his inquiry; but to me this is a very serious matter. To me it appears that this day we have started our country into a war the results of which we can not foretell, but which inevitably will cost thousands of lives of our own people, and lead us to kill and maim thousands of Mexicans—a nation with which we have been living upon friendly terms for many years. I do not believe that we exhausted all the means of diplomacy before this conflict was precipitated. I believe that the American people will be shocked when they read of the murders that are being committed in the name of peace. While, as I said, I have not been one of the special propagandists of peace, and I have not made a specialty of treaties of arbitration, I want to repeat that I will not vote to plunge my country into a war until driven to it either in its defense or to maintain its honor and its integrity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas a question before he takes his seat. He has just said that he was not willing to vote for this resolution until he had exhausted all the means of keeping the peace. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas to designate one possible means of keeping the peace that we have not exhausted.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say that in my humble opinion if the President had been as eager to preserve peace with southern Mexico as he has been to depose the usurper Huerta, we would not have had any battle at Vera Cruz to-night and human lives would have been saved. So far as the north is concerned, I do not know whether or not the statements that appear in the extra papers to-night are true.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not detain the Senate at this late hour, Mr. President, were it not for the criticism that has been made by my colleague [Mr. HITCHCOCK] against those who are supporting the substitute resolution. I absolve my colleague, of course, from any intent to misrepresent anybody; I know him too well to think for a moment that he would attempt to do anything of that kind. But yet I feel that I can not remain silent with the positive statement in the RECORD that those who were in favor of the substitute were guilty of a discourtesy, or were making any attempt to criticize the President of the United States, or were undertaking to make of it a party question or to take any partisan advantage on the present occasion.

So far as I am personally concerned, Mr. President, the criticism of undertaking to make it a party question will not apply to me in this case or any other case that ever comes before the Senate for my official action. To me it is a serious charge to say that I am now trying to obtain a party advantage out of this Mexican question. It would take but one moment of thought for anyone to realize that any party advantage that can be gained here on this occasion will be on the other side of the proposition.

It is easy to say something nice about the American flag and the defense of the American flag and get the plaudits of a vast number of people, and I am aware that those who are opposed to this resolution will be subjected to the adverse criticism that we are not defending the flag, so that when I say that I am opposed to the resolution reported by the committee I realize just as fully as anybody can that I am taking the unpopular side of the proposition, but I am impressed with a conviction that I am right in taking it and, although I may be criticized now, I believe that the history of the years that are to come will show that I am right right now.

Mr. President, I am just as earnest in my denial that in supporting the substitute I for one would think of any such thing as a criticism of the President of the United States as I am in my denial that I am attempting by my conduct to get any kind of party advantage on this proposition. From the time that the Mexican question became acute, both during this administration and the one which preceded it, I have avoided on all occasions criticizing the President of the United States in the course that he was taking.

I believe that this is an occasion when party feelings should have no control or influence; but, as I have said, so far as I am concerned I believe that in every official action that any public official must take he should throw off his partisanship and decide every official action entirely on its merits and according to his conviction as to what is right.

It never occurred to me, Mr. President, that a man could not support the substitute resolution without being subjected to the criticism that he was disrespectful to the President of the United States. To my mind that is almost going to the extent of saying that he is not patriotic. In my humble judgment I was laboring under the impression that I was giving the President of the United States in my support of the substitute resolution a greater power and a greater discretion than will be given him under the resolution proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations. I was laboring under the impression that in that substitute was a statement of the actual facts as they had existed and do exist. Until I listened to my colleague I supposed it was admitted by all, both those in favor of and those against the substitute, that as far as the statements made in the substitute were concerned they were all true. If any of them are not true, I for one should like to amend it and strike out everything that is false. If there is one sentence in it that is disrespectful to the President, I want to vote to strike it out, and if it does not go out I certainly would not support the substitute.

It seems to me we ought to be allowed here to exercise our discretion and our judgment and our reason without being charged with an attempt to take a partisan advantage of somebody, even if we could. It seems to me I ought to be allowed to exercise my honest judgment here in casting my vote without its being charged that I am trying to criticize or find fault with the President, unless you can point to some specific thing that can be fairly construed as a criticism of the President.

I believe that in time of war or in dealing with foreign relations it is the patriotic duty of the citizen to follow the President. Personally, I have not always agreed with the steps he has taken in this Mexican matter. I thought sometimes that a different course ought to have been pursued; but that never brought forth from me a criticism, and it would not have resulted in my opposition to any steps he wanted to take, because I would have been behind him every time to the extent of my ability, even though I did not agree with him as to what he was doing. I had faith in his honesty. I never doubted his patriotism and his good intentions. It is no disrespect to him to say that sometimes I did not agree with him. If that is the case, if disagreement is disrespect, then no man in this body can have any respect for any other man in the body or anywhere else, because I have never found two men who always agreed on all occasions on all things.

The President, in his message, started out with these words:

It is my duty to call your attention to a situation which has arisen in our dealings with Gen. Victoriano Huerta at Mexico City which calls for action—and to ask your advice and cooperation in acting upon it.

Now, mark you—

I give the President credit for acting in good faith. He says: "I ask your advice and cooperation." In this matter he was not required to ask our advice. I do not believe he has done anything beyond his constitutional power. He came here voluntarily, and said with his own lips: "I am asking your advice and cooperation." Will you say to me that in acting in good faith upon his own request I am not patriotic or I am treating him with disrespect if I do not agree with him? Can it be possible that you are going to say that when the President calls upon you for advice and cooperation he is going to say to you in advance what advice you shall give him? Are we going to be basswood men or human beings with minds and with reason? Would the President respect us, would anybody respect us, if we should permit him automatically, when he has asked our advice, to tell us what advice we should give?

There is no disrespect to him. If he has come to us in good faith—and I take it that he has; I am giving him credit for that—then you can not say to the man who honestly disagrees with him and says so, that he is not true to the flag, or that he is trying to get a party advantage, or that he is discourteous to the President.

What would you think of a general—and the President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy—if, on the eve of battle, he called his subordinates about him in council of war and said, "I want to advise with you as to what we shall do on the morrow; I want your advice and cooperation; but I will tell you in advance what advice I want you to give me; and if you do not give the advice that I want, then you are discourteous to me; you are not treating me with respect?"

So, taking the President at his word, we ought to be allowed, if we are taken into consideration at all, to give our honest judgment without being accused of doing anything that is discourteous, and without being accused of trying to get some party advantage.

The President refused to recognize Huerta as the president of Mexico. I have always been one who believed that our President was right when he took that step. I believe, even though Mexico was recognized by all the other great nations in the world, that upon the President of the United States rested a greater responsibility than upon the head of any other Government in the matter of such recognition. I was glad to see our President rise to the occasion and do what, in my judgment, was right—refuse to recognize the man who had obtained the title to his office by treason to his superior officer, by butchery, and by murder. To my mind, the precedent of such a recognition, especially among nations that have not advanced further than Mexico has in civilization, would have been one of far-reaching consequences, the evils of which, if we had recognized Huerta, would extend down through generations and perhaps centuries. The only dispute, however, so far as this resolution is concerned, as I look at it, is whether or not Huerta shall salute our flag or perhaps not quite that far; perhaps a dispute as to how the salute shall be given, and as to how it shall be responded to.

It seems that there is a rule that has existed for a great many years between nations requiring one nation, upon demand, to salute the flag of another nation when it admits that it has committed some wrong against that nation. As the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] well said early in this debate, perhaps no people in the world are fully civilized; this matter of saluting the flag is one of the relics that has come down to us through the ages; and a hundred years from now, when the world has advanced farther in civilization, this silly custom, this foolish rule, this international courtesy that has outlived its usefulness, will be forgotten and will be unknown, at least in practice.

If that be true, and I believe it is, then it seems to me there is presented now to the American Government an opportunity to help get rid of this silly, foolish form—this ancient international custom of barbarism. When a man honestly and sincerely apologizes for a wrong he has done, he ought not be compelled to humiliate himself by the observance of some form that has no reason for its basis. These American sailors were wrongfully arrested. They were taken into custody by Huerta's soldiers. They were kept in custody only about an hour and a half, when they were released. Apologies were made; and Huerta himself, so the President says in his message, expressed his own personal regret. The admiral demanded, in addition to that apology, that Huerta should salute the flag.

I pass over the question of recognition. It has always seemed to me to be given more importance than it is entitled to. I will only say in passing that private citizens can not salute the flag of a nation, and it seems to me that when we demand a salute we recognize the government of which we make the demand. I do not care for that, however. It may be technical, and I do not care for technicalities. Huerta either refused the salute or he could not agree with the President or his representatives upon the way in which it should be given, and the salute was not given.

Mr. President, when you simmer it all down, there is nothing in this resolution except the failure of Huerta to salute the American flag, and a demand, therefore, that we should use the armed forces of the United States to compel him to do so. As I look at it, there is not anything else in it. I would rather let the matter rest with the apologies that have been received, and not ask for the salute, or pay no attention to the refusal to give it, than to lose a single human life to preserve this ancient courtesy of barbarism existing between nations.

Mr. President, if I were President of the United States, or had been when this incident occurred, I would not have saluted the Mexican flag so long as the butcher Huerta had it in his possession. If they salute our flag, it means that we must salute theirs. I would not have saluted his flag and I would not have permitted him to salute the American flag if I could have prevented it. To my mind it would be a disgrace to have our flag saluted by a man whose only claim for power rests in treason, in murder, in human butchery.

It is said by my colleague that there were some other incidents. The President names them in his message. One is the holding up of the mail. The mail was not opened, or at least the President does not say so, and therefore I take it that the mail was not interfered with except to delay it. Another was the arrest at another time of some one from the Minnesota, I believe.

It must be remembered, however, that in every one of these cases redress has been given. At least the President has made no demand for an apology, no demand for a salute of the flag, no demand for anything in reference to those other incidents. There is only one thing stated in the message that he has asked for that he has not received and that is a salute to the American flag. So if we base the resolution upon the message—and we do, as I understand it—we say to the world: "Because this man refused to salute the American flag we are going to war."

I do not believe it is a sufficient reason. It may be popular now to have it go out to the country that we are defending the honor of the flag; but, Mr. President, this means war. It means that after every man who is within the hearing of my voice shall have passed beyond the river the Government of the United States will be paying pensions to widows who are made widows by this incident. No man can tell what may be the extent of the misery and the suffering that may be caused. The evil effects of the war will go on long after those who have caused it have passed away.

I want to give to the President the right to take any step that, in his judgment, he believes he ought to take; but I am not willing to base that step upon the single incident of a refusal on the part of this butcher to salute the American flag. I thought, when I was in favor of this other resolution, that I was giving to the President a broadened power, one that would give him the discretion to use this incident and a thousand other incidents if he wanted to, or not to use them if he did not desire to do so. I am willing to give to the President the right to say when he shall go into Mexico, if he goes at all, and I am willing to follow him in the course he takes regardless of what I personally might think was right.

But when the President comes to Congress and says, I want you to act officially, I want you to officially say before the world that when this human butcher refuses to salute the flag that is a sufficient reason for war, I decline to do it. I do not believe it is right. If this is disrespect, if this is discourtesy, if this is unpatriotic, then I am guilty. It may seem patriotic now, my friends, it may be popular now, but in my heart I believe that the time will come when the people, not only of the United States, but of the world, will realize that the Government of the United States ought to be broad enough to brush this murderer aside when he refuses to apologize and let the world march on in peace without war and without depredation.

Mr. President, I want to work in harmony with every Senator and with the President whenever I can agree with them. I would rather agree than disagree, but when I am called upon to act officially I am going to do what I think is right, even though I run the risk of being condemned as one who is not patriotic and who wants to criticize and censure the President of the United States. I disclaim, I deny, with all the emphasis at my command, any intention of being discourteous, and no evidence of such intention can be produced.

I want to say that when an amendment is proposed here that broadens the scope of approval to the President I have a right to support such amendment without having my motives impugned, unless there is some evidence sustaining such a charge; and if any man has any such evidence of it, let him produce it.

Mr. President, a war will bring to us and to those who follow us not only suffering and misery, but it will overburden the shoulders of succeeding generations of taxpayers to support the widows, the orphans, the sick, and the crippled, made so by those responsible for the war.

I know that war is sometimes necessary, but I am not willing now, and I do not believe I ever will be willing to say that any nation that is civilized is justified in going to war because somebody refuses to salute its flag.

Mr. CLAPP obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m., Wednesday, April 22). I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] if he does not think it would be wise at this time to try to get an agreement to vote?

Mr. KERN. I would be very happy to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Say, at not later than 3 o'clock or half past 2 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that a vote be taken on the pending resolution and all amendments thereto not later than 2.30 o'clock this morning.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Indiana make it 2 o'clock? It seems to me that we might as well vote at 2 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. Yes; I will make it 2 o'clock, if that will suit the convenience of Senators.

Mr. SHIVELY. No one on this side wants to speak.

Mr. KERN. I will make it half past 1 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, from conversation I have had with Senators on this side I am quite sure that half past 1 would not give us a sufficient length of time.

Mr. KERN. Very well; say 2 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I had intended to occupy a few minutes myself, but I will forego that, and I think some other Senators will do the same; but I feel sure that a vote could not well be taken before 2 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. We will say 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that I have no objection to 2 o'clock, although it will preclude me from submitting the remarks I intended to make. But I am perfectly willing to do that in order to get an agreement to vote at 2 o'clock.

Mr. KERN. I will ask for an agreement to vote at 2 o'clock, then.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that is done I will ask unanimous consent that the rule which requires that the roll shall be called before a unanimous consent is given may be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is asked that the rule requiring the roll to be called before unanimous consent is given be suspended. The Chair hearing no objection——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, what kind of a precedent are we setting here now?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we can do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRISTOW. Suppose there are only six Senators here and there is a unanimous-consent agreement, the rule being suspended. No one can tell what would happen under such a practice.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to the unanimous consent, but I raised the question at the time we adopted the new rule, and I was scouted at for raising it. It was said that no Senator would ever ask that the rule be suspended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Bankhead	Goff	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Gore	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Hitchcock	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Hollis	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Hughes	Overman	Smoot
Bristow	James	Page	Sterling
Bryan	Johnson	Penrose	Sutherland
Burleigh	Jones	Perkins	Swanson
Catron	Kenyon	Pittman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kern	Poindexter	Thornton
Chilton	La Follette	Pomerene	Tillman
Clapp	Lane	Reed	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Lee, Md.	Root	Walsh
Colt	Lewis	Saulsbury	Warren
Crawford	Lippitt	Shafroth	Weeks
Cummins	Lodge	Sheppard	West
Dillingham	McCumber	Sherman	Williams
Fall	McLean	Shields	Works
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shively

Mr. KERN. I was requested to state that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. This will stand for the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. Now I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote on the pending resolution, the substitute, and amendments in their proper order at 2 o'clock this morning and continue to so vote until all are disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. Without debate?

Mr. KERN. At not later than 2 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. Without debate?

Mr. LODGE. Without further debate?

Mr. KERN. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington objects.

Mr. KERN. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to vote on the resolution and amendments as stated not later than a quarter after 2 this morning.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is a matter of the gravest possible importance. I do not believe that the time ought to be fixed for taking a vote. I do not expect to occupy any of the time of the Senate, or, if at all, not more than 10 minutes, but I object to fixing the hour for taking a vote. As long as any Senator desires to be heard upon this matter I think he ought to be heard.

Mr. KERN. I understand the Senator, then, will object to any unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would not the Senator agree to half-past 2?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to fixing an hour.

Mr. PENROSE. Why would not 10 o'clock to-morrow morning do?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will say in this connection there is no reason why this matter should be disposed of to-night. It was the Senator's own suggestion that he would undertake to hold the Senate in session continuously until it was disposed of. Events are moving on. The President is acting with full power and full discretion. There is no emergency for action by the Senate to-night.

Mr. KERN. The Mexican Parliament and the nations of the world are witnessing the spectacle of the American Senate refusing to stand by the President of the United States at this moment of danger and peril.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Washington objects to the unanimous consent. Is the Chair rightly informed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Chair is rightly informed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair recognizes the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if this vote had been taken 24 hours ago, I would not have voted for the resolution as reported by the committee, or even if amended as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, for I do not believe that 24 hours ago there was any excuse or justification for the passage of the resolution. In the first place, the resolution at that time was absolutely without any meaning whatever. It did not ask for any authority. The President, as I read his message, insisted that he had all the authority necessary to meet the conditions. In that connection, let me say that I do not attach importance to the criticism that delay in the consideration of this resolution has at all interfered with the President's activities. He has gone on independently of the delay in the passage of the resolution.

Mr. President, in view of the changed conditions in the last twenty-four hours I shall not devote much time to the discussion of the President's message. The spectacle of the President asking Congress to pass a resolution which contains no authority whatever will ever remain as one of the novelties of the present time. The facts recited in the President's message were without any warrant as a justification for steps that were destined inevitably to lead to war. No man can hold the honor of his country in higher esteem than I do, but I submit that when men have been arrested, as these men were, and the arrest found to be a mistake, and those arrested were promptly discharged and an apology made by the commanding officer, and then an apology made by Gen. Huerta himself, taking into account the fact that here is a Nation of 90,000,000 of people, with resources without limit, and there a handful of sixteen or seventeen million people, torn and distracted by civil war—as to any demand for recognition being made upon a man whom the President had refused to recognize because of the method by which he had obtained his power, this great Republic could well have paused and lost nothing of self-respect or of honor or prestige among the nations of the earth. I go a step further, and taking the statements contained in the substitute offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], there is nothing that will warrant me at least in casting a vote that means a declaration of war.

I was impressed this afternoon by the statement of the Senator from Colorado when he said he would not exchange one bright, clean American boy, the hope of a father and the center of a mother's love, for all the population of Mexico. Unpopular as it may be, I would go a step further than that. I know a boy who is the hope of his father and the center of his mother's love and affection, and that boy is ready to-day, under the benediction of father and mother, to go forth with their godspeed whenever this country needs his services, but I would not see that boy sacrificed simply to maintain peace and order in a conflict between bandits down in Mexico or to preserve the property of the men who having exploited our own Government have gone through their emissaries to Mexico to exploit that government, and, of course, I would not ask any other man for the sacrifice of his son. So, even if the facts recited in the preamble offered by the Senator from Massachusetts were true, I would not take it as a justification for a step that would lead to war. War means too much of human misery, suffering, and sorrow. We ought to have reached, after 19 centuries of Christian civilization, a point where a great, powerful nation like ours, that should be in the vanguard of the spirit of peace throughout the world, could well afford to overlook the final offer of recognition and apology involved in a salute at the hands of a murderer and a villian.

But since this resolution came into the Senate a changed condition confronts us. It is no longer a question of justifying the President. I do not believe his act can be justified. I believe his policy has been a series of mistakes through the long months that have intervened since he took his office, with reference to the Mexican situation. I believe that a bold, firm stand that indicated no choice between the factional leaders in Mexico would have brought peace to Mexico; but instead of that it has been a policy of drifting, a policy of waiting, called "watchful waiting." It might well be termed "careless drifting." It is no longer a question of indorsing or withholding indorsement of the President. It is now a broader question, involving the lessening of bloodshed. War is in existence to-night in Mexico. Call it what you will, when the soldiers of one nation are shot in open conflict by the soldiers of another nation, it is war. It does no good to disguise it under any other term.

Mr. President, for one, I am confronted with this situation: We can not stop the President; I wish we could. I wish he could have seen months ago; I wish he could have seen yesterday morning; I wish he could still see the pathway to peace. But there seems to be some condition, some influence, some purpose—and I do not question the integrity of that influence or that purpose—that is leading him on. We can not stop his course, and the question with me to-night is, the question now is, if it were in my power to pass or reject this resolution, which act would most likely conduce to the saving of bloodshed and the speedier peace in Mexico?

I believe the time has come when Mexico should realize that there is but one voice now in this land. Forgetting the mistakes, ignoring the errors of the past, withholding for the present our criticisms, if we should by any means defeat the passage of this resolution, it would mean encouragement to those forces—for the President has made up his mind for some reason to go forward down there. If it were in our power to stay that force, I would be only too glad to cast my vote to stay the hand that is leading on to war in Mexico, that has already lead to war, for now war it is; but it being beyond our power to do that, he having the constitutional right to do what he has done and to do what he is doing, the question is, What course of ours will have the greatest effect upon that force which is opposed to the force, the policy, and the activities of the President; what course of ours will most likely lessen further bloodshed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if the acceptation of the theory which he is now presenting would not practically place in the hands of the President the power to declare war whenever he sees fit to do so?

Mr. CLAPP. I do not want to be captious, but I want to answer the question by asking the Senator does he know any way to stay the progress of the President? I do not; I wish I did.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will permit me to answer, my judgment is that if this resolution were defeated the President would stop; and it would be the best thing, in my opinion, that could happen to the people of the United States and Mexico to stop the slaughter that is going on to-night.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator's conjecture is right, there is no question about that; but after coming to the Congress yesterday morning, after assembling the Congress in the Hall of the House of Representatives, after talking about wanting to confer with the Congress, he has gone on without any reference to the Congress. What is there in that course to justify the hope that, even if it were within our power to defeat this resolution, we could stay his hand and his purpose?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. KENYON. The question I desire to ask the Senator is suggested by that of the Senator from Kansas. Does the Senator from Minnesota mean to say, or does he believe, that if this resolution were defeated it would stop the slaughter?

Mr. CLAPP. Is the Senator asking the question of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KENYON. I am asking the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not. That is the argument I was making when the Senator from Kansas suggested that if the resolution could be defeated it would stay the purpose of the President. Of course, if the defeat of the resolution would stay the President, if that is true, of course it would end the slaughter; but the trouble is it would not stay the President. He has gone on regardless of what might be done with the resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, do I understand——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to believe that if the Senate of the United States refused to approve this war which the President has driven the country into, in defiance of Congress, the war-making power, he would continue to prosecute the war?

Mr. CLAPP. I have no more doubt of it than I have of my existence.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then, I say the Congress of the United States should stay his hand by refusing to furnish him men and arms to murder and destroy the people of Mexico.

Mr. CLAPP. Ah, but the trouble is he will then have us in the same dilemma that we are in to-night—we stand like a man with his back to the wall. There is no way of staying the hand of the President. He can push on to Mexico in the alleged cause of peace; he can push on to Mexico in the alleged cause of preventing the importation of arms; he can push on to Mexico in the alleged cause of maintaining the honor of this country; and we are powerless to prevent him. It is true that under the Constitution the power to declare war is vested in Congress, but, nevertheless, the power to make war, unfortunately, is in the hands of the President, as has been demonstrated by the activities and events of the last 24 hours.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly. I want to say, however, that there is no one in the Senate more in sympathy with the purpose of the Senator from Kansas than I. Twenty-four hours ago I think we were agreed upon this question. The only difference is that to my mind now the question seems to be not what this resolution was then, but what is the condition we deal with to-night?

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire again of the Senator, if he will pardon me, in the event this resolution were defeated and the President continued to prosecute the war without the approval of Congress, would not that be a usurpation of authority?

Mr. CLAPP. Well, I am very free to admit that for five long years we have witnessed a questionable exercise of authority in the Executive office, but we have not been able to stop it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand this resolution, and the attitude of the President with regard to it, it does not refer to the proposition of declaring war at all.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. BORAH. The President does not regard this resolution as authorizing him to declare or carry on war, and according to his declaration he does not regard what he is doing as declaring or carrying on war. We are only asked to justify what he has done, which he interprets to mean an effort to bring about peace.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; but the great fact remains that the war has come; we are in the midst of war to-night. I do not think there is a Senator within the sound of my voice who would deny that we are in war, although Congress has not declared war. A President can keep the country in turmoil and actual war, except that the Congress——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CLAPP. In just a moment, when I finish the sentence—except Congress might in its power sooner or later deprive him of the sinews of war.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I merely want to ask the Senator from Minnesota to explain a little further his position. It seems to me that all that is sought to do in the pending joint resolution is to vote a justification of the President in the action which he has taken leading up to the present condition.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no.

Mr. OLIVER. For my part, I do not see that my vote should be any different now from what it would have been 24 hours ago; in other words, I do not see that the events of the last 24 hours permit me to vote as an individual in justifying what the President has done if I did not believe 24 hours ago that he was justified. I intend to vote against the joint resolution, unless it is coupled with the Lodge amendment; but if that is voted down and we are forced by the President's acts into a war with the people of Mexico, I will consider the then existing conditions, and, if necessary, I will vote the supplies to enable him to carry on the war, although I do not see that I am now called upon to justify the acts that he has done leading up to this condition.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator question that we are already at war with Mexico?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think that makes any difference.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, that is another question. But does the Senator concede that we are at war with Mexico?

Mr. OLIVER. It looks very much like it when two armies get to fighting and shooting each other.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, Mr. President, there is this difference, and that is what I was proceeding to point out: Until the President led us into war I did not think he had done anything that was justifiable. His getting us into war I do not think is justifiable.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, Mr. President, why does the Senator vote that he is justified?

Mr. CLAPP. But to refuse to adopt this joint resolution in the midst of war would encourage the enemy to believe that there was a division of sentiment in this country, prolong the struggle, and result in a destruction of life, whereas to convince that country and that Government that there is now but one voice in this country, and that is the voice of our Government, will be to discourage opposition to the Government, lessen the probability of the continuation of the struggle, and lessen the destruction of human life. It is a condition now; it was a theory 24 hours ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if the best way to convince the people down there that we are in dead earnest in this matter would not be to have Congress immediately declare war under the Constitution? We are in war now, so why not have the Congress at this time declare war?

Mr. CLAPP. Well, war is on. We are in war. A declaration of war to-day would simply give to the President of the United States certain recognized relations to foreign countries outside of Mexico that he has not already got. So far as concerns the fighting of soldiers and the slaughter of men, we are in that already, call it whatever you may.

Mr. President, I admit that the problem is difficult of solution. It is a hard thing to stand here and vote on a resolution containing the word "justified" when I do not believe the President has been justified; and I would not for one moment vote for the resolution if I did not believe that being in war already it will lessen the duration of that struggle if we give Mr. Huerta and his government to understand that this Government is behind the President. In my opinion, it is no time to waste time and energy in the definition of terms. The country knows, the world knows, that it is not alone this insult; and the President will learn in the bitter school of experience that instead of the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts consolidating Mexico, his attack upon Huerta, who is one of the great factors in Mexico, will consolidate Mexico against the United States. The President may just as well make up his mind at one time as another that he has to deal with northern Mexico before he gets through with this matter just as certainly as he has to deal with southern Mexico. Blood is thicker than water; and the attack upon Vera Cruz will, in my humble judgment, go very far to solidify the people of Mexico in the defense of a common cause which they will recognize as their national cause.

The President has taken this step. He has taken the responsiblity. It rests with him, and he is welcome to whatever he gets out of it. It is to be regretted that it was taken. But now, Mr. President, the house being on fire, the first thing to be done is to put out the fire, and settle these differences afterwards.

Therefore, reluctant as I am to vote for this resolution, I can not consistently with my convictions encourage Mr. Huerta into further resistance by casting a vote against the resolution, because I must vote on it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator if he does not think the country will conclude that the Senate is playing the part of a lot of cowards in refusing to the President what he asks?

Mr. CLAPP. No; I do not think so. I think when the country comes to settle down from the hysteria that yesterday's proceedings threw it into it will realize that a grave mistake has been made. I believe, however, as long as the building is on fire, that our first duty is to ignore the differences until the fire is extinguished. Believing that, and believing that to defeat this resolution would encourage the opposition, prolong the warfare, and extend bloodshed and despair and misery to those people, I for one feel that I must vote for the resolution. Therefore I shall cast my vote in the affirmative when the vote upon the resolution is reached. It is an unfortunate condition, but we are dealing with a condition and not with a theory.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, history has been made most rapidly during the last 24 hours. Grim-visaged war has made his unwelcome entry into our deliberations since we began them on yesterday. God only knows whether this day will mark the beginning of another of those epochs in our national life made epochal by armed international conflict. The dream of peace which for 16 years has lulled our beloved country into sweet sleep has been dispelled by the boom of cannon and the groans of the dying.

Never before have I been so deeply impressed with the awful responsibilities which rest upon Congressmen. In their hands lie the power to declare war. I had fervently hoped that no occasion for exercising that power would ever arise again, and especially not while I was a Member of the United States Senate. Senators may try to deceive themselves into believing that what has been done to-day in Mexico is not war, but the three American mothers who mourn their dead sons, the lifeless bodies of 200 Mexican soldiers in the streets of Vera Cruz, the awful depression experienced by the thoughtful people of two heretofore friendly Republics, all testify to the fact of war.

I fear that the passage of the pending resolution will not decorate the page of history which records it. It recites no sufficient justification for what has been or for what will be done by this Government. But discussion now of the resolution will be of no avail. Whether it shall pass or not will make no difference with the course of events. The die has been cast. The flag has been carried at the head of our Army into Mexico, and there I fear it will remain. The American people have always been loyal to their flag. They always will remain so. They will not stop to consider congressional resolutions of approval or of disapproval after the act has been done. They will approve without consideration.

The time for discussion, I repeat, has passed. Debate should have occurred months ago. When our policy, or lack of policy, was carrying us inevitably into armed intervention in Mexico, then was the time when the Congress should have demanded information, should have insisted upon knowing what was being done. We have not known. This Senate has been derelict in its duty by sitting in almost silent inactivity. We know now that we have made a mistake. We should have insisted upon being advised as to all that was being done between the United States and Mexico. I am sorry that Senators do not feel like broadening the preamble to the resolution; not that such a change would make any difference with the President's actions or with current events, but because it would give a semblance of justification for this day's and to-morrow's work in Mexico. The situation in our country now is not the same as it was when the resolution came to the Senate. We can not justify to the satisfaction of ourselves, of our country, or of the world the action of the President in forcing war upon Mexico by the reasons given by him in his last message to Congress and incorporated in this resolution. The Lodge substitute does not reflect upon the President. It enlarges his powers and will save him and us from the criticism of forcing war upon a torn and helpless Republic for an insufficient stated cause. On yesterday I had thought to speak at some length on this matter, but the conditions surrounding it have changed. The pertinency of remarks in order 24 hours ago has become irrelevant to-day. What we say now will receive slight attention. The country has already taken its eyes and ears from this forum. It is now watching and listening for news from our battle front. The newspapers to-morrow will be popular; the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be neglected. The movements of our Army and Navy will be watched with feverish interest, and what we are now saying will be passed unnoticed.

As I have been sitting here to-night another scene than the one in this Chamber has come upon my vision. At the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, in the White House, I see the President of the United States. He knows and feels that what has been done has been done by him, and by him alone. He must feel the awful weight of responsibility. He knows that American boys and Mexican sons are this night dying in Mexico. His prophetic eyes can discern the mighty, the fearful results which must follow in the wake of the battleships ordered by him into Mexico. He is our President. He has my profound sympathy. In this trying hour he will have my loyal support. If the substitute of the minority shall fail, I shall then vote for the committee resolution, notwithstanding its limitations and defects, because I think that by so voting I shall express a vote of confidence in the President of the United States at a time when patriotism demands it.

Our country can get no glory out of this controversy with Mexico. May God grant that no dishonor shall stain the flag, lack of respect for which is the alleged cause of our present trouble in Mexico.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the resolution, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I will state that yesterday afternoon I offered an amendment in the form of a substitute for the resolution brought in by the committee and the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I addressed the Senate in its support. Since that time the President, without action on the part of the Senate, has entered upon a war with Mexico.

I can understand that under those circumstances it would be idle to take up the time of the Senate with a discussion of the amendment I have offered, or by asking for a record vote upon it. I am not willing to withdraw it, because it expresses my sentiments as to what we should have done before we actually entered upon war. In order that the Senator from Washington may have an opportunity to offer his amendment, if it is so desired, I am willing that a vote may be taken upon the amendment I have offered, so that it may be disposed of and gotten out of the way without calling for a record vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to inform the Senator from California that the amendment referred to by the Chair is the amendment tendered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield for a brief matter. The remarks which I intend to make will be very brief. I will yield the floor in a very short time.

Mr. THOMAS. I will take only a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, while in my judgment the resolution now pending is equivalent to a declaration of war, I am aware of the fact that it is not intended by the committee as such, and that it is not so in form.

Some of my colleagues are apprehensive that the amendment which I propose justifies a construction of the resolution as amended which would be inconsistent with the purpose it is designed to accomplish, to wit, a justification only of the President's action as outlined in his message of yesterday.

I have no disposition to do this. Upon the assurance, therefore, that should a resolution declaring war be reported, or should actual hostilities require it, I shall have opportunity to present my amendment, and full opportunity for its consideration, I shall not at this time insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado give the Chair to understand, then, that he withdraws the amendment tendered by him?

Mr. THOMAS. That is the conclusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield now to the Senator from California respecting the amendment tendered by him?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I am not pressing the matter. I am only endeavoring to get out of the way of the Senator from Washington, so that he may have an opportunity to offer and discuss his amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment tendered by the Senator from Washington is now in order. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment proposed by the committee, or by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], as follows:

On page 2, strike out all of lines 5, 6, and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following words:
"Be it further resolved, That a state of war exists between the United States of America and the United Mexican States."

Mr. SHIVELY. Is that amendment offered now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington announces that the amendment is offered now.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator wish to address the Senate upon his amendment at this time?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to make a few remarks upon it at this time.

Mr. President, it must be generally conceded that the amendment I have just offered recites merely the actually existing condition of affairs between the two countries. It is not a mere idle form that we should recognize that existing condition by a declaration. It does not involve the United States in actual hostilities to any greater extent than it is now or otherwise may be involved in them.

If the resolution is amended by the adoption of the resolution which I have just offered, the President of the United States in conducting this affair with the Republic to the south of us will have the advantage of international law relating to a belligerent, and all foreign countries will occupy toward us the positon of neutrals. To illustrate, Mr. President, the advantage which that would be to the President and to the United States—if a declaration of war had been made before actual hostilities were precipitated by the desire of the administration to prevent the landing in Mexico of a cargo of arms and ammunition that could have been accomplished without the seizure of a Mexican port, because arms and ammunition are contraband of war. They could have been stopped on board the German ship, and the lives of these marines and of those Mexicans and of thousands more who will inevitably fall in this war which has already begun might have been saved. There is nothing, on the other hand, to be gained by refraining from making this declaration, but everything to be lost by the United States being hampered in its dealings with foreign nations by the false position in which we are placed—and I say it without any captious criticism of the President, because this is not the time for captious criticism—the false position in which we are placed by the attempted artificial distinction between a war against Victoriano Huerta and a war against the Republic of Mexico. We will on account of that attempted attitude, which we can not possibly maintain, be denied by every foreign country the rights of a belligerent. There can be no state of belligerency between an individual in Mexico and the United States of America in international law, and there can be none, in fact, because Gen. Huerta, however illegal and nonjuridical may have been the means by which he seized the Government of Mexico or overthrew it, as he expressed it, nevertheless represents the Mexican people in this affair; what he has done has been done as the representative of the united Mexican States; and we might as well throw aside, and we ought to throw aside, that awkward, artificial, more or less absurd, attitude of pretending that we are not conducting a war against Mexico, and declare the actual fact as it exists.

Mr. President, when this resolution was introduced, I had intended to make a number of objections to it, but the time has gone by, in my judgment, when any objections as to form or any recounting of the blunders and mistakes of the Government of the United States, both in this administration and the last administration, in dealing with this question will be proper. When the Government of the United States notified the Republic of Mexico and the world that it would not protect its citizens in that Republic, but, on the contrary, advised them to leave Mexico for their protection, it sowed then the seeds which have grown into war. If, instead of advising the world and the American residents in Mexico that they could not depend upon the United States to protect them from injury, we had thrown around their forms the charmed cloak of our citizenship and proclaimed to Mexico, "Put but a lawless hand within its veil, we'll hurl upon your head the wrath of this great Republic," the wrongs and injuries which have festered and become aggravated from month to month during the last 18 months would not have been committed. I had intended to object to the grounds which have been presented here for the authority which the Congress is asked to confer upon the President, or to formally recognize as existing, because they are not the real grounds which make necessary this armed conflict which has already taken place and is now in progress between the two Republics.

Mr. President, if the only cause of controversy between the United States and Mexico was the temporary detention of a half dozen sailors of the American Navy, offensive as that was, the seizure of the customhouse at Vera Cruz and the slaughter of 200 Mexicans which has already taken place is more than a sufficient vindication of the American honor for that affront. Instead of authorizing the President to proceed with the Army and Navy of the United States to commit further acts of hostility against the Republic of Mexico, if there were nothing in this affair but what the President cited in his address, Congress had better be engaged in passing a resolution instructing the President to desist from hostilities, because we have gone far enough for revenge, even if the dispatches, that bear every evidence of verity, which we are receiving to-night are true.

But those are very far from being the only causes. Many of the real causes are recited in the substitute resolution which has been introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and back of that, far back of it, far more important, is that great international relation which the United States occupies growing out of what is called the Monroe doctrine. This is no time or occasion for a discussion of that great feature of American policy. I will say, however, in passing, that its significance and its importance can not be determined, as we see it so often attempted, by reading the declaration of President Monroe on the subject, or of other representatives of this Government at the time it was declared, because it is not a written document. It is a living principle, and it has grown with the growth of the American Republic, and it is not obsolete. It has been said that it has been the source of offense to the Latin-American Republics. On the other hand, it has been very truly said that but for it the Latin-American Republics would not exist. It is still a part of the unwritten Constitution of the United States, and under it we owe an obligation to the rest of the world.

The question was asked here to-night why Spain and England—and almost all other foreign countries might have been added—had not pursued with their accustomed vigor the defense of their nationals in Mexico during the recent disorders in that Republic. The answer was made that it was because this country requested it. The true answer is that it is because of the Monroe doctrine. We have assumed that responsibility and foreign nations depend upon us to live up to it. So it becomes a great world question which we have recognized and acquiesced in, aye, asserted, and foreign countries after protesting have recognized and acquiesced in—that the United States is indirectly responsible for the treatment of citizens of those countries in Mexico.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are we to understand that the United States holds itself responsible because of the Monroe doctrine for injuries to persons and damages to property committed in all the countries of this continent?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not so understand. I understand, and that is what I had reference to a moment ago, that growing out of the Monroe doctrine, which would forbid a foreign country from making, at least, territorial aggressions upon an American republic or from seeking restitution for injuries in that way—a certain responsibility devolves upon the United States to use its influence and under certain conditions its power to preserve orderly government in those countries.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand the matter, the Monroe doctrine would inhibit any European country or government from colonizing on the American Continent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was the original doctrine. A great many incidental obligations have grown out of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I agree with the Senator to the extent that doubtless that imposes upon us an obligation to use our good offices to protect the citizens of other countries who suffer in person or property in the countries that in a way we supervise, but I think it would be going too far to say that the United States could be held responsible for depredations upon property and lives to the extent of making reparation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly not to that extent. I agree entirely with the Senator from New Hampshire in that regard; but the situation which the Senator from New Hampshire himself so pointedly called attention to existing in the attitude of foreign countries toward the United States and toward Mexico at the present time illustrates what I intended to say. They are looking to the United States to act in whatever international action should be taken in the case of Mexico. It is due in part, of course, to our proximity. Of course a great Republic like the United States bordering upon Mexico is bound, regardless of any intention on the part of this Government, to become most deeply interested in the affairs of that country. It would be impossible to prevent our citizens from going there, from acquiring property there, from having their habitation there, and consequently, through the mere evolution of circumstances, we become involved with Mexico so far as our own citizens are concerned, and that adds in a measure to the tendency on the part of foreign countries to look to the United States for the preservation of reasonable international relations with that country.

Now, that being the case, Mr. President, suppose that it should be attempted to make war only upon Gen. Huerta. Why not look ahead until to-morrow and until the next day and until next week to ascertain the condition which will confront the United States in Mexico in the discharge of that great international responsibility. Does anybody suppose that the so-called constitutionalists in northern Mexico would recognize the rightful possession of central Mexico by the United States? There would be a state of war, inevitably growing out of the situation, between the United States and the so-called constitutionalists.

In the meantime we are allowing unlimited quantities of arms and ammunition, contraband of war even if shipped by a foreign country, to be shipped from our own soil across the northern border into Mexico, which are undoubtedly being accumulated and being distributed to a mobile army, which will confront us with these ammunitions and arms when we put ourselves into possession of Vera Cruz, to say nothing of the City of Mexico or other portions of central Mexico.

The resolution I expect to vote for, because, as I said, I think the time has gone by when forms are so significant; but it is somewhat peculiar that we have been asked to authorize the President to take this step without being advised even as to the outline of the attitude which the President would assume toward Mexico itself or toward the belligerent constitutionalist party in that Republic—asked to make war against an armed faction in Mexico and in the same resolution to declare our friendship for the Mexican people.

Does any Senator suppose that the seizure of Vera Cruz, the killing of 200 Mexicans in the city of Vera Cruz, and the guerrilla fighting which is going on in Vera Cruz, I suppose, at this moment, from the shelter of the houses, between the American sailors and Mexican soldiers is going to be looked upon—as this resolution declares and resolves—as a "disclaimer of any hostility to the Mexican people"?

If that language is left in the resolution, it will be quite absurd in the light of the existing conditions; but neither resolutions, nor statutes, for that matter, amount to very much in time of war; events are shaping the course of nations, and the time has come when, in whatever form we may be able to shape the resolution, we should give the assent of the American Congress to the use of the armed forces of the United States by the President.

So I shall vote for this resolution, regardless of the blunders which have been made by our diplomacy and the paradoxes which are contained in the resolution itself in the attempt to pretend that it is not a war when it is a war, and vest in the Chief Executive of this Nation the power and the responsibility to conduct a military campaign against Mexico, which he has already started. I do not criticize him for starting it when he did, because so long as it was evident that there were to be hostilities, I think he was perfectly right in preventing the landing of arms and munitions of war.

He may carry the war a little way or a great way. Neither this resolution nor a declaration of war would set any limit or boundary to it. He may confine it to a war against Gen. Huerta or he may extend it to a war, as I believe conditions will force him to do, against Carranza and Villa; but whatever he does, it is not the act of the American Congress. The American Congress will be compelled, because he is in the position of the only one who can represent us in this way, to support the President; but the responsibility will be his, not only for what he does but for how he does it. I, for one, only trust and pray that he may be given the wisdom to so use this great power, or that some one will be raised up to advise him so that he will use it, in a manner that will redound to the honor and the glory of the United States and ultimately to the peace and happiness of mankind.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the Senator from Indiana to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment reported by the committee there is a demand for the yeas and nays. Is the demand supported?

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the amendment to the amendment shall first be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire requests that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations shall be stated. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, on page 2, by striking out all of lines 5, 6, and 7 and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Be it further resolved, That a state of war exists between the United States of America and the United Mexican States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the following telephone message appears to have been sent by the Navy Department to the Senate:

Telephone message from Navy Department.

VERA CRUZ, 10 P. M.

Fletcher reports he is holding the customhouse, consulate, and cable office. Firing continues from near-by houses. No additional casualties. San Francisco has arrived in the inner harbor and the Chester will arrive at 11 p. m. Expect to hold present position to-night. Latest news Tampico all quiet.

Mr. President, I shall not discuss at this time, in this place, and under the present conditions of war, this joint resolution I shall vote for it whether or not it is amended by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. At another time, in another forum, and under other conditions I propose to discuss and shall discuss the joint resolution without reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment reported by the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out all of the House text of the joint resolution after the resolving clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States.

Be it further resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk, which I put in the form of a resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts tenders an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the joint resolution. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the joint resolution as reported by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

Resolved, etc., That the state of unrestrained violence and anarchy which exist in Mexico, the numerous unchecked and unpunished murders of American citizens and the spoliation of their property in that country, the impossibility of securing protection or redress by diplomatic methods in the absence of lawful or effective authority, the inability of Mexico to discharge its international obligations, the unprovoked insults and indignities inflicted upon the flag and the uniform of the United States by the armed forces in occupation of large parts of the Mexican territory have become intolerable.

That the self-respect and dignity of the United States and the duty to protect its citizens and its international rights require that such a course be followed in Mexico by our Government as to compel respect and observance of its rights.

That to this end the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for affronts and indignities committed against the United States; that the United States disclaim any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon them.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I offer the substitute which I presented yesterday afternoon as a substitute for both the original resolution and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. SHIVELY. That can not be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs to inform the Senator from California that under the rules of the Senate that is not a proper motion at this time, and the Chair is compelled to rule it out of order.

Mr. WORKS. Very well, Mr. President; I will wait until the pending substitute is acted upon, and then I will renew the motion.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, upon hearing read the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, as now framed, I desire to state that I can not vote for it, because I do not believe that the time has come when we should wage war upon Mexico. I do not believe that all the means of diplomacy have been exhausted, and the latter part of the resolution I can not indorse.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment is a substitute for the whole resolution as reported by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so tendered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is absent. The senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has a pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who is also absent. By an interchange of pairs it is agreed that the Senator from Maine and I shall both vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. CULBERSON'S name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] and his pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). Under the announcement of transfers made by the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] I am permitted to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when the name of Mr. MYERS was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I observe that he has not voted, and I therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when Mr. STONE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when Mr. TILLMAN'S name was called). The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is unavoidably absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GRONNA] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and his general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If the Senator from Delaware were present, he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is detained from the Senate and has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Borah	Crawford	Lodge	Sherman
Bradley	Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Dillingham	Nelson	Smoot
Brandegee	Fall	Norris	Sterling
Burleigh	Gallinger	Page	Sutherland
Catron	Goff	Penrose	Townsend
Clapp	Jones	Perkins	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Poindexter	Weeks
Colt	Lippitt	Root	Works

NAYS—47.

Ashurst	Johnson	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Kern	Pittman	Smith, Md.
Bristow	La Follette	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Lane	Ransdell	Swanson
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Thompson
Fletcher	Lewis	Saulsbury	Thornton
Gore	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Hollis	Newlands	Shields	West
Hughes	O'Gorman	Shively	Williams
James	Overman	Simmons

NOT VOTING—12.

Burton	du Pont	Myers	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Gronna	Oliver	Stone
Culberson	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman

So Mr. LODGE'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. WORKS. I now offer the substitute which I have already presented and which is on the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from California that the proposed substitute has been read. Does the Senator desire to have it reread for the information of the Senate, or will he state its contents?

Mr. WORKS. I think it has been read and is in the mind of Senators. I do not care to ask that it be read again.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Secretary will merely read the resolving part, it will be sufficient.

Mr. WORKS. If the resolving part is to be read, I think the preamble should be read as well.

Mr. BRISTOW. I withdraw the request for the reading.

The amendment proposed by Mr. WORKS to the amendment reported by the committee is as follows:

Whereas on the 9th day of April, 1914, a paymaster of the U. S. S. Dolphin landed at the Iturbide Bridge landing at Tampico with a whaleboat and boat's crew to take off certain supplies needed by his ship, and while engaged in loading the boat was arrested with his crew by an officer of what is known as the federal army of Mexico; and

Whereas the said city of Tampico was in possession of the federal army and under martial law and being besieged by what is known as the rebel or constitutional army; and

Whereas orders had been given by the commanding officer of the federal forces that no one be allowed to land at said Iturbide Bridge, but of which said officer and crew had no notice and it was claimed that our men had no right to land there; and

Whereas within an hour and a half after their arrest, without injury to them, the said commander of the federal forces ordered said paymaster and men discharged and they returned to their ship; and

Whereas the said commanding officer expressed his regret that the arrest had been made and apologized therefor to the admiral commanding our fleet; and

Whereas, notwithstanding said voluntary discharge of the men so arrested, and the apology, the admiral of our fleet demanded that a salute of 21 guns be made to our flag; and

Whereas said demand for a salute was referred to Victoriano Huerta, who then claimed to be the President of the Republic of Mexico and commander in chief of said federal army; and

Whereas the said Huerta claimed that our flag had not been insulted, and that apology had been made for said arrest, and expressed his regret at the occurrence; and

Whereas the President of the United States confirmed the action of the said admiral in demanding said salute, and insisted to the said Huerta that the same be given; and

Whereas the said Huerta still maintained his position, and refused to cause said salute to be fired; and

Whereas the Republic of Mexico is a friendly nation and torn with civil war; and

Whereas this Nation is an earnest advocate of peace between nations, and desires to avoid bloodshed or strife; and
Whereas the President has said in his message: "This Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstances be forced into war with the people of Mexico. Mexico is torn with civil strife. If we are to accept the tests of its own constitution, it has no government;" and
Whereas this Government has refused to recognize the said Huerta as President of said Republic of Mexico; and
Whereas if this be justified he has in none of the acts complained of acted for the people of Mexico; and
Whereas if we take action to vindicate our flag it must, if we are consistent, be against the said Huerta, individually, but must work to the injury of the Republic of Mexico and its people who have not done any act to the injury of our national honor or to insult our flag: Now therefore

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That as an evidence of our friendship and good will toward the people of Mexico, of the sincerity of our advocacy of peace among nations, and of our desire to maintain and perpetuate our peaceful and friendly relations with the Republic of Mexico, this Government accepts as sufficient reparation for any wrong that may have been done us by the arrest of said officer and men their discharge and the apology made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from California to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment, on line 2, page 2, by inserting, after the word "to," before the word "enforce," the words "protect American citizens and to": so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to protect American citizens and to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator will not gain anything by that. We will have the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator wish to discuss it?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; not at all. I simply ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then I withdraw my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, let me make an inquiry. I do not want to vote for any amendment or any resolution that justifies making war on Mexico. As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire embodies that part of the committee resolution which justifies war on Mexico.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I withdraw my motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let the language proposed to be inserted be read again, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Under the transfer of pairs heretofore announced, I vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when Mr. MYERS's name was called). I repeat the announcement made some time since in regard to my colleague [Mr. MYERS]. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 40, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—40.

Borah	Crawford	Lodge	Sherman
Bradley	Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Mich
Brady	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Brandegee	Fall	Nelson	Sterling
Bristow	Gallinger	Norris	Sutherland
Burleigh	Goff	Page	Townsend
Catron	Jones	Penrose	Warren
Clapp	Kenyon	Perkins	Weeks
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Poindexter	West
Colt	Lippitt	Root	Works

NAYS—43.

Ashurst	Johnson	Pittman	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Kern	Pomerene	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Lane	Ransdell	Smith, S. C.
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Swanson
Clarke, Ark.	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Thomas
Fletcher	Lewis	Saulsbury	Thompson
Gore	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Thornton
Hitchcock	Newlands	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hollis	O'Gorman	Shields	Walsh
Hughes	Overman	Shively	Williams
James	Owen	Simmons

NOT VOTING—12.

Burton	du Pont	Myers	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Gronna	Oliver	Stone
Culberson	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, after having lost that righteous amendment I have very little hope for the one I am about to offer, but I will venture to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, on page 2, in the proposed amendment of the committee, it is proposed to strike out the word "certain" where it appears, so that, if amended, it will read:

That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for affronts and indignities committed against the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust that amendment will be agreed to. I think it improves the text very much.

Mr. SHIVELY. It certainly will not be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Under the transfer of pairs heretofore announced I vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and its transfer, and vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when Mr. STONE's name was called). I renew my announcement of the enforced absence of my colleague [Mr. STONE] on account of illness. In his absence he is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KERN. I again announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If the Senator from South Carolina were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Borah	Crawford	Lodge	Smith, Mich.
Bradley	Cummins	McCumber	Smoot
Brady	Dillingham	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Fall	Norris	Sutherland
Bristow	Gallinger	Page	Townsend
Burleigh	Goff	Penrose	Warren
Catron	Jones	Perkins	Weeks
Clapp	Kenyon	Poindexter	Works
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Root
Colt	Lippitt	Sherman

NAYS—45.

Ashurst	Kern	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Lane	Ransdell	Swanson
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Reed	Thomas
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Saulsbury	Thornton
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Walsh
Hitchcock	Newlands	Shields	West
Hollis	O'Gorman	Shively	Williams
Hughes	Overman	Simmons
James	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Johnson	Pittman	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—12.

Burton	du Pont	Myers	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Gronna	Oliver	Stone
Culberson	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to follow line 7, page 2, of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment proposed by the committee it is proposed to insert:

Be it further resolved, That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over Mexico or any portion of the same, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of Mexico and every portion thereof to its people.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish the Senator from Indiana would let us have a vote directly on the amendment. We will not lose any time by it. I do not wish to take any time to discuss it. We might as well have the yeas and nays directly on the amendment.

Mr. SHIVELY. I am inclined to yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin. I withdraw my motion if we can get a vote right away.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay the amendment on the table is withdrawn. The Senator from Wisconsin asks for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and its transfer and the exchange of pairs with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], I vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). Under the transfer made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. WALSH (when Mr. MYERS's name was called). I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "nay." He is paired, as has been stated, with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). On account of my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] I refrain from voting. I would vote "yea" if at liberty to vote.

Mr. REED (when Mr. STONE's name was called). I wish to renew the announcement previously made in reference to my colleague [Mr. STONE], and to state that if present he would vote "nay." He stands paired on this vote with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 39, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Borah	Crawford	Lippitt	Smoot
Bradley	Cummins	Lodge	Sterling
Brady	Dillingham	McCumber	Sutherland
Brandegee	Fall	Nelson	Thomas
Bristow	Gallinger	Norris	Townsend
Burleigh	Goff	Page	Warren
Catron	Jones	Penrose	Weeks
Clapp	Kenyon	Perkins	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Root	Works
Colt	Lane	Smith, Mich.

NAYS—44.

Ashurst	Johnson	Pittman	Shively
Bankhead	Kern	Poindexter	Simmons
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Smith, Ga.
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Smith, Md.
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Reed	Smith, S. C.
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Swanson
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury	Thompson
Hitchcock	Newlands	Shafroth	Thornton
Hollis	O'Gorman	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hughes	Overman	Sherman	Walsh
James	Owen	Shields	West

NOT VOTING—12.

Burton	du Pont	Myers	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Gronna	Oliver	Stone
Culberson	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I stated in an address a very few hours ago that the purpose outlined by the President in his last address before the two Houses of Congress would inevitably lead to war, and that as war would be the only result from that action we ought to make our position clear as to the cause of that war. Therefore I joined most heartily in an attempt to secure an amendment that would present to the American people and to the world the real causes.

Since that time the President has pursued his policy and war has come upon the country. I am now brought to the question whether I shall vote to sustain the President in actual warfare, and although I should have voted a few hours ago against this resolution, under the circumstances, while our soldiers are on the firing line, I find it to be my duty as an American citizen and as I see it to vote to sustain the President, and I shall do so in reference to this resolution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have some statements here with reference to the views and conduct of former Ambassador Wilson in Mexico. In view of some editorial criticism that has been made of him, I feel that it would be just and fair that the statements should be printed in the RECORD. I ask for permission that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to printing the statements in the RECORD?

Mr. JAMES. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. JONES. I will take the time of the Senate to read these statements. I regret very much to have to do it, but I think they should be in the RECORD, in fairness and justice to the former ambassador.

Mr. JAMES. Will the Senator let us know what they are about? We do not know what the statements contain.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator I have read them, and there is nothing improper in them at all. It simply purports to be a fair statement of his action in connection with matters in Mexico made by reputable citizens there and also a statement by himself.

Mr. JAMES. Who prepared the record in Mexico?

Mr. JONES. A committee there. I think these matters are before the Committee on Foreign Relations. They are not secret matters at all. It is published by a committee, giving the names of all the people.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that former Ambassador Wilson could wait until to-morrow morning or this afternoon for his rejuvenation?

Mr. JONES. Certainly; but I prefer to put the matter in now.

Mr. JAMES. I have no objection, I will state to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I simply ask to put the matter in the RECORD, and I would rather have it in now before the debate is concluded.

Mr. SHIVELY. Unanimous consent is asked, and I hope it will be granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection. The Chair hears none, and consent is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Copy of recommendation made to the President by Henry Lane Wilson re the Mexican situation and read afterwards to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. This was attached to general memorandum on the situation:

RECOGNITION.

Recognition under the present circumstances can not be made with the same effects and the same results as immediately after the assumption of power by the new administration. It would be misconstrued, now, as a yielding to pressure and force, and would result in the loss of great prestige.

If recognition is accorded, it should be done in the following way:

First. By a preamble, recognizing the remarkable and unprecedented situation in Mexico, the desire of the United States to contribute to the restoration of order in a neighboring and friendly State, and the necessity, on account of the important matters daily pending between the two Governments, to establish full official relations with all of the benefits and obligations resulting therefrom.

Second. No recognition should be accorded unless the important international questions—like the Chamazal, the Colorado River, and the specific claims falling under a clear rule of international law—shall be immediately closed upon the basis presented by the Government of the United States and agreed to by the Government of Mexico in correspondence with the ambassador and verbally.

Third. Recognition should not be accorded unless an international claims commission, having jurisdiction over all kinds and classes of claims arising out of the revolutionary movements during the last three years, shall be admitted in principle by the Mexican Government.

Fourth. Recognition should not be accorded unless ample guaranty for the holding of a constitutional presidential election during the month of October shall be given, and this would involve the removal of the present minister of gobernacion, who is a pure creature of Huerta, and the substitution, therefore, of a Mexican of force and power, say Calero, who is thoroughly committed to the principle of constitutional government.

Fifth. Recognition should not be accorded unless the federal government is able to furnish evidence of its ability to restore peace and order to the twenty-sixth parallel.

Sixth. Recognition should not be accorded unless an arrangement can be made by which the American Government, in cooperation with the Mexican Government, will be permitted to cross the border and aid the federal authorities in restoration of order down to the twenty-sixth parallel, always giving ample stipulation for the retirement of our troops whenever order and peace have been reestablished, in the judgment of the United States and Mexican commissioners duly appointed.

Recognition accorded in this manner will restore our lost prestige, impress any foreign and native opinion in Mexico, and undoubtedly restore peace and prevent further bloodshed.

INTERVENTION.

If recognition is not accorded in some form or other, our duties as a civilized Nation, pledged to the world to preserve the peace and order of this hemisphere, point directly to immediate and effective intervention.

This should be done in the following way:

First. By discreetly removing the already decimated and ruined American population of Mexico.

Second. By the transfer of the charge of our diplomatic and consular establishments to the representatives of other powers.

Third. By the massing of our fleet in overwhelming proportions, aided by effective marine reserves, at every Mexican port on the Atlantic and Pacific.

Fourth. By the massing of our Army, fully equipped for invasion, at every strategic point lying on the border States, and the calling out of the reserves in all the border States.

Fifth. By the appointment of commissioners, one of whom should be the ambassador, another the general in chief of the Army, another the ranking officer of the investing fleet, and another a member of the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the Senate. The duty of this commission would be to seek, by a preliminary action, a reconciliation of all the contending forces in Mexico, with the understanding that their duty should be urgent, expeditious, and not detained by any dilatory methods, and with a further understanding that they should follow in the path of invasion, reestablishing the rule of law, and dispensing justice and order in the name of the United States.

Any invasion should be accompanied by a public statement that our purpose is not one of aggression, but that we are acting in the discharge of a duty to humanity and civilization, and that when once constitutional methods and practices are reestablished and firm government installed, our troops will retire to the United States.

FACTS SUBMITTED BY THE COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN COLONY TO PRESIDENT WILSON AND SECRETARY OF STATE BRYAN RELATIVE TO THE MEXICAN SITUATION, AND THE RECORD OF THE HON. HENRY LANE WILSON IN CONNECTION THEREWITH.

[Published by the committee.]

Executive committee of the American colony: C. H. M. y Agramonte, president, American colony; G. W. Cook, chairman committee; E. N. Brown, president National Railways; George J. McCarty, president Mercantile Banking Co. (Ltd.); W. F. Layer, president Sonora News Co.; J. N. Galbraith, general manager Waters-Pierce Oil Co.; C. F. De Ganahl, president Tampico Navigation Co.; Burton W. Wilson, attorney at law; J. E. Long, general manager Guerrero Iron & Timber Co.; T. J. Ryder, vice president Aguila Oil Co.; H. Walker, general manager Mexican Asphalt Co.; L. R. Wilfley, attorney at law; Paul Hudson, editor Mexican Herald; Fred Tackaberry, resident manager Pennsylvania Steel Co.

CONTENTS.

Copy of a letter addressed to the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson by Mr. George W. Cook, chairman of the executive committee.

Copy of a cable sent to His Excellency the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, by a committee of the American colony of Mexico City, requesting the retention of his excellency the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson as ambassador to Mexico.

Copy of the memorandum of the argument placed in the hands of His Excellency the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, and his excellency the Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, by the committee sent to Washington by the American colony of Mexico City, to request the Washington government to retain his excellency the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson as ambassador to Mexico.

CASE SUBMITTED.

MEXICO, D. F., April 30, 1913.

The Hon. HENRY LANE WILSON,
American Ambassador, Mexico, D. F.

DEAR SIR: At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Society of the American Colony of Mexico City I was directed to inform your excellency of certain steps which have been taken by the Americans residing in this city and throughout the Republic, looking to your retention at your present post of ambassador to Mexico.

Prior to the presidential election in the United States the Americans domiciled in Mexico generally entertained the hope that your excellency might be retained in your present position, even though the political complexion of the administration in Washington should be changed.

After the revolt which resulted in the overthrow of the Madero government our nationals here became convinced that it was not only desirable but essential to the interests of our Nation and our people in Mexico and to the conservation of existing cordial international relations that no change be made in the diplomatic representation of our Government to this country.

Acting upon this conviction the American citizens here resolved to take action with view to the accomplishment of this end.

The first step taken was to send a cablegram to President Wilson on the 5th of March, apprising him of the conditions obtaining here, with the suggestion that your excellency be retained here, together with our reasons therefor. This cable was signed by a committee of the leading American citizens in this city, as will be shown by the copy which is transmitted herewith.

Thereafter it was deemed advisable that a committee be sent to Washington to call upon the President and the Secretary of State, with view to laying before them more fully than could be done by cable the facts in regard to this situation. This committee proceeded to Washington, called upon the President and the Secretary of State, and explained to them fully the conditions prevailing in this country at the present time, and suggested that in view of your excellency's long experience in the diplomatic service, your ample knowledge of the Mexican situation as a result of your three years' service in this country, and especially in view of your knowledge of the conditions arising out of the overthrow of the Madero government, no change be made at this post at the present time.

At the request of the President and of the Secretary of State the committee filed a memorandum with these gentlemen covering the salient points brought out in the interviews of the committee with them, a copy of which is transmitted herewith.

Trusting that the action taken by your nationals in the Republic will meet with your approval and assuring your excellency of my high respect and esteem, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

GEORGE W. COOK,
Chairman of the Executive Committee.

[Telegram.]

MEXICO, March 4, 1913.

The PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned committee representing the American colony of the City of Mexico and virtually all Americans throughout this Republic urgently request Your Excellency to retain the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson in his present post as ambassador to Mexico for the following reasons:

The situation here resulting from the sudden and violent overthrow of the Madero government continues to be exceedingly critical. The invaluable services rendered by Ambassador Wilson to all foreigners during the recent crisis by aiding them in the preservation of their lives and properties and the important personal service which he rendered Gens. Huerta and Diaz after the fall of Madero place him in a position to contribute powerfully to the prompt and proper working out of the present situation in a manner satisfactory to all interests and especially useful to the present needs and to the future welfare of American interests in this country. It is a matter of common knowledge that after Madero's fall Huerta and Diaz were not in accord and a conflict between them threatened, which, had it occurred, would have been most disastrous. It was through the personal mediation of Ambassador Wilson that their differences were adjusted and harmony between them established. In consequence of this service he gained and continues to have the implicit confidence of both parties, and is daily, at their solicitation, rendering them useful aid looking to the immediate pacification of the country and the prompt reestablishment of a permanent Government.

Ambassador Wilson has been in Mexico since before the inception of the Madero revolution of 1910, and has served our Nation and our nationals here with ability and success. In view of the foregoing facts we unhesitatingly but respectfully submit the opinion that Ambassador Wilson is in a position to render a service to Mexico and all foreign interests, which a new man, however competent, could hardly be expected to accomplish.

The gravity of the present situation, from the standpoint of the future of American interests in Mexico, can not be overstated. It is not too much to say that under the complicated and delicate conditions which obtain here the announcement of a change in our diplomatic representation would be viewed by all elements of this community, both Mexican and foreign, with serious apprehension and alarm.

A committee representing this colony desires to call on you at an early date, and, with your permission, will lay before you at greater length the facts in connection with this situation and our reasons for making this request. Confidential:

C. H. M. Y AGRAMONTE, President American Colony.	C. F. DE GANAHL.
G. W. COOK, Chairman Committee.	BURTON W. WILSON.
E. N. BROWN.	J. E. LONG.
GEORGE J. MCCARTY.	T. J. RYDER.
W. F. LAYER.	H. WALKER.
J. N. GALBRAITH.	L. R. WILFLEY.
	PAUL HUDSON.
	FRED TACKABERRY.

MEMORANDUM OF ARGUMENT BEFORE THE HON. WILLIAM J. BRYAN, SECRETARY OF STATE, PRESENTED APRIL 2, 1913, BY A DELEGATION SENT BY THE AMERICAN CITIZENS OF THE CITY OF MEXICO TO REQUEST OF THE WASHINGTON GOVERNMENT THE RETENTION OF THE HON. HENRY LANE WILSON AS AMERICAN AMBASSADOR TO MEXICO. THIS MEMORANDUM WAS AFTERWARDS LEFT WITH THE PRESIDENT.

The chairman of the delegation addressed Mr. Secretary Bryan as follows:

"Mr. Secretary, the delegation which has the honor to address you for the purpose of requesting the retention of the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson in the post which he now occupies as American ambassador to Mexico is composed of professional and business men who have been sent here for this specific purpose by the American citizens of the City of Mexico, as per our credentials, which have already been laid before you. The mere fact that these gentlemen have been willing to undertake a journey of over 3,000 miles, occupying seven days and seven nights, and have sacrificed their business interests and time to undertake this mission, is a substantial evidence of the sincerity of purpose and depth of conviction which has induced them to come on this errand.

"If we request at your hands the retention of Ambassador Wilson, notwithstanding the recent change in the political administration at Washington, we realize that we must present to you sufficient and convincing reasons for our request and must explain to you why we believe that no other American, be he ever so able and patriotic, can hope to exercise the same beneficent influence in connection with the existing critical state of affairs in Mexico as can our present ambassador, Mr. Wilson. That sufficient and convincing reasons exist no American citizen who passed through the horrors of the recent bombardment and who was cognizant of the events which were transpiring and the frightful possibilities of their tragic issue will deny.

For the nine days prior to the last day of the bombardment the ambassador dedicated and limited his activities to efforts to ameliorate the horrible conditions prevailing in the Mexican capital; to rescuing Americans and other foreigners whose homes were within the zone of the heaviest firing; to providing succor and refuge for such American citizens as found themselves in want of food or shelter, owing to the sudden and unexpected outbreak of hostilities; to organizing a guard to patrol the district inhabited by Americans, and to be ready to offer assistance and protection in case of attack; to providing a suitable hospital with the requisite medical and nursing facilities for any who might be wounded; to establishing banking facilities in the embassy for such Americans as might find themselves in need of funds; to organizing a corps of intrepid messengers for the carrying of cablegrams and letters from the embassy to the cable and post offices in the heart of the city, which service was open to all Americans and foreigners; and for the transmission of messages from the diplomatic corps to the Mexican Government authorities and the leaders of the two hostile camps; to allaying the fears and anxieties of his countrymen and giving them wise counsel as they gathered in large numbers day after day at the embassy; and the keeping in constant touch and communication with the other members of the diplomatic corps in the Mexican capital, who naturally looked to him as their dean for leadership.

The last day of the "bloody 10 days," as the period of the bombardment is now designated by the Mexicans, was the critical day which saw the arrest and imprisonment of President Madero and his cabinet, an event which created a situation giving rise to intense anxiety and well-grounded fear for its results. The Mexican nation suddenly found itself practically without a government. A part of the Federal army under the control of Gen. Huerta was in possession of the palace and the greater part of the Mexican capital. Another part of the Federal army, headed by Gen. Felix Diaz, was still in possession of the arsenal, with its guns and large reserve stores of ammunition. The residents of Mexico, with direst forebodings, breathlessly awaited the outcome. Would Gen. Huerta and Gen. Diaz come to a clash, continue their bombardment and fight out the battle to its bitter end, thus accentuating the dangers and prolonging the horrible situation already existing in the capital, or could these two contending generals, up to this time embroiled in a fierce and bloody fight, be induced to come together to compose their differences and to arrive at an agreement which would put an end to the wretched spectacle of a battle in the heart of a capital city, begun without notice to noncombatants and continued without giving them a definite opportunity to withdraw from the city to points of safety? Conditions in the city were becoming unbearable. The dead were unburied, and in some instances were burned in the streets. Provisions had soared skyward in price, and in many places could not be obtained at any price. Milk for the children, medical attention for the sick, religious consolation for the dying all were difficult to be obtained. The city was absolutely without police protection; water had been cut off in certain parts of the city; the sewers were blocked for lack of flushing; the streets at night were dark, owing to the cutting and destruction of the electric wires; the workingmen were out of employment and had not been paid; hunger riots were in prospect; looting had already begun; and in the absence of police protection the uprising of the mob, with all its attendant horrors, seemed inevitable.

The cry on all sides among foreigners and Mexicans alike was, What can be done to save the situation? It was at this juncture that our American ambassador rose nobly to the demands of the occasion, demonstrated his great efficiency and ability, and brought the two contending generals together in a conference at the American embassy, the place designated by them both as the only place in which they were willing to meet for conference. This conference lasted for several hours, and at various critical points in the discussion it seemed inevitable that it was destined to break up without reaching the agreement so necessary for putting an end to a situation replete with horrors. It is a fact of common knowledge that the skillful mediation of our ambassador during these long hours of conference, when everything hung in the balance, and the personal confidence which he inspired in both the opposing generals, finally brought about the agreement between them, which was then and there reduced to writing, read before witnesses summoned for that purpose, signed by Gens. Huerta and Diaz, and delivered to the ambassador for safe-keeping.

This consummation so devoutly wished for by all the inhabitants of Mexico constituted a diplomatic triumph of the first order for our ambassador, not only by reason of the immediate results obtained, which were the cessation of the combat, the immediate renewal of the policing and municipal service of the city, the giving of an opportunity to the inhabitants who had left the city to return thereto and take up their peaceful occupations, the opening up of ways and means to obtain food for the suffering people, the opportunity for the burial of the dead which had accumulated in such numbers as to threaten a pestilence, and the alleviation of all the horrors resultant upon the long-continued hostilities, but over and above all, because the effective mediation of our ambassador, and the confidence which he inspired in Gens. Huerta and Diaz during the conduct of these negotiations, place him in a unique position in connection with the solution of all these difficulties and enable him, more than any other man possibly could, to exercise a strong moral influence upon all the parties to this agreement to carry it out in all its expressed and implied terms.

If we are right in our deduction as above expressed, the prestige which our ambassador in Mexico now enjoys with the parties in actual power and his personal acceptability to them and influence upon them render him indispensable to the satisfactory solution of the Mexican situation and the maintenance of peace so long as the present critical conditions in Mexico prevail.

It is a well-known fact in connection with the Mexican character that it is extremely slow to give its confidence to an individual, but that once an individual has obtained that confidence, it is given to him in full measure, and carries with it a power to exercise influence which can not be transferred to a third party and is more potent in its effect than any authority or power which may be behind the personality. In other words, the personality and the personal equation are of the greatest importance in dealing successfully with the Mexican people.

The fact that Mr. Wilson has for over three years discharged the duties of American ambassador in Mexico gives him an experience that is invaluable under the existing circumstances, and which entirely differentiates him from any new man, however able, who might succeed him at the present time. The great value of this experience is too patent to require further comment.

We pass with a word the facts of the ambassador's long experience of over 16 years in the American Diplomatic Service; his recognized ability, and his fidelity and assiduity in the discharge of his duties, amply attested by his dispatches to the State Department; his character as a cultivated gentleman of broad sympathies; and his accessibility to all his countrymen; the refined and elevating atmosphere of the embassy in Mexico; and the charming tact and social accomplishments of Mrs. Wilson.

The facts above set forth and our deductions from them constitute the basis of our sincere and earnest belief that the retention of Mr. Henry Lane Wilson as American ambassador in Mexico, pending a satisfactory solution of the Mexican situation, will prove a most important factor not only in the protection of the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners in Mexico, but also in the continuance of the friendly international relations now existing between the two countries and the avoidance of any sudden and unfortunate event which might cause those relations to be strained or even ruptured, a contingency which would involve both countries in difficulties too painful to contemplate.

Since our arrival in Washington our attention has been called to certain charges against Ambassador Wilson published in the public press. In Exhibit G, attached to this memorandum, we set forth these charges and our replies thereto.

Mr. Secretary, in conclusion, permit us to say that, as American citizens resident in the Republic of Mexico, we highly appreciate the hospitality and good will of the Mexican people toward our fellow countrymen and ourselves personally, and recognize to the fullest extent the impropriety of our making any comment upon Mexican politics; and should anything we have said to you herein be susceptible of a construction contrary to such a view of the proprieties of the cases we expressly disclaim any intention to that end.

Permit us to convey to you our thanks for your kind reception and attentive hearing.

The facts in connection with the rebellion of February, 1913 which resulted in the overthrow of the government of President Madero by Gen. Felix Diaz, are now historical and are set forth in Exhibit A, hereto attached.

The conduct of the American ambassador, the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, throughout the period of these revolutionary troubles was such as to win for him the highest praise not only from the Americans in Mexico, but also from the nationals of other foreign countries resident in Mexico and the Mexicans themselves.

The universal appreciation of the undoubted fact that Ambassador Wilson, by his skillful and efficient handling of a most difficult situation, had been instrumental in bringing about a termination of the bombardment in the City of Mexico, thereby saving life and avoiding a continuation of the destruction of property, resulted in a call, issued by the president of the American colony, for a mass meeting of American citizens in Mexico. This mass meeting was the largest and most enthusiastic of any similar meeting ever held by Americans in Mexico, and after many eulogies upon the conduct of affairs by the ambassador during the bloody 10 days of the bombardment appropriate and laudatory resolutions were unanimously passed, as set forth in Exhibit B, hereto attached.

In harmony with the same spirit which led to the call for the mass meeting, another call was issued to over 50 of the leading American citizens in Mexico City, asking them to meet for a conference with a view to determining what action should be taken by them for the purpose of conserving the interests of the Americans in Mexico and the mutual welfare of that good feeling between both peoples (Americans and Mexicans). See Exhibit C, hereto attached.

In pursuance to this call some 50 American citizens met for conference, and after a prolonged discussion it was the unanimous opinion of this conference that it would be "highly conducive to the interests of Americans in Mexico and to the continuance of the extremely cordial relations now existing between the American and Mexican Nations if the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson were to be continued in the position of American ambassador near the Mexican Government, which position he has filled with such marked efficiency and with such great honor to his country." This opinion was embodied in a resolution which was unanimously adopted. See Exhibit D, hereto attached.

For the purpose of giving effect to the wishes of this conference an executive committee of 18 was appointed with power and with instructions to proceed in such manner as it might deem best to accomplish the object desired. See names of committee in Exhibit E, hereto attached.

This executive committee at once prepared and sent the President of the United States a cablegram setting forth the views and wishes of the American citizens in Mexico in regard to the retention of the present ambassador, and likewise named a special delegation to proceed to Washington and lay before President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan the view of the American citizens in Mexico on this subject and their reasons therefor. The names of the delegation which came to Washington are set forth in Exhibit F, hereto attached.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE W. COOK, Chairman.

A letter dated March 12, 1913, directed by the American clergymen of Mexico City to Ambassador Wilson, protesting against certain newspaper attacks made upon him and expressing approval of his conduct during the bombardment is hereto attached and marked "Exhibit H."

A letter signed by members of the British colony expressing their appreciation of the able manner in which Ambassador Wilson handled the delicate situation created by the bombardment of the city is attached herewith and marked "Exhibit I."

A resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association of the City of Mexico commending Ambassador Wilson for his conduct during the recent disturbance in the city is attached hereto and marked Exhibit J.

A copy of the resolutions adopted by the Mexico Society of New York congratulating the ambassador on the able discharge of his duties during the recent trouble is hereto attached and marked Exhibit K.

There were also addressed to the ambassador letters from the British, German, and Spanish ministers and the French chargé d'affaires expressing thanks for the aid rendered foreign citizens by the American embassy and congratulating Ambassador Wilson for his efforts to restore peace and order during the bombardment of Mexico City. These communications, on account of their essentially private and personal character, are not attached hereto.

EXHIBIT A.

CHRONOLOGICAL STATEMENT OF EVENTS IN MEXICO CITY.

February 9 to February 18, 1913.

Sunday, February 9, 1913: The two artillery regiments in Mexico City and the cadets of the Tlalpam Military School "declare" for Gen. Felix Diaz and liberate him and Gen. Reyes from prison in Mexico City.

Gen. Reyes is killed in an attempt to capture the National Palace. In the shooting, over 500 innocent people and churchgoers lose their lives in the park in front of the palace and cathedral.

President Madero arrives at the palace from Chapultepec, 3 miles to the west. Goes to palace on horseback with small guard. Twelve hundred soldiers, cavalry and infantry, follow later and take up position in the palace.

The rebelling troops under Felix Diaz take the arsenal, or citadel, containing all the large cannon and all reserve arms and ammunition of the nation. It is a low building and constructed for defense, with only broken streets leading to it.

At night President Madero goes to Cuernavaca for reinforcements. Nobody in the city expects a bombardment.

Monday, February 10, 1913: A day of uncertainty, with a little rifle fighting between outposts. Felix Diaz makes no move other than to secure provisions, giving as his reason that he will not accept the responsibility of beginning a battle in a city of 450,000 inhabitants. Gen. Huerta who had been deprived of his command and had opposed the Maderos recently, made commander in chief of the government forces.

No notice of impending bombardment given by either party.

American ambassador publishes notice to Americans to keep in safe places, and requests Government to protect foreign colonies. Police force entirely disappears. Patrols of Americans and other foreigners established in streets.

Tuesday, February 11, 1913: Bombardment of the citadel begins without warning to the people of the city. Over 400 soldiers killed in assaults on the citadel in narrow streets. Shell fire in many angles from the citadel. Two American women killed in their homes. Reinforcements to the Government arrive from the Zapata country, and ammunition for the Government arrives from Vera Cruz.

American ambassador asks Government and revolutionists to respect noncombatants. Republishes warning to Americans.

Midnight: All patients of English hospital ordered out. Battery set up near by.

Wednesday, February 12, 1913: Bombardment and assault continue. Battery of 12 guns set up about a quarter of a mile from the embassy, but out of line. Its shells begin to destroy homes of Americans and others. The firing temporarily stopped at request of embassy, and over twelve hundred people in danger removed to houses in the embassy district, where they are cared for by embassy service organized since beginning of bombardment to meet the emergency. Cable office, post office, and hospital established at embassy. Messenger service to cable office started.

Ambassador and German and Spanish ministers go through the firing line to palace, where they request President to have more regard for foreign lives and property. Go later with British minister to citadel, where they make the same request of Gen. Diaz.

Replies not entirely satisfactory. Apparent that bombardment must continue. Many noncombatants killed. Bodies burned in the streets and in piles outside of town. Red Cross and White Cross services abolished. Surgeons subsequently protected by American flag.

Thursday, February 13, 1913: Bombardment continues. News of sailing of American warships arrives and makes good impression. Bombardment subsides in the evening.

Friday, February 14, 1913: Bombardment renewed in morning. Senate convenes and appoints a committee to wait on the President to request his resignation as the only method to end the fierce battle in the city. President Madero refuses to receive them. Spanish minister, members of the cabinet, and other delegations reported to be making the same request. Former President da la Barra tries to mediate the matter. His attendant killed at his side.

Gen. Blanquet is expected to arrive from Toluca, but does not appear. Troops brought in from as far north as Monterey.

Infantry and cavalry assaults on citadel becoming rarer. Embassy automobile held up by men in army uniforms and robbed of $300.

Saturday, February 15, 1913: Bombardment continued. Shells striking new points in town. Government soldiers reported to be going over to Felix Diaz.

Ambassador makes another automobile trip to palace, and returns with promise of President to respect embassy district as neutral zone; to remove soldiers stationed on roof of a school to which American women refugees had been sent; to give proper notice in case of opening fire in localities occupied by foreigners; to cooperate in establishment of centers for distribution of bread to the poor; and to grant an armistice of 24 hours for the removal of all those in the danger zone.

Messenger (Capt. Burnside) sent to notify Gen. Diaz of agreement. He orally consents to armistice, asking Government to fix the time.

Americans and foreigners notified of arrangement. More optimistic feeling produced.

Pay day: Practically no workmen paid off. This is a serious phase of situation.

Sunday, February 16, 1913: Fast work done removing families, some of which were marooned without food or water for days. Armistice broken at 10.30 and fire resumed. Government accuses revolutionists of opening fire. Revolutionists accuse Government of placing guns during armistice, necessitating fire. Fighting in residential district in afternoon.

Battery is set up one block from embassy. Ambassador protests, and fire is held until he can communicate with palace. Messenger returns with order from Gen. Huerta for removal of battery. Rurales in district refusing requests for passage through lines issued by embassy for humanitarian purposes.

Monday, February 17, 1913: Bombardment continues, but government soldiers, many of them drunk, broken into small bands all over town, from either fatigue, unwillingness to join the storming parties, or by order from superiors for fear of defection in masses. Evident that soldiers are not enthusiastic about attacking. Outposts from citadel fighting all day near embassy, with rural police in the streets. Bodies burning all over town.

Gen. Blanquet, with 1,800 men, known to have arrived from Toluca, but does not go into action, this exciting comment, as he is an aggressive soldier and his men are fresh.

Secretary of relations comes to embassy to say that a battery must be planted near by, and offering ambassador a temporary embassy in a suburb and transportation thereto with army wagons. Ambassador asks if the many refugees in the district will also be removed and cared for. As the secretary can not assure him of this, the ambassador refuses to go and leave his people to their fate, and protests against the proposed violation of the neutral zone. Result, no battery is placed there, and refugees are saved. This act of Mr. Wilson saved the lives of hundreds of people.

General feeling in all quarters since morning is that the affair is nearly ended. Government ammunition reported nearly exhausted. Soldiers unpaid and unfed.

At night sharpshooters firing on American patrol. Streets unsafe. Drunkenness and looting among many bands of detached soldiers increasing. Smell of burning bodies pervading city. Disintegration manifest.

Tuesday, February 18, 1913: Bombardment continues, but much slackened. More infantry fire extending from the citadel. Late in the day a messenger comes from the palace with a letter from Gen. Huerta to the diplomatic corps, reporting that he has arrested the President in the interest of humanity, and states that he desires to end the battle. Also requests diplomatic corps to notify Gen. Diaz that he desires a conference.

Jubilation in center of town, but rifle fighting continues around the citadel and in residential district.

Ambassador sends messenger to citadel reporting arrest of Madero and conveying Huerta's request for a conference. Diaz thanks messenger for this notice, and says he will meet Huerta only in the embassy. Suspicion naturally then existed between the leaders in the 10-day battle. Messenger goes to palace and notifies Gen. Huerta, who agrees to meet Gen. Diaz in the embassy.

At about 9 p. m. Huerta arrives at embassy. A messenger is sent to citadel to notify Diaz, who returns to embassy with him.

Negotiations continue until nearly morning, when, after three failures to agree, smoothed out by diplomacy of the ambassador, whom both request to remain with them, they come to terms; written memorandum of agreement read before witnesses in the embassy and left with Mr. Wilson.

Police service immediately restored. Looting stopped, and dead collected from streets.

Wednesday, February 19, 1913: City at peace and assuming normal conditions for first time in 10 days. Ambassador cheered in the streets and Americans thanked for their part in amelioration of conditions.

Ambassador, for diplomatic corps, requests government assurance that the life of Madero will be spared. Assurance given.

Mrs. Madero and Mrs. Pino Suarez come to embassy and ask ambassador to intercede for the lives of their husbands. Government assurance communicated to them, and at their request another appeal for protection for the men is made to the officers of the Government.

Laborers in the city return to work. Relief committee of the embassy begins distribution of funds and food.

EXHIBIT B.

RESOLUTIONS OF MASS MEETING OF AMERICAN COLONY PASSED ON FEBRUARY 28, 1913.

Whereas during the 10 days from February 9 to 18 this city was the theater of a bitter strife between contending forces, the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners, as well as of Mexican residents, were gravely imperiled by shot and shell, several Americans being killed and wounded. Under the existing conditions Americans naturally looked to their national representative for aid and protection, and they were not disappointed. Our ambassador, the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, caused headquarters for the colony to be established at the American Embassy, and in concert with his staff of faithful assistants was untiring in his devotion to the best interests of not only his own countrymen but of the many foreigners of other nations who came to the embassy for aid and comfort. In recognition of those efforts, which undoubtedly saved the lives of many defenseless Americans: Be it

Resolved, That the American colony recognizes the fact that to the American ambassador, Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, it owes a debt of gratitude the magnitude of which can not be expressed in words, but which will be retained as a cherished memory of the noble and patriotic services rendered under most trying conditions, which stamp him as an American of whom his countrymen may well feel proud, and to whom the American colony extends this humble token of its appreciation.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be engrossed and presented to Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, ambassador of the United States, and that a copy also be sent to the State Department at Washington.

EXHIBIT C.

CALL FOR CONFERENCE OF 50 OR MORE LEADING AMERICANS IN MEXICO.

MEXICO, February 27, 1913.

Mr. ——— ———:

In view of the pending change in the administration at Washington, of the recent change in the Government of Mexico, and of the bearing which both of these events may have upon American interests in this country, it has been thought that it would be well for a considerable number of Americans in Mexico to meet for a conference, with a view to determining as to what action should be taken by them for the purpose of best conserving the interests of Americans in Mexico and the mutual welfare and good feeling between both peoples.

You are therefore requested to meet with other fellow Americans, who have likewise been invited to this conference, at the American Club on Saturday, March 1, at 12 noon.

Yours, truly,

C. H. M. Y AGRAMONTE.
E. N. BROWN.
G. W. COOK.
C. F. DE GANAHL.
J. E. LONG.

EXHIBIT D.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE CONFERENCE.

Whereas 50 or more American citizens in the City of Mexico, irrespective of political affiliations, have met this day to confer in regard to matters of great import to Americans and American interests in the Republic of Mexico; and

Whereas the unanimous opinion of this gathering is that it will be highly conducive to the interests of Americans in Mexico and to the continuance of the extremely cordial relations now existing between the American and Mexican nations if the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson be continued in the position of American ambassador near the Mexican Government, which position he has filled with such marked efficiency and with such great honor to his country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this gathering, embodying as it does many of the representative American men and interests in Mexico, believes that the record for patriotism and efficiency made by Ambassador Wilson during his incumbency justifies and demands that he be continued in this high office and hereby pledges itself to work vigorously to that end.

EXHIBIT E.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF 18 APPOINTED BY CHAIRMAN OF THE CONFERENCE TO CARRY OUT PURPOSE OF THE RESOLUTION SET FORTH.

G. W. Cook, chairman; C. H. M. y Agramonte, W. F. Layer, C. F. de Ganahl, B. W. Wilson, T. J. Ryder, Paul Hudson, H. C. Wagner, F. H. Tackaberry, E. N. Brown, G. J. McCarty, J. N. Galbraith, E. L. Beck, J. E. Long, H. Walker, L. R. Wilfley, C. R. Hudson.

EXHIBIT F.

NAMES OF DELEGATES SENT TO WASHINGTON.

George W. Cook, chairman, member of New York bar, capitalist and merchant, 23 years in Mexico.

Burton W. Wilson, member of New York bar, senior member of the law firm of Wilson & Baz, 7 years in Mexico.

H. Walker, member of New York bar, manager of construction company in Mexico, 10 years in Mexico.

F. H. Tackaberry, Mexican representative of the Pennsylvania Steel Co. and other American manufacturers of railway supplies, 12 years in Mexico.

C. L. Seeger, merchant, 31 years in Mexico.

Charles F. de Ganahl, president of Tampico Navigation Co. and sugar planter, 24 years in Mexico.

EXHIBIT G.

Extracts from the New York World of March 7, 1913:

"Information which has filtered into Washington from numerous sources in Mexico lays on the State Department and Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson responsibility for the overthrow of the Madero government. From the Mexican capital these charges are made:

"'That Ambassador Wilson threw the whole influence of the American Government into the balance against Madero.

"'That he gave encouragement and indirect aid to the traitorous Mexican generals so openly as to constitute the most pernicious form of diplomatic meddling.

"'That he used other foreign diplomats as his facile instruments in attempting to coerce Madero to resign.

"'That he either possessed advance information of the plot of Huerta and Blanquet to turn traitors to Madero or displayed amazing prescience in his official dispatches predicting Madero's downfall the night before it occurred.

"'The charges are also made that Huerta was in frequent conferences with the American ambassador before the palace coup d'état.

"'That news of the success of the blow was conveyed by the ambassador's messenger to Felix Diaz with the suggestion that Huerta and Diaz should come to terms.

"'That Diaz, distrustful of Huerta, insisted upon an American escort and the protection of the American flag on his trip to confer with Huerta in the embassy.

Answers to the World's charges:

Not true. He was convinced that the Madero government was in difficulties and that its attitude toward the protection of Americans and their property was unsatisfactory and failed to produce the results that justice demanded.

Not true. He was careful even to the extent of refusing passports through the lines during the bombardment to Americans whom he suspected of taking sides in any way. His activities with the officers of the army were limited to arrangements of armistices and neutral zones. He did see Gen. Huerta once in these humanitarian matters, risking his life to do so, and treated the matter with Gen. Huerta in company with President Madero. Furthermore, on these trips he was accompanied by other foreign representatives. He never saw Gen. Huerta alone.

This statement is manifestly ridiculous. The British, German, and Spanish ministers in Mexico are not men of the type to be used as "facile instruments." The attempts of the Spanish minister, Señor Cologan, to induce the President to resign were made on his own initiative after consultation with other members of the diplomatic corps and with the humanitarian desire to avoid further loss of life.

It was a matter of common rumor throughout the city that serious defections were about to occur among the generals who were supporting President Madero, and a color of truth was given to those rumors by the attitude of Gen. Blanquet, the number of days he consumed in bringing his troops from Toluca to the City of Mexico, and his inactivity after arriving in the capital. It was further rumored that members of the Senate were actively engaged in trying to bring about the resignation of President Madero. It was impossible for the ambassador to be blind and deaf to all that any Spanish-speaking foreigner saw or heard, and had he failed to notify the State Department of what all intelligent men believed to be impending, we submit that he would have been delinquent in his duty.

The truth is that Ambassador Wilson saw Gen. Huerta only once prior to the conference between Gens. Huerta and Diaz on February 18, and on this one occasion he was accompanied by other members of the diplomatic corps and conferred with President Madero and Gen. Huerta jointly in the important matter of an armistice for the removal of the families in peril.

This is perfectly true. In sending this advice to Gen. Diaz the ambassador rendered a most important service to the residents of Mexico City, as this information opened up the way to negotiations for the cessation of hostilities. Gen. Diaz expressed his appreciation of this act of the ambassador and its humanitarian motive, and added that he would agree to meet Gen. Huerta at the American Embassy and there only. As the city was divided into two hostile camps, the neutral ground of the American Embassy was manifestly the suitable place for the meeting of the opposing generals, and especially so in view of the fact that the ambassador was the dean of the diplomatic corps and commanded the respect and confidence of all parties.

Not true. The ambassador sent a messenger in an automobile to advise Gen. Diaz that Gen. Huerta had arrived at the embassy and was awaiting him, and this messenger, Dr. Ryan, well known to Gen. Diaz by reason of his rescue work during the battle, returned to the embassy accompanied by Gen. Diaz. Dr. Ryan's automobile did not fly the American flag on the return trip with Gen. Diaz.

"'That Ambassador Wilson, brusque, arrogant, and unsympathetic with the Mexicans, was for months openly hostile to Madero and an avowed partisan of Felix Diaz.

"'That without the encouragement and approval of the American ambassador Huerta would never have been turned traitor and that Madero never would have been defeated without outside interference.

"'That Ambassador Wilson's prompt recommendation that the United States recognize the new Government was precipitate and undiplomatic.

"'That his haste to seal with his approval the weird official explanations of the execution of the Maderos and Pino Suarez has further prejudiced Mexicans against Americans.

"'While much of the information reaching Washington discredits any assertion that Ambassador Wilson acted with explicit instructions from the State Department, it all lays stress on the prevalence in Mexico City of the impression that he was only executing the policy of the Taft administration.

It is asserted that this impression is apparently fixed firmly in the public mind in Mexico City, not only among natives but among foreign residents.

Some of the narrations of events in Mexico City approach the hysterical in expressing fear that irreparable damage has been done to the diplomatic and commercial prestige of the United States in Latin America. This element pictures rage and resentment spreading throughout Central and South America, eventually reacting upon all our diplomatic and commercial relations with those countries.

Some assert that the common interpretation of Ambassador Wilson's interference in the internal troubles of Mexico is that it was only the forerunner of a policy of coercion which the United States might be expected to exercise from this time on.

Others offering information or advice are less radical in their conclusions, though the consensus

Ambassador Wilson is neither brusque, arrogant, nor unsympathetic. He is a gentleman in conduct and sentiments, both with Mexicans and all other people. An examination of the dispatches of the ambassador and the various consuls in Mexico to the State Department will undoubtedly disclose whether or not he was justified in the austere demeanor he at times displayed in the question of the protection and welfare of the Americans in Mexico.

Prior to the visit of the ambassador to Gen. Felix Diaz on Wednesday, February 12, he had never seen Gen. Diaz, and his relations with Gen. Diaz had been limited to a single correspondence with him in regard to police protection in the year of 1910, when Gen. Diaz was chief of police of the Federal District. It is untrue that the ambassador was a partisan in any sense of the word.

It is outside our province to either characterize or comment upon the conduct or motive of Gen. Huerta and his companions in arms. But Gen. Huerta never solicited nor received the encouragement and approval of the American ambassador.

If it is a fact that Ambassador Wilson recommended the recognition of the new Government, we deem it strictly within the province of the State Department to pass judgment upon his action, as that department fully appreciates the functions and duties of an ambassador.

This is a misstatement of the case. An official statement was issued by the Mexican Government in regard to the deaths of ex-President Madero and ex-Vice President Pino Suarez. What grounds had Ambassador Wilson for refusing to accept the Government's version of this affair? What proofs could he possibly produce as a basis for denial of the Government's version? So far as we know, the Government's version of this affair has not been disproven up to date. We are not aware that the ambassador's attitude toward the Government's version of these deaths has had any effect whatsoever upon the relations of Mexicans and Americans. Can we believe that such be the case had the ambassador refused to accept the official version?

The members of this delegation believe that they are extensively acquainted with the people of Mexico City and in the entire Republic, and limit themselves to saying that they have never met a single individual who has expressed the fears described in this paragraph.

Since it is not true that any improper interference on the part of Ambassador Wilson in the internal troubles of Mexico, and since we have never heard of any such "interpretation" as that referred to, we assert on the best of our information and belief that no such opinion as is expressed in the paragraphs under reply exists among either foreigners or Mexicans in Mexico.

of their opinions appears to be that he coup d'état of Gen. Huerta could not have succeeded without the approval if not the encouragement of the American ambassador.

EXHIBIT H.

LETTER FROM AMERICAN CLERGYMEN OF MEXICO CITY.

MEXICO CITY, March 15, 1913.

The Hon. HENRY LANE WILSON,
The United States Ambassador, Mexico City.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of American clergymen of the City of Mexico, held this day, our attention was called by different members of the body to articles recently appearing in certain American newspapers which very seriously and unjustly reflected upon your character and official conduct during the trying and tragic ordeal through which we all passed in the month of February.

Therefore we, the undersigned, desire to express our surprise and indignation at the tenor of such unjustifiable attacks, since it was known to us that you put forth extraordinary efforts to save the lives of the late unfortunate President and Vice President of this Republic; that you offered your own home as a place of refuge to several branches of their respective families; that within four hours after the fall of the Madero government you summoned to the embassy Gens. Huerta and Diaz, chiefs of the forces contending in the city, and succeeded in bringing them to an agreement which produced an immediate cessation of hostilities and the speedy restoration of guarantees of life and property in the city; that during the combat you used your best influences to secure the establishment of a neutral zone and the cessation of hostilities within the city limits; that you, with the aid of the diplomatic corps, secured an armistice of 12 hours; and, furthermore, that you established within the embassy a bureau for the assistance of refugees, an automobile service for the removal of noncombatants from the most dangerous sections of the city, branches of the cable and post office, a temporary bank, an emergency hospital, a bureau of supplies for your own country people, which good offices greatly alleviated the sufferings not only of Americans but of many other foreigners and not a few Mexicans, and that in all this humanitarian and Christlike work you were patiently and efficiently aided by Mrs. Wilson.

We are also aware that your conduct in all these matters has won for you the general and high appreciation of the American colony at large, to which we particularly desire to hereby add our expression of sincere gratitude and highest esteem.

We are sending copies of this letter to the President of the United States, the Sun Bureau, Hearst papers, the Associated Press, and the Mexican Herald.

Faithfully, yours,

John W. Butler, district superintendent Methodist Episcopal Church; R. C. Elliot, presiding elder Methodist Episcopal Church South; R. A. Carhart, missionary, Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. John A. Reis, pastor San Lorenzo Catholic Church; Geo. H. Brewer, superintendent Baptist Mission; J. P. Hauser, district superintendent Methodist Episcopal Church; Sidney M. Conger, pastor Union Evangelistic Church, member of the Presbytery of Otsego; Rev. Edmund A. Neville, M. A. (Oxon.), rector Christ Church; Rev. F. E. McGuire, pastor Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church.

EXHIBIT I.

MEXICO, February 21, 1913.

His excellency HENRY LANE WILSON,
United States Ambassador, Mexico:

The undersigned members of the British colony in Mexico beg to express their appreciation for the able manner in which Mr. Wilson, United States ambassador, handled the delicate situation created by the recent disturbances in the City of Mexico, and to thank him most sincerely for the help afforded to all foreigners by the embassy, without distinction of nationality, and more especially to all Britishers.

A. W. Donly, J. S. Campbell, Robert A. H. Watson, O. R. Shapp, W. S. Cromble, C. N. Mowag, H. Hensy, S. W. Goddard, R. P. Easton, Harwood H. Simpson, A. H. Hewet, Mr. Turner, C. B. Knocker, W. Hogg, A. J. Stuart, B. Voupy, Syd. J. Smith, A. Chermside, C. H. Lloyd, F. Woodcock, D. Bankhart, D. Muirhead, P. C. Proveny, R. Rymer, H. J. Alexander, W. H. Gleadell, R. V. Gray, Hubert Earle, L. M. B. Bullock, Jas. F. Macnabb, Sebbon D. Baker, W. Chas. Price, F. W. Green, Arthur Williams, Jas. McKinlay, W. S. Brooks, E. G. Ally, Harmer C. Sandifer, E. Wankeger, O. H. Harrison, J. W. S. Turner.

EXHIBIT J.

Resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association of the City of Mexico, at their regular meeting on Thursday, April 10, and recorded in their minutes. That

Whereas it is the sense of this meeting that the attitude of the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, ambassador of the United States to this Republic of Mexico, always consistently maintained, and especially during the recent period of keen and critical tension in this city, has been wise, patriotic, and unselfish, and has been such, in our judgment, as to belie certain uncharitable and unfair attacks of which he has been and is being made the victim: Be it unanimously

Resolved, That the members of this board cordially sympathize with the ambassador in the premises, and that an expression of their renewed confidence be extended to him: Be it

Resolved also, That copies of this resolution be sent to his excellency, the President of the United States, to Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, and to the press.

Thomas Philips, president; Guillermo B. Puga, vice president; Luis Alvarez Leon, sec. de actas; W. A. Price, treasurer; G. J. Babcock, general secretary; J. E. Dennison, R. Williamson, Dr. Antonio Orozco, A. Aldasoro, S. W. Rider, R. M. Raymond, P. H. L. King, W. W. Blake.

EXHIBIT K.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE MEXICO SOCIETY OF NEW YORK ON FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1913.

Resolved, That the Mexico Society of New York offers its congratulations to the Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, American ambassador to Mexico, upon the ability, patience, and courage he has shown in the discharge of the difficult duties imposed upon him during the recent crisis in Mexico.

Resolved, That the society extends its heartfelt sympathy to the Mexican people and to those patriots who are fighting to establish and maintain a constitutional government, and expresses the hope that a stable government, the necessary precedent to peace and prosperity, may soon be established by the people of Mexico.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the State Department at Washington and to the ambassador at the City of Mexico.

—

FROM THE CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES OF FRANCE.

MEXICO, March 11, 1913.

MR. AMBASSADOR: At the moment in which my functions as chargé d'affaires have ended, on account of the return to Mexico of his excellency the French minister, I consider it my duty to express to your excellency my deep gratitude for the cordial manner in which you had the kindness to receive and aid me during the course of two months in which I had charge of the French legation, and notably during the tragic days of the revolution of February last.

I shall always keep in my memory the special courtesies you had the goodness to accord to me, and I congratulate myself that the discharge of my duties during the above-mentioned difficult moments allowed me the privilege of dealing more directly with the eminent dean of the diplomatic corps.

With assurances of my highest consideration, believe me, your obedient servant,

V. AYGUESPARSSE.

His Excellency HENRY LANE WILSON,
Ambassador of the United States of America.

—

FROM THE SPANISH MINISTER.

MEXICO, March 13, 1913.

His Excellency HENRY LANE WILSON,
Ambassador of the United States of America.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR:·On account of my interminable labors I failed to express to you my sincere thanks for the visit made to me in your name by Mr. O'Shaughnessy in order to show me the telegram you sent to the Secretary of State and the favorable reply thereto relative to the telegram I received from Spaniards at Pidras Negras, advising me that they had asked protection of the American consul during the hours of trial caused by the threats and demands of the rebels.

I avail myself of this occasion to say to you that I shall always remember the daily and constant communication in which we were during the tragic days, and will keep a grateful recollection of the always efficacious and kind assistance and cooperation I had from you. I have been an eyewitness of your valuable efforts to solve the problems and responsibilities of those trying moments and to favor the pacification of the country, which we both had at heart, due to the great importance of our respective colonies.

I avail, etc.,

B. J. COLOGAN.

—

BRITISH LEGATION,
Mexico, February 22, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. WILSON: I wish to express to you my most cordial thanks for the aid rendered to British subjects during the recent disturbances by your excellency, as well as by the members of your embassy and their gallant assistants of the American colony.

The British legation was difficult of access owing to its exposed position and its remoteness from the principal residential quarter, and the help afforded by the United States embassy and those who worked with it was therefore of special value.

I remain, my dear Mr. Wilson,
Yours, very sincerely,

FRANCIS STRONGE.

—

KAISERLICH DEUTSCHE GESANDTSCHAFT,
Mexico, March 8, 1913.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: It is with profound satisfaction that I read in this morning's paper the praises duly bestowed on you by the State Department. As an eyewitness of last February's events, I wish to congratulate you upon the official recognition of your merits. May I add a word for my part? That is to say, that I want to thank you most heartily for your excellent advice and practical help proffered to this legation, through your kindness and readiness during a rather trying situation. I was so delighted when reading the morning paper that I wanted to get up to congratulate you in person, but the doctor won't have it, as this intestinal hemorrhage has repeated itself last Wednesday.

Believe me, dear Mr. Ambassador,
Yours, very sincerely and devotedly,

VON HINTZE.

—

[From the Detroit Tribune, February 26, 1914.]

RECOGNITION OF HUERTA OR OF NEW REPUBLIC, OR INTERVENTION IN MEXICO ONLY COURSES OPEN TO UNITED STATES—HENRY LANE WILSON, FORMER AMBASSADOR, IN DETROIT, SAYS ONE OF THREE MEANS PEACE—"PRESENT ATTITUDE IS INTERVENTION"—DIPLOMAT WHO RESIGNED WON'T DISCUSS ADMINISTRATION COURSE; RECALLS OWN PROPOSALS.

Declaring that the United States Government, in its effort to hold aloof from taking a hand in the Mexican situation has actually intervened in the political affairs of the country and by its attitude has furnished moral support and encouragement to the rebels now in arms against the federal government, and that one of three courses outlined will bring order out of chaos, Henry Lane Wilson, former ambassador to Mexico, last night expressed his opinion of conditions in the Republic to the south.

Mr. Wilson was in Detroit for a short time while en route from Saginaw to Ithaca, N. Y., where he will deliver a lecture. When seen at the Michigan Central station the former ambassador willingly gave his views of the situation in the bandit-ridden country, maintaining that the present crisis warrants a sort of "I told you so" attitude on his part.

"The situation with reference to Mexico at the present moment is so grave and so big with dangerous possibilities that any discussion of it ought to be approached with caution and reserve," said Mr. Wilson.

"It is not my desire to embarrass the situation in the slightest degree or to hamper by the expression of any views the proper working out of the administration plans in the present crisis, although as is known to the American public, the state of affairs which now exists was dent.

WON'T DISCUSS PAST.

"The enormous damage which has been brought upon our own citizens in Mexico and the continuance of the barbarous and devastating war which exists there, if chargeable to this administration, are things of the past. No good results can be achieved by reciting them.

"It is with the present crisis that public opinion has to do. It will be recalled that all Governments diplomatically accredited to Mexico, with the exception of Chile and Brazil, which Governments, at my request, agreed to make their recognition dependent upon ours, have recognized the provisional government of Gen. Huerta, and have endeavored, by their moral support, to enable the government to maintain itself and exert its power in the restoration of order.

"Our Government alone has held aloof, and not only has held aloof but in its anxiety to make its views prevail has actually intervened in the political affairs of the country and has by its attitude furnished moral support and encouragement to the rebels in arms against the Federal Government.

"In assuming this position contrary to the advice of its sworn constitutional officer, and in variance with the clearly announced attitude of all the great powers of the world, this Government assumed heavy responsibilities—responsibilities which might have been avoided by adhering to the traditional policy of this Government in recognizing all Governments without questioning their origin or antecedents—which are now becoming apparent even to those uninstructed in international affairs.

"We have at the present moment not only to face the Mexican situation itself, which alone would be sufficient to occupy the serious attention of a government trained in dealing with international affairs, but we are also brought face to face with the possibility of unpleasant complications with other powers who have no political interest in Mexico, but whose subjects and citizens, being in danger, have a right to expect that either this Government shall furnish effective moral support and aid to the provincial Government in Mexico or, failing this, set the Mexican house in order by direct action.

SEES THREE COURSES.

"Three courses rising to the standard of sound statesmanship are open to this Government at the present time. It may be possible it has others in contemplation, but one of these three only—all of which commend themselves—can be adopted in the light of reason.

"First, the recognition of the provisional government of Gen. Huerta, coupled with the furnishing of those moral aids and sympathies which will lead to a restoration of the national credit, the organization of the Mexican Army, and the imposing upon that Government of its full responsibilities toward all other nations. The effect of this course would be to dissipate the hordes of bandits who are masquerading under the name of constitutionalists, and make it possible for the Federal Government to restore comparative order.

"Second, armed intervention; that is to say, the assumption by us of the responsibilities that naturally grow out of our refusal to recognize the provisional government of Gen. Huerta. This, I believe, is a policy repugnant to the vast majority of the American people, and before entered on it must be fully understood that it means the enlistment and dispatch to Mexico of some 200,000 American soldiers. Twenty thousand United States soldiers can march to the City of Mexico and take it, but it would require the number stated to police the country after occupying the capital. The adoption of this policy means a vast expenditure of money and probably a large sacrifice of American lives, with the probability that when we shall have withdrawn from the country the reign of anarchy will be renewed. I do not believe the administration will intervene by arms in Mexico in view of the grave character of this step and of the likelihood that such a step would not be supported by American public opinion.

SUGGESTS NEW REPUBLIC.

"The third course would be the recognition, coupled with our guaranty of its independence, of a new republic extending as far south in Mexico as the twenty-sixth parallel and including Lower California. Below the twenty-sixth parallel, where the wealth and population of Mexico are, public sentiment is opposed to the present revolution, and as the bandit army marches farther south it will advance more and more into the enemy's country. People of these border States are a different people than those below the twenty-sixth parallel, and no government at Mexico City can hope to hold them permanently in control.

"This is due not only to the antagonisms which exist, but to the character of the country, which makes it possible for roving bandits to carry on the class of warfare carried on in South Africa during the Boer War. I do not know that this plan is possible of execution nor that any considerable Mexican or American sentiment would favor it. I simply suggested it as a 'way out.'"

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will occupy the floor but a moment. I desire simply to say that no Member of this body more sincerely desired to sustain the President in any matter that he has in hand in connection with the unfortunate condition of things in the Republic of Mexico, provided the resolution was broadened sufficiently to give what I thought was an adequate reason for interfering. But inasmuch as the Senate saw fit to vote down an amendment to the resolution which simply provided for the protection of American citizens, and likewise voted down the most excellent amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which disclaimed all purpose on our part to territorial acquisition, I feel constrained in justice to my own convictions to vote against the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the joint resolution will be reported to the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to call attention to something that has perhaps been omitted, as he wishes to proceed in this matter in formal routine. There has been an amendment, unless the Chair is in error, that has not been voted upon. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] tendered a correction of a previous amendment of his own. Has that been disposed of?

Mr. LODGE. I never offered the other amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not wish the Senator from Massachusetts to feel that he had ignored him in the matter.

Mr. LODGE. I am very much indebted to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. GALLINGER, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is detained by illness, and the exchange and transfer of pairs with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], I vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. CULBERSON'S name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON]. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have reason to believe that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], with whom I am paired, if present would vote as I will, and I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], but if he were present he would vote as I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when Mr. MYERS'S name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when Mr. TILLMAN'S name was called). If the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] were able to be present, he would vote "yea." He is unavoidably detained, and is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I renew the announcement with reference to the enforced absence of my colleague [Mr. STONE]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 72, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—72.

Ashurst	Gore	Newlands	Shively
Bankhead	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Simmons
Borah	Hollis	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	Hughes	Owen	Smith, Md.
Brady	James	Page	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Johnson	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Burleigh	Jones	Perkins	Sterling
Catron	Kenyon	Pittman	Sutherland
Chilton	Kern	Poindexter	Swanson
Clapp	Lane	Pomerene	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Lee, Md.	Reed	Thornton
Colt	Lewis	Robinson	Townsend
Crawford	McCumber	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Cummins	McLean	Shafroth	Walsh
Fall	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Warren
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	West
Goff	Nelson	Shields	Williams

NAYS—13.

Brandegee	La Follette	Oliver	Works
Bristow	Lippitt	Root
Dillingham	Lodge	Smoot
Gallinger	Norris	Weeks

NOT VOTING—10.

Burton	du Pont	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman
Chamberlain	Gronna	Stephenson
Culberson	Myers	Stone

So the joint resolution was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the preamble reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Foreign Relations recommend the adoption of the following preamble to the joint resolution:

In view of the facts presented by the President of the United States in his address delivered to the Congress in joint session on the 20th day of April, 1914, with regard to certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States in Mexico: Be it

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States."

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the joint resolution and amendments and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

UNITED STATES VOLUNTEER FORCES.

Mr. REED. I ask to take from the table my motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 7138) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was passed. The motion was made for what I thought were sufficient reasons. I still should like to call the attention of the Senate to certain matters contained in the bill; but in view of the present emergency, and because the bill relates to the reorganization of the Army, I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill stands passed.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn, to meet at 12 o'clock noon to-day.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes a. m., April 22, 1914) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, April 22, 1914, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 21, 1914.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Profoundly sensible, O God our Father, of our utter dependence upon Thee, we lift up our hearts in love and gratitude that Thou hast spared our lives and permitted us once more to assemble within this legislative Hall where history is made. Let Thy favor, we pray Thee, be upon these Thy servants as they thus lengthen the pages of our national record, that they may be impressed with the solemn duty resting upon them, that their resolves and enactments may be in accordance with Thy good purposes. In the name of Christ, the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] if he will use some of his time?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I shall be glad to. I yield 30 minutes to my colleague on the committee from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago this House passed a resolution approving the suggestion of a high official in the British Government that naval construction be suspended for a period of one year by all the leading nations. The House took this method of expressing the desire of the American people to cooperate with other nations in any movement looking toward limiting expenditures for war purposes. In doing this the House undoubtedly reflected the sentiment of the American people. This resolution attracted attention and was commented upon favorably by the press both at home and abroad. It is to be hoped that tangible results will flow from it. For this year, however, it is too much to expect that it will effect any curtailment in the naval program of any of the great nations.

The day of universal peace has been the desire and the dream of the ages. While we are undoubtedly advancing slowly toward that happy end, the millennium has been by no means yet attained. At times that happy goal has seemed but a day's journey ahead of us, but like the mirage of the desert the next sunset found it still beckoning us onward. However, the moral support of this great Republic should be exerted at all times to the end that disputes among nations may be settled without resort to force.

In the meantime, however, it would be worse than folly to close our eyes to actual world conditions and fail to provide for a reasonable national defense. We have not yet reached that day when war is but a memory. It is still a fearful reality.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BARTON. Before the gentleman gets away from that point. After we adopted the Hensley resolution it was transmitted to some department of this Government. Can the gentleman inform this committee whether that resolution was ever forwarded to foreign Governments or whether it ever left the department of this Government?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have no information as to what became of the resolution after it left the House.

Nearly all of the leading nations of the world have engaged in war within the last two decades. The war between China and Japan in the early nineties cost China, including indemnities, $750,000,000. In the late nineties we were engaged in war with Spain. Although the war lasted but a few weeks, it cost this Government, exclusive of expenditures in the Philippine Islands, upward of $300,000,000. The Boer war, fought during the early part of the last decade, cost England and the Boers upward of $400,000,000. One hundred and fifty thousand men were engaged in that conflict, and approximately one-third of them were killed in battle or died of wounds and disease. The war between Japan and Russia in 1904 cost Russia $775,000,000 and increased the national debt of Japan fivefold. Russia lost 338,000 men and Japan 167,000 men. The Balkan wars of last year involved a fighting force of 368,000 men in behalf of Turkey and 665,000 men in behalf of Bulgaria, Servia, Greece, and Montenegro. During the past two years a great revolution has been going on in China, resulting in the overthrow of the ancient dynasties of the Empire, and in the Far East there has arisen the sun of a new Republic—the United States of China. For the past three years a brutal war has been carried on in the neighboring Republic of Mexico at a cost in life and property which can not even be approximated. In fact, the last two decades have been among the most warlike in modern history. In spite of the sentiment for disarmament, for international arbitration, for naval holidays, and for universal peace, the world has by no means yet abandoned the practice of settling disputes between nations in the forum of the field, the camp, and the march.

This being true, it is the duty of Congress to provide an adequate national defense for this Republic. When the Army appropriation bill was before the House a few weeks ago much was said about the cost and the fearful waste of war. Upon that proposition there is no disagreement. All are agreed as to the poverty and want which follow in its wake. All are agreed that it picks for sacrifice the bravest and the strongest of the race. All are agreed as to the burden of debt which must be paid by other generations. All are agreed as to the benefits which would come to mankind could all the expenditures for armies and navies be made in behalf of public improvements, sanitation, schools, churches, social and industrial betterment. The same thing might with equal propriety be said of expenditures for police, for jails, and courts. The police department of New York City alone costs $12,000,000 annually. Think of all the benefits which might be conferred upon the people of New York along lines of education and social betterment by the expenditure of this vast sum. But police and jails and courts are necessary and must be provided so long as there are individuals who must be restrained. The same thing is true in the community of nations, and it would be just as unwise for a nation to fail to provide for an adequate national defense as for a city to neglect to provide ample police protection.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I have heard a great deal about this "adequate national defense." I want to know what "adequate national defense" is.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will discuss that as I go along, a little later, if the gentleman will abide in peace.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Very well.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Speaking of the tremendous outlay for these wars that the gentleman has just mentioned and their very short duration in point of time, what is to be the ultimate result of the present growth of armament upon the people?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The only purpose, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, that I had in calling attention to the expenditures for wars fought in the recent past was to show that the day of peace is not yet here, and as long as that condition prevails it would be unwise for us not to provide for a reasonable national defense.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman see in this armament a point where we will break because of the overweight of its burdens?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Why, it is the hope, of course, of all that the time will come when nations will agree to curtail the expenditures for war purposes.

Mr. FESS. Will that agreement be by the stress and force of necessity?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Under the stress of necessity it would seem that international agreements limiting war expenses might be reached.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman is going on the basis that peace will be secured by arming the peaceful nations? Is that it?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; I am going on the basis that as long as there is a war spirit in the world it would be foolish for this great Republic not to be prepared to resist aggression.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman object to a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; but my time is limited, and I can not take up much more time in yielding.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman's conclusion, that the time of peace is not near at hand, based on the action of the House yesterday?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No. The American people are against war, except as a last resort. If war comes we will not be the aggressors. We have no desire for conquest. We do not seek the territory of any other country. But if forced into war in defense of our liberties, for which we have paid so high a price or for the maintenance of such policies as we consider of paramount importance or for the protection of our people at home or abroad, it would be a world calamity were we not adequately equipped to bring such a war to a speedy and successful termination.

The immediate question, therefore, before the House is whether the sums authorized in this bill are reasonably necessary for the national defense. This bill carries an appropriation, in round numbers, of $140,000,000 for the Navy. Of this sum approximately $36,000,000 is for new construction. The balance is for the general upkeep of the Navy and for the pay of officers and men. So far as the existing Naval Establishment is concerned, the Committee on Naval Affairs has exercised such economy as seemed consistent with efficiency. The pay of the officers and men, while higher than in foreign countries, is in harmony with American conditions and standard of living. The sums provided for supplies are not excessive. Only such repairs and improvements in the navy yards and other industrial plants as seem necessary are provided. Undoubtedly the Government maintains too many navy yards, and if some plan of consolidation could be worked out it is altogether likely that economies could be practiced without sacrificing efficiency.

The matter then narrows itself down to that part of the bill making provision for the construction of two dreadnaughts, six destroyers, and eight submarines, involving when completed an expense of approximately $40,000,000. Is this expenditure reasonably necessary for an adequate national defense? In considering the necessity for the proposed naval construction it is necessary to consider the size and strength of our present Navy.

At the present time we have 34 battleships, 9 of the dreadnaught class and 25 of the predreadnaught type. A dreadnaught is described by the Secretary of the Navy as a battleship having at least 18,000 tons displacement, a speed of not less than 20 knots per hour, and having a main battery of 10 or more not less than 11-inch guns. In addition to ships now in commission in the Navy, 5 dreadnaughts have been authorized and are now being built. The New York is completed and will be ready for sea in a few days. The Oklahoma and the Nevada will be completed and commissioned within a year. The Pennsylvania will probably be completed and commissioned within two years. The keel of battleship No. 39 has just been laid. When these 5 dreadnaughts are completed and commissioned we will have a dreadnaught fleet of 14 ships. Of our predreadnaught fleet of 25 ships, the Indiana and the Oregon were commissioned 18 years ago, and the Massachusetts 17 years ago.

The plans for their construction were prepared about 22 years ago. The same improvement is going on in naval construction as in all other construction. A warship built according to designs prepared upward of 20 years ago naturally becomes more or less obsolete on account of improvements, resulting in greater speed in the newer ships and in higher power and longer range of the newer guns. For illustration, the battleship Indiana had a speed of 15.55 knots per hour on its trial trip, while the speed of the Texas, recently commissioned, is 22 knots per hour. The range of the guns of the Indiana is between 7 and 8 miles, while the range of the guns of the Texas is between 14 and 15 miles. The Indiana and the Oregon were remodeled a few years ago, and will be useful for many years to come for coast defense. It is obvious, however, that if taken out to sea with our dreadnaught fleet having a speed of 21 or 22 knots per hour, these slow-going battleships would reduce the speed of the entire fleet to 15 knots per hour.

The battleships Massachusetts, Iowa, Alabama, Kearsarge, Kentucky, Illinois, and Wisconsin were commissioned between 1896 and 1901 and have a speed of approximately 17 knots per hour. Assuming that it takes one year after authorization to make the plans and award the contracts, and that it takes three years thereafter to build a dreadnaught, the ships authorized under this bill will not be ready for commission until 1918, at which time the Alabama, the Kearsarge, the Kentucky, the Illinois, and the Wisconsin will be as old as the Oregon and the Indiana are now.

It seems only the part of wisdom for the United States to add new ships from year to year in sufficient numbers to take the place of those which become obsolete on account of scientific developments in naval construction. Assuming that there is a depreciation in efficiency of only 5 per cent per annum, an annual addition of two battleships will just about compensate for such depreciation and would seem to be a reasonable policy for this Government to pursue under existing world conditions.

But how does our Navy compare in size and strength with that of other countries? The authorities all seem agreed that for purposes of comparing the strength of navies the battleship unit should be taken as a standard. This, of course, leaves out the question of men. Applying this standard, England stands first, with a navy about twice the size and strength of ours. Germany stands second, the United States third, France fourth, and Japan fifth.

The gentlemen who signed the minority report have contended that our Navy is now equal to that of Germany. Up to five years ago this contention would have undoubtedly been correct. Our old Navy is undoubtedly superior to the old navy of Germany. By old Navy I mean ships built prior to 1909. In this class we have 25 battleships, ranging from the Indiana, commissioned in 1895, to the New Hampshire, commissioned in 1908, while Germany has 20 battleships commissioned between 1898 and 1908. In our new Navy we have 9 dreadnaughts, 7 of which are the equal of any fighting craft in the world. Germany has 13 dreadnaughts and 4 dreadnaught cruisers. These dreadnaught cruisers cost more than dreadnaughts, and have the armor, armament, and displacement of ships of the dreadnaught class and a speed of from 28 to 29 knots per hour. Counting dreadnaught cruisers as dreadnaughts, Germany has in commission 17 dreadnaughts to our 9. We are building 5 dreadnaughts, which when completed will make 14 in all. Germany is building 6 dreadnaughts and 3 dreadnaught cruisers, which when completed will make 26 dreadnaughts and dreadnaught cruisers as against our 14 dreadnaughts. Germany is therefore clearly entitled to second place in naval strength, and if she carries out her present building program her superiority will be still further increased.

Of course, the United States does not need as large a navy as England. In the first place, England must control the seas touching her shores. She is dependent upon the outside world for her food supply. She has exposed valuable territory in all parts of the world. She has an extensive world commerce.

Under these conditions it would be impossible for England to bring her entire naval strength to bear at a given point without exposing her commerce and her widely scattered possessions. The situation of the United States is very different. On the Atlantic side our interests are almost wholly confined to continental United States. Our remoteness from Europe is in itself a protection. Any European nation attacking us must cross 3,000 miles of sea to do it. Besides, conditions in Europe are such that none of the great powers could safely send their entire fleet away from home. Too great a disparity, however, between our Navy and that of a great nation like Germany would be unwise.

In considering our naval requirements we must also have in mind any National or State policies which have in the past given rise to controversies with foreign countries and which may cause trouble again. It so happens that certain policies which are deemed wise for the people of this country prove irritating to other nations. Our policy of excluding Asiatics falls within this class and is one of the most sensitive questions with which our Government is called upon to deal. Within a year the Secretary of State has appealed in person to the Legislature of the State of California urging upon that State the importance of doing nothing which would complicate our relations with Japan. Only recently, while the immigration bill was under consideration, the Members of this House were appealed to by the administration and by the leaders of both parties to the same effect. Members of the House fully realize the possibility of international complications growing out of anti-Asiatic legislation, either by Congress or any of the States. We can not ignore this question in considering our naval requirements.

Since the Spanish-American War we have exercised sovereignty over the Philippine Islands. Our future policy in these islands may have some bearing on the size of our Navy. The present administration has declared it to be the purpose of the United States to grant independence to the Philippines at an early date. Those best qualified to judge insist that the people of these islands are not now and will not in the near future be able to maintain an independent government. If we stay in the Philippine Islands, we must go forward with our work of education and preparation which has been so splendidly carried on during the past 15 years. If we decide to risk granting them independence at an early date, we must stand by and see that they do not fall a victim either to conquest or revolution. Whichever course we pursue it is not likely that our obligations to the people of the Philippine Islands will cease during the active lifetime of any battleships authorized by this bill. Our naval plans therefore, for the present at least, must take into account our obligations in the Far East.

For 90 years we have declared it to be our fixed policy to stand by the Monroe doctrine. While this doctrine has not been recognized as international law it has been observed by the nations of Europe, and is to-day a vital part of our foreign policy. The people of the United States are as much opposed to the entrance of any European power into Central or South America as when the Monroe doctrine was first announced.

Since the building of the Panama Canal it is particularly important that no great foreign power should gain sovereignty over or even become the dominant influence in any country lying between the United States and that great highway of commerce. For many months thoughtful men have been watching with growing concern the steadily increasing influence of foreign nations in Mexico with a corresponding loss of prestige on the part of the United States.

This situation has come about partly because of the policy pursued by this Government toward Mexico during the past year, and partly because of the steadily increasing financial dependence of Mexico on European nations. During the past three years a tremendous war debt has been incurred by Mexico and heavy loans have been made abroad. Some of these loans have been secured by customs receipts, which would give a creditor nation so secured the right to seize the customhouses of Mexico whenever it might be deemed necessary for the protection of its loans. Students of history are well aware of the fact that when one nation becomes heavily interested financially in the affairs of another it is only a short step to an attempted exercise of sovereignty and political control in the event of serious domestic disturbance in the debtor nation.

A realization on the part of this Government that such a situation might arise as a result of the chaotic conditions in Mexico is undoubtedly one of the reasons for the mobilization of practically the entire American Navy in Mexican waters at this time. Such a show of strength as has been made in Mexican waters would not be necessary if our only purpose was to force an apology for an insult to our flag from a weak nation like Mexico, a nation without a navy and with its coast line practically without fortifications. The effect of such a naval demonstration as has been made will be to serve notice on the world that the Monroe doctrine is still a vital part of our foreign policy, and no matter what happens in Mexico, that unfortunate Republic will not be open to exploitation by foreign nations. In this course the President will have the support not only of the American Congress but of the American people as well.

The situation in Mexico has not only been disturbing from the standpoint of the preservation of the spirit of the Monroe doctrine, but for many months it has raised the very pertinent question of the duty of this Government to protect American citizens as well as citizens of foreign countries temporarily residing there. Since the war began the lives of scores of American citizens have been sacrificed in Mexico. The State Department is to be commended for the zeal displayed in the Benton case, but it is a matter of keenest regret to the American people that a more vigorous policy has not been pursued in protecting citizens of the United States. It does seem to me that this Government should exercise at least the same vigilance and the same consideration in behalf of our own citizens as for the citizens or subjects of a foreign power. [Applause.] American citizenship has never been regarded as a one-sided affair. On the one hand it means protection to the Government by the citizen. On the other hand it means protection to the citizen by the Government. No great government can afford to close its ears to the cry for help from a deserving citizen in distress whether at home or abroad.

In the palmy days of the Roman Empire it was the proud boast of the Cæsars that the legions of Rome would march to the ends of the earth to protect Roman citizenship. I want to see the time come when American citizenship will mean so much that a citizen of the United States may travel the world over and feel that if he keeps within his rights he will carry with him the protection of this mighty Republic, and that his cry for assistance will not go unheeded by the American Government. [Applause.]

Coming back to the bill now under consideration by the House permit me to say in conclusion that in view of our position as a Nation on this hemisphere, in view of our duty to republican government everywhere, in view of all that there is at stake for us and for our children and for all mankind, this great Republic can not afford to rely on accident or chance. In the extension of popular rule it is our destiny to lead the way. Let us make our leading a blessing to all mankind. To this end let us provide and maintain a navy in keeping with the responsibilities with which we are charged and sufficient at all times to defend our coast, our commerce, our foreign and domestic policies, our possessions, and our people at home or abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the Naval Committee has no objection, I would like to yield at this time one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY].

Mr. PADGETT. I shall be glad if the gentleman would use some of his time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY].

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, not wishing to take up the time of the House this morning, I merely ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, the question before Congress is neither partisan, political, nor anything else but patriotic, and I, for one, can see nothing but the plain duty of every American citizen to stand firmly back of the President.

We may differ as to the wisdom or the sagacity of any administration's foreign policy, but we can not differ when the call comes to "rally 'round the flag." There never has been a time in our history and there never will be a time when the American people will not stand together as one man to resent and punish an insult to Old Glory, and party lines fade into insignificance when the bugle call of patriotism sounds its warning note that the time for action is near.

It matters not whether we believe in intervention in Mexico or not; it matters little whether we believe that any faction in Mexico should or should not be recognized; but it does matter when any faction in Mexico or any other country abuses an American citizen or offers an affront to the American flag, and the punishment should be swift and sure to any man or faction or country who does so.

There may be some people in this country who believe different, such as Socialists, capitalist-owned high-brows, and so forth, but I am firmly convinced that the vast majority of virile, red-blooded American citizens still hold fast to the old, old patriotic traditions and agree that an American man, no matter how humble, is entitled to the protection of the American flag wherever his footsteps may carry him in the whole wide world.

I make no pretensions to any deep knowledge of the intricate mazes of international law. The musty books upon the library shelves have not taught me the patriotism that I understand, but out amongst the hardy pioneers who came from every corner of the civilized world to seek their fortunes, build their homes, and live up to their ideals of freedom in the broad areas of the mighty West; from these people I learned the love of country that knows no faltering methods, that recognizes no timid doubtings, but, with a confidence that their country will never tread in a dishonorable pathway, sturdily maintains that if the devil himself should ever dare to lay his horny hands upon an American yellow dog a battalion of the boys in blue and a white squadron would be promptly pounding at the gates of hell to know the reason why.

The following clipping might be of interest, which I cut from the Washington Herald of this date:

HIS WORDS CALLED TREASON.

NEW YORK, April 20.

Attachés of the United States attorney's office to-day declared that they expected the arrest of William D. Haywood, the Industrial Workers of the World leader, to be ordered if war is declared against Mexico, because of his advocacy of a "war strike" at Carnegie Hall last night.

If Haywood is arrested it will be on charges of treason and seditious utterances. "The agitator urged all workingmen to go on strike the minute war is declared, so that the United States would be helpless before her enemies."

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, every day brings new and convincing proof of the need of a tariff commission. The amount of misinformation contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD relative to the cost of production in this country and abroad is most remarkable. In the Daily Consular and Trade Report of March 25, 1914, published under the direction of the Department of Commerce, is found this statement from the American consul at Liege, Belgium:

WAGES PAID IN FACTORIES.

[Consul Alexander Heingartner, Liege, Belgium.]

In the various operations in the manufacture of firearms and ammunition the following wages obtain here, the schedule being furnished by a Belgian manufacturer:

Firearms operations: Operations on metal per hour: Drop forging, barrel rolling and forging, and power milling, all $0.08 to $0.13; hand milling and profiling, $0.07 to $0.13; drilling (women employed) and tapping, each $0.05 to $0.06; shaving, $0.07 to $0.13; polishing, $0.05 to $0.10; filing, $0.09 to $0.13. Woodworking (with high-speed machinery) per hour: Stock turning, $0.07 to $0.09; stock drilling, $0.07 to $0.13; stock sanding and polishing, $0.10 to $0.14; assembling and fitting, $0.09 to $0.14; toolmakers and machinists, $0.10 to $0.16; common laborers, truckmen, packers, and miscellaneous, $0.06 to $0.10; draftsmen, $25 to $80 per month. Proportion of males and females employed—2,600 men and 1,000 women.

Exports of firearms from Belgium during the first 11 months of 1913 had a value of $4,660,000.

Ammunition operations: Draftsmen, $25 to $80 per month. Hourly rate (male): Machine operators (women), $0.05 to $0.07; automatic machine tenders, tool setters, etc., $0.12 to $0.16; machinists and toolmakers, $0.12 to $0.16; helpers, $0.05 to $0.09; carpenters, electricians, steamfitters, and other such trades, $0.07 to $0.10. Piecework earnings for both male and female are practically the same as those paid by the hour. Proportion of males and females employed—400 women to 100 men.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Just as soon as I complete this statement.

Mr. COLLIER. I want to know what factory that is.

Mr. GOOD. The factory at Liege, Belgium, as reported to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor by the American consul at that point.

Upon reading that report the thought struck me that the prices paid laborers of that class were not more than 25 or 30 per cent of the wages paid similar occupations in this country. I knew that under the Chief of Ordnance of the War Department the Government is employing thousands of men in the manufacture of ammunition and small arms, and I desired to know how the wages of such men compared with similar employment abroad. So on the 28th day of March I sent to Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, who is in charge of the employment of the men in our ammunition factory at Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, and at the Springfield Arsenal at Springfield, Mass., the Daily Consular and Trade Report referred to, asking him to give a comparison between the wages paid as reported in this publication and those paid by the Government of the United States, and I received from him this reply:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, April 1, 1914.

Hon. JAMES W. GOOD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Subject: Comparison of wages paid in Belgium with those paid in the United States in the manufacture of firearms and ammunition.

1. Answering your note of the 28th ultimo, inclosing a copy of the Daily Consular and Trade Report for March 25, 1914, inviting attention to the statement therein contained of the wages paid laborers in the firearms and ammunition factories of Belgium, and requesting a statement of the wages paid in the Government arsenals for similar employment, I inclose herewith two statements prepared in this office, one showing a comparison of the wages paid in Belgium—as stated in the Consular and Trade Report—with those paid at the Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass., in the manufacture of firearms, and the other giving similar data with reference to the manufacture of ammunition, the latter statement showing the wages paid at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., which is the Government's ammunition factory. The Springfield Armory is the Government's small-arms plant.

2. I am also returning herewith, as requested, the copy of the Consular and Trade Report received with your notes.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

Here are the inclosures, giving a comparison of wages paid in Belgium and the United States in the manufacture of firearms and ammunition.

Comparison of wages paid in Belgium and United States in the manufacture of firearms.

Designation.	Belgium.	United States.[1]
	Per hour.	Per hour.
Drop forger	$0.08 to $0.13	$0.37½ to $0.50
Barrel rolling	.08 to .13	.34⅜
Forging	.08 to .13	(2)
Power milling (miller)	.08 to .13	.25 and .28⅛
Hand milling	.07 to .13	.25 and .28⅛
Profiling	.07 to .13	.31¼ to .37½
Drilling	.05 to .06	.31¼
Tapping	.05 to .06	.31¼ to .37½
Shaving	.07 to .13	.31¼ to .34⅜
Polishing	.05 to .10	.32½ to .37½
Filing	.09 to .13	.31¼ to .37½
Woodworker (machinery):
Stock turning and drilling	.07 to .09	.31¼ to .40⅝
Stock sanding and polishing	.10 to .14	.31¼ to .40⅝
Assembling, etc	.09 to .14	.31¼ to .37½
Toolmakers	.10 to .16	.40⅝ to .46⅞
Machinists	.10 to .16	.37½ to .43¾
Packers	.06 to .10	.28⅛ to .28⅛
Common laborers	.06 to .10	.25
Draftsmen	[3] 25.00 to 80.00	83.33 to 100.00

[1] Rates taken from Springfield Armory. All male employees in United States. A large majority of these employees work on piecework, and make from 10 to 20 per cent more than day wages.
[2] See drop forger.
[3] Per month.
[4] Per month. Some of the arsenals employ a larger number of draftsmen than others, and the rate of pay extends to $183.33 per month.

Comparison of wages paid in Belgium and United States in the manufacture of ammunition.

Designation.	Belgium.	United States.[1]
	Per hour.	Per hour.
Machine operators (women)	$0.05 to $0.07	$0.14½ to $0.19
Automachine tenders	.12 to .16	.40½
Machinists	.12 to .16	.31¼ to .50
Toolmakers	.12 to .16	.34⅜ to .47
Helpers	.05 to .09	.25
Carpenters	.07 to .10	.37½ to .40
Electricians	.07 to .10	.31¼ to .53
Steam fitters	.07 to .10	.31¼ to .34⅜
Draftsmen	[2] 25.00 to 80.00	[2] 75.00 to 166.67

[2] Per month. [1] Rates taken from Frankford Arsenal.
Proportion of males and females employed: 400 men to 100 women in United States. A large majority of these employees work on piecework and make from 10 to 20 per cent more than day wages.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is contrasting the wages paid in Belgium and in the United States?

Mr. GOOD. I am not making the contrast. I am simply giving first the statement printed by the Secretary of Commerce in the Daily Trade and Consular Reports, which gives the wages paid in Belgium, and I am reading a statement made by Gen. Crozier, who employs thousands of men in our arsenals who are performing exactly the same kind of work, giving the wages paid them.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is quoting Government authority?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; absolutely; both as to the wages paid in Belgium and the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is aware that Belgium is a great iron and steel manufacturing country?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. One of the chief competitors of the United States in that line?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I believe that is true.

Mr. MOORE. The statement of wages as quoted by the gentleman, coming from the Department of Commerce, shows that the wages paid in the United States to iron and steel workers, particularly in the arsenals, are, on the average, about three times what they are in Belgium.

Mr. GOOD. They are more than three times as much; the wages range from three to six times as much.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman knows it has been contended here that the cost of living in the United States would be reduced by reducing the tariff against foreign-made materials. It now appears that labor in Belgium, one of our competitors, receives from three to six times less wages than labor receives in the United States.

Mr. GOOD. That is true, and I am putting this comparison before the House for the purpose of showing that the statements that have been made on the floor of this House time and time again and that have gone throughout the country to the effect that there is practically no difference in the wages paid for labor in the United States and abroad are absolutely without foundation.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is quoting Government authority?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. MOORE. I am very glad he is, because the Government can not very well go back on its own figures. If the gentleman will indulge me, I would state that the Philadelphia Record, the foremost Democratic paper in Pennsylvania, which constantly stands for a lower tariff, in an editorial on April 18 said:

> The best-paid locomotive engineers in Italy receive $1.64 a day; firemen, 85 cents; conductors, $1.28; head brakemen, $1.10; and an ordinary brakeman, 73 cents, after long years of service. A station guard's pay ranges between 50 and 70 cents, and a switchman, beginning at 51 cents, in 18 years may attain a wage of 70 cents a day. In reality they all receive considerably less, for the Government deducts from their pay the income tax and pension premium. It is not surprising that the men are threatening to strike for better wages. When American railroad employees contrast their own compensation with these figures they may well feel that they are the best-paid workers of their kind in the world.

If the gentleman will permit me to interject into his remarks this Democratic authority and compare it with the Government authority, I will be very much obliged.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. GOOD. I agreed to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER].

Mr. COLLIER. While the gentleman was preparing his interesting statistics, did he also find any statistics in reference to the efficiency of these laboring men and workmen as compared with the efficiency of the American workmen? And also, has he any statistics showing the value of the purchasing power of a dollar in Belgium and a dollar in the United States?

Mr. GOOD. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I have no information on that subject; and, what is more, the Ways and Means Committee have no information on that subject, apparently, and do not want any information, for they brush the whole question aside with the statement that the wages paid in this country are the same as those paid abroad. And you on that side passed a tariff bill based on this kind of information. You spurned impartial and reliable information, and the American workman must now suffer because of the stupidity and ignorance of a Democratic Congress. A tariff commission would have supplied information which Congress lacked.

And if gentlemen on that side are looking for an answer to the question of why men are tramping all over this country begging for bread, they will find it in the fact that American manufacturers, who are obliged to pay this high wage scale, can not compete in the markets of the world or in their own market with European manufacturers who only pay their laborers from one-third to one-sixth of the wages paid American laborers. I want to say, further, that the employees in our arsenals are given 28 days leave every year with full pay, making employment in our arsenals a very attractive employment. The wages, however, which are given in the schedule furnished by Gen. Crozier are not higher, and in many instances are not as high, as American skilled mechanics receive in various cities throughout the country. It will be noticed that the highest wages paid carpenters is 40 cents per hour, or $3.20 per day, while the highest wages paid carpenters in Belgium is but 80 cents per day.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Has the gentleman any data showing the actual importation of these manufactured products into the United States?

Mr. GOOD. The only information I have is contained in the article which I have read, which shows that for the first 11 months of 1913 the importation to the United States of firearms alone amounted to $4,666,000.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, on June 2, 1913, I introduced House bill 115, for the election of a committee to provide for such manufacturing plants as may be necessary for the production of armor plate. This was referred to the Committee on Rules and placed away in one of the many sepulchers provided for burying bills that do not suit their fancy.

Again, on June 17, 1913, I asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution of inquiry directed to the Secretary of the Navy, requesting the total expenditures of the United States Government for armor plate; what portion of this amount had been paid to the Carnegie Steel Co., Bethlehem Steel Co., and Midvale Steel Co.; what was the cost to the Government per ton for armor plate purchased and what was the cost of manufacturing armor plate, and other points of information. This information was desired for the purpose of laying a foundation, on which I intended to introduce a bill providing for the erection of an armor-plate factory. This resolution was discussed at length, as shown by page 2450 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but went out on a point of order.

On July 18, realizing that the resolution would be noneffective, although the Secretary of the Navy had made answer to both of my inquiries in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. PADGETT], I tackled the proposition from another angle and introduced House resolution 204, directing the Commissioner of Corporations to make a report on the cost of an armor-plate factory and the cost of armor plate and gun forgings. This was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and to date has not received their consideration.

On October 10, 1913, I placed in the RECORD a statement of the condition of affairs relative to armor plate and the trust that controls it, and followed this on January 12, 1914, after a conference with the Secretary of the Navy, by introducing House bill 11308, to provide for the erection or purchase of an armor-plate factory, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. This bill provides for the appropriation of $8,000,000 for the purchase or erection of an armor-plate plant. My reason for using the word "purchase" was that the Secretary of the Navy had told me that it was possible to purchase a plant ready for operation for less money than the bill provides.

On referring to the bill now under consideration, I find that the committee has made this recommendation: That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the selection of a suitable site for the erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel capable of standing all ballistic tests and other necessary tests required for use in vessels of the Navy at the lowest possible cost to the Government. Taking into consideration all of the elements necessary for the economical and successful operation of such a plant, such as the availability of labor, material, and fuel and transportation facilities to and from said plant. Said report shall contain a cost of a site sufficient to accommodate a plant having an annual output capacity of 20,000 tons and a site for an output of 10,000 tons, and also an itemized statement of the cost of the necessary buildings, machinery, and accessories for each and the annual cost for the maintenance of each and the estimated cost of the finished product.

I desire to congratulate the committee on this much-needed recommendation, and sincerely trust that this paragraph will be sustained. A retrospective view of the many investigations of the past and the lack of results would, indeed, cause one to be fearful of the ultimate success of this recommendation, for we well know the potential power behind the Steel Trust and the manufacturers of armor plate and munitions of war; but knowing that the members of the committee who favored this recommendation are in earnest and will follow this legislation, and having been assured by the Secretary of the Navy that he favors the plan of manufacturing our armor plate, I feel confident that at the next session of Congress we will have presented for our consideration a definite, businesslike, clear-cut statement containing all the information we need to give to the country this much-needed legislation.

Much has been said in the past about the exorbitant price paid for armor plate and about the very poor quality that came from the only two factories then in existence, the Carnegie and Bethlehem plants. The question was constantly agitated as to whether or not the Government should undertake to make its own armor, thereby securing perfect quality, and by entering the field as a quasi competitor bring about a reduction in price.

This problem is before us now. We want to get the best quality of armor plate at a price that is not extortionate. It certainly can not be successfully contended that we are not now at the mercy of the Steel Trust in the purchase of armor plate.

An inspection of the records will show that during the period from 1887 up to and including the letting of the contract for the Pennsylvania the Carnegie Steel Co. received, in round numbers, $33,500,000 and the Bethlehem Steel Co. $33,250,000 from the Government for the manufacture of armor plate, the Bethlehem receiving orders for 73,291 tons and the Carnegie Co. receiving orders of 73,121 tons. This is most conclusive proof, to my mind, that they thoroughly understand each other and that there has been no competition in bidding, as contemplated by law. If we had our own armor plant during this period, and taking the extravagant estimates of $300 per ton as cost of production, we would have saved, in round numbers, to this Government $26,000,000. If this bill passes carrying the authorization for two battleships, to say nothing of the work connected with the other floating machines of war, it will mean at least $3,000,000 profit to the Steel Trust. Perhaps we may get some virtue out of the situation by swelling up with patriotic pride when this kind of money is sent in to our municipalities to endow colleges and build libraries, but for my part I would prefer that the Government cease paying tribute, save their own money, and build their own schools and libraries.

There was a time not many years ago when we did not have powder and gun factories. We were at the mercy of what was known as the Powder Trust for our supplies of ammunition, and we had to get our guns from private shops in foreign countries. We established these factories, and they have been of great benefit to our people. The powder factory has reduced the cost of powder to the Government from 80 cents a pound in 1901 to 53 cents per pound in 1913. In a statement furnished me by the Secretary of the Navy, it shows that smokeless powder manufactured at the naval powder factory, at Indianhead, Md., since the date of the completion of that plant, has varied from 30 cents to 48 cents per pound. Taking into consideration that we use in this one arm of the service over 44,000,000 pounds annually, it can be plainly seen that the establishment of these factories has richly paid the Government to manufacture its own powder and to cease being the victim from which the Powder Trust extorted its great profits.

If we need any further proof we need only read the recommendation of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in their fortification bill that passed the House, the recommendations of the Committee on Military Affairs in their bill that has passed the House, and the present recommendation of the Naval Committee in the pending bill. The minds of the members of these various committees have met and their action has been approved by this House in laying down in no uncertain language the doctrine that practically all of the powder used shall be manufactured in United States arsenals and not bought from private plants. It seems to me that there is nothing more needed to prove that this same theory carried into practical operation in the manufacture of our armor would not only meet the approval of the Members of this body but the plaudits of every one of the taxpayers of this Nation, except possibly the Steel Trust.

At this season of the year when great appropriation bills are pending, carrying many millions of dollars for the purchase of guns and ammunition, war scares and war news seem to be quite in fashion. There appeared in one of the Washington papers this statement:

United States at mercy of foreign foe. Garrison and Crozier say country would be helpless in war. Ammunition is lacking.

And in another paper of the same date:

Foe is now feared. Senate committee amazed at unpreparedness for war. Garrison on the stand. Not enough ammunition on hand to make an effective fight, he says—

And so forth.

In the meantime that great patriotic body, the Navy League, were sending out their propaganda urging more battleships. While I think the Navy League, as represented by its executive officers, have not to any great extent misled the people of this country, I do think that the expression, if the quotations be true, of the executive officers of our Army and Navy are entirely improper, and I should favor legislation that would subject an officer of the Army or Navy to court-martial for making public statements that in my judgment are more likely to bring on war than even unpreparedness. [Applause.] If we are totally unprepared for war, and I do not believe we are—basing my opinion upon the statements of Mr. SHERLEY, of the subcommittee of the Appropriation Committee, who has in charge our fortifications, and Mr. HAY, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who has made most excellent statements of facts as to our ammunition reserve, and taking into consideration the fact that for the past years we have expended annually about a quarter of a million dollars for the Army and Navy and have practically been at peace—one would conclude that we are somewhat prepared for war or that our funds had been entirely dissipated. I would much rather believe the statements of these gentlemen who have in charge these great matters of importance, and who have given the matter careful study and have placed the facts in the RECORD, than to listen to the vaporings of scare-head articles.

The discipline of the Army and Navy to a layman seems quite severe. If an ordinary mortal that is not adorned with gold braid and military advices attempts to visit the navy yard, the training schools, or the fortifications, he is at once admonished to leave his kodak outside and the inner secrets are most carefully guarded. To this I raise no objection. It may be necessary. I am not a military man and know but little about military discipline, but I do claim to know common sense, and when the heads of our Army and Navy so far forget themselves as to give to the world statements that we are unprepared for war and at the mercy of the invaders, and military discipline permits this, it strikes me as a perfect illustration of straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel.

Quoting from Pearson's Magazine of November 13, 1913, where a careful analysis of the officers of the Navy League was made, I submit the following:

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan was until his death one of the directors, and intensely interested in the league's work, to which he was a liberal contributor. Mr. Herbert L. Satterlee, general counsel for the league, is a son-in-law and heir of Mr. Morgan.

Gen. Horace Porter is president of the league. He was for many years an officer of the Pullman Co., which is a Morgan corporation.

Mr. Charles G. Glover is treasurer of the league. He is president of the Riggs National Bank, which is closer to Wall Street than any other bank in Washington.

Col. Robert L. Thompson is chairman of the executive committee of the league. He is an eminent financier of New York, whose great interests generally coincide with the colossal undertakings of the Morgan group. He is also the head—being chairman of the board—of the International Nickle Co. and holds the honorable post of president of the New York Metal Exchange.

Mr. J. Frederick Pams is director of the league. He is a New York society and yachting man, a friend of Mr. Morgan and a member of Mr. Morgan's yacht club.

Mr. George von L. Meyer is a director of the league. Mr. Meyer was Secretary of the Navy in the Taft administration and on March 3 signed the remarkable contract for the Pennsylvania's armor that has been the subject for unpleasant comment in Congress and elsewhere. He is a considerable stockholder in the New Haven Railroad, which is a Morgan concern, and is also a director in the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., at Manchester, N. H., and has on the board as his associates Mr. F. C. Dumine, who helped Mr. Morgan to incorporate the Boston Railroad Holding Co., by which the New Haven was enabled to hold the Boston & Maine in spite of certain provisions of the Massachusetts law. Mr. Dumine is also a director of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., which is on friendly terms with the Morgan group and affiliated with United States Steel.

With a board of directors containing all of these wise and experienced men that are on terms of friendship with our greatest captains of industry our defenseless condition may be believed to be in safe hands and the activities of the Navy League to be unremitting.

All civilized nations desire peace, but must peace be assured by the constant building of great navies and the equipment of large armies? It seems so. Until the nations of this earth can realize that they are driving their people on to bankruptcy and stupendous debt we will probably continue to build. The time is not far distant when the people of peace in all civilized countries will cease to listen to the siren song of the interests who sell guns and ammunition and will look to the future welfare of their posterity and demand that their country, with other powers of the globe, enter into a pact of peace. The taxpayers are already tired of this great burden. The following statement was made on the floor of this House recently by Mr. SISSON, of Mississippi, in which he says:

Now, I want to call your attention to the world's condition, and I shall not take up the time of the committee to go into all the smaller nations. In 1911 there were 41 countries enrolled as members of The Hague Tribunal; yet in that same year, according to the Statesman's Yearbook, 30 of these countries spent for army and navy approximately the amounts given below:

Russia	$304,333,585.00
Norway	5,704,934.50
Sweden	23,947,287.40
Denmark	9,210,905.40
Germany	303,290,492.00
Belgium	14,800,511.87
France	289,962,838.00
Italy	126,753,522.00
Austria-Hungary	100,455,565.00
Bulgaria	8,877,421.00
Egypt	5,101,176.00
Japan	65,190,690.00
Argentine	17,518,514.13
Belgian Kongo	2,211,876.50
China	22,365,000.00
Greece	5,757,040.23
Guatemala	2,243,996.00
Mexico	10,833,603.00
Netherlands	20,613,370.72
Peru	2,175,324.00
Portugal	13,595,539.24
Roumania	13,370,782.92
Servia	5,655,841.14
Spain	49,689,752.78
Switzerland	8,515,845.72
Turkey	48,418,131.24
Uruguay	3,580,740.00
Chile	6,100,000.00
Great Britain	339,425,000.00
United States	280,073,619.00
Total	2,109,792,824.79

Now, the current expenses of European Governments have been practically paid—sometimes a little overpaid—each current year out of the current taxes. Therefore the indebtedness of all of Europe—the great nations, at any rate—is a war debt. Now, let us see what it is. The war debt of Europe is as follows:

Austria and Hungary have a bonded war debt of $4,000,000,000; France has a bonded war debt of $7,500,000,000; Germany has a bonded war debt of $5,000,000,000; Italy has a bonded war debt of $2,750,000,000; Russia has a bonded war debt of $4,500,000,000; England has a bonded war debt of $3,500,000,000; or a total of $27,250,000,000.

As will be seen, these six nations have a fixed bonded indebtedness on account of war and the support of armies in time of peace of $27,250,000,000. In other words, all of Europe is mortgaged for the stupendous sum of $27,250,000,000. The interest on that, one authority says, is a little over $900,000,000 annually.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENSLEY. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. BARTON. These figures are stupendous, almost unthinkable, and it seems to me constitutes the greatest peace argument that could be advanced. We are military mad. Each nation striving to outdo the other, and if this continues the only possible result can be the absorption of the Nation's wealth into machines of war that will soon disintegrate, leaving a bankrupt condition in the various nations of the earth. Why should we pursue this ruinous policy? We have never asked any nation to arbitrate with us and been refused. We have been at peace for a hundred years except for a six months' war with one weak European power, a war which we began. We have always had a very small Navy and have always been able to maintain the dignity of this Government on land and sea. Will the people continue to permit these great expenditures?

We all agree that in team work there is strength, but to-day in the same building at the end of Pennsylvania Avenue are three of the great departments of this Government—State, War, and Navy. At one end of this building sits the Secretary of State with his peace plans trying to bring a world into a peace pact which would stop this great outpouring of the world's funds into unprofitable channels, and yet at the other end of the building are the two great departments of War and Navy, both demanding of Congress many millions of dollars for the construction of machinery of war that we hope and pray will never have to be turned upon an enemy. This is not team work, and bound only to result in ineffective results. If we could have team work but for one year with the President of the United States, his Cabinet, the Members of the House and Senate all working together in one great movement toward peace, I am sure that even if the interests who manufacture the munitions of war in foreign countries are most potent the voice of the people who pay the taxes would be heard by the legislators who vote out these great sums of money, and that such an overwhelming and powerful wave of opinion would sweep over the world that the results would be a high tribunal to arbitrate all international matters and assure an everlasting peace. [Applause.] If we must vote out of the Treasury of this country millions of dollars for the purpose of preparing for war, let us limit this expenditure by the most rigid economy.

We have already established our powder factories and we know them to be a success, giving to this Government its vast amount of ammunition at cost. We also know the quality of the powder that we are making. Let us now follow out the recommendations in this bill and prepare for and build an armor plant so that we may save more than a million dollars on each battleship and know the kind and quality of armor that is placed on our machines of war.

In Pearson's Magazine of November, 1913, it states:

The next time the Government wanted armor plate the price from the plant for which it had already paid rose to $646 a ton, and continued at or near these figures until an odd event brought it down. Some workman in the employ of the philanthropist, meaning Mr. Carnegie, made known the fact that the Carnegie Co. was swindling the Government it had already gouged. It was furnishing to that Government fraudulent armor—armor so badly made, so soft and spongy in spots, that if a shell ever hit one of these spots it would slip through like a knife cutting cheese.

At this charge a chorus of most indignant denials filled the air. Would a company composed of our very best citizens and pillars of society and commerce stoop to such detestable things? No, indeed. But the persistent slanders persisted, nevertheless, and low demagogues in Congress and elsewhere made an unseemly clamor, whereupon the Navy Department, just to show how baseless were these stories, ordered reports from the naval officers stationed as inspectors at the various armor-plate mills. These usually found the stories about defective armor to be baseless. But even this distinguished body failed to silence calumniators of true philanthropy——

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. What year was that?

Mr. BARTON. I have not the date at hand. Therefore, investigation was undertaken by a competent commission, which found that the charges were perfectly true. On 11 counts the committee found the Carnegie Co. guilty of repeatedly swindling the Government by palming off worthless armor for good.

It found, for instance, that worthless plate had been accepted, paid for, and placed on war vessels as follows:

On the Amphitrite, 4 plates; on the Terror, 3 plates; on the Oregon, 3 plates; on the Monterey, 3 plates; on the Monadnock, 6 plates; on the New York, 8 plates; on the Olympic, 3 plates; on the Indiana, 6 plates; on the Massachusetts, 4 plates.

When the truth could be no longer concealed Mr. Carnegie's company was hauled up and fined $500,000 for fraud. Then the same subtle and tremendous power that has so often appeared in these matters was exerted, and President Cleveland, a short time before he went out of office, reduced the fine to $120,000.

Meantime the Government continued to buy its armor plate of this convicted swindler, who had already made $5,000,000 of illegitimate profit on its armor-plate deals. Quite a number of libraries would be required to balance this account.

So, again, I say, if we must build machines of war and buy these great quantities of armor plate when we know that there is absolutely no competition, that there are only three firms in the United States that make this class of goods, that they have been charging unreasonable prices all these years, let us then erect an armor-plate factory and make our armor at cost, as we do our powder, therefore making a great saving to the taxpayers of this country, knowing the quality of goods we are using, and at the same time dealing one of the greatest trusts in this world a staggering blow. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY].

Mr. GERRY. Mr. Chairman, adequacy of sea power is a question of the most vital importance to our Nation. The object of the building program contained in this bill is to enable the United States to hold its place among the naval powers of the world. To maintain this position is a duty that rises above politics and rests upon the more solid foundation of patriotism.

The reason that the effect upon military campaigns, of the control of the sea and of waterway transportation, has not been more thoroughly understood in the past is probably because the work done by the sailors was not of a character to show immediate results. But, thanks to careful study, we know to-day how fundamentally important this control has been in many wars. Countries having command of the sea find that fortune smiles in the long run upon their military and commercial efforts. England realized this when she wrested naval supremacy and the ocean-carrying trade from the Dutch, and when she adopted a similar policy toward France. Waterloo was a possibility after the Battle of Trafalgar. The English blockade forced Napoleon to adopt economic policies which injured and antagonized more and more all of Europe, and eventually resulted in his downfall.

From earliest times supremacy on the Mediterranean has been of international importance. Because the Roman galleys were stronger than those of Carthage, Hannibal was forced to go by land instead of by sea and in the crossing of the Alps lost a great part of his army, enough to save Rome.

The Battle of the Nile sealed the fate of Napoleon's control in the East. The last war that Italy carried on in Tripoli was only possible because the Turkish Navy was inferior to the Italian. Could Japan have defeated Russia if she had lost the Battle of Tsushima. These are only a few of the many cases that can be cited to prove that naval support is often the foundation upon which a successful military campaign rests.

The object of sea power is twofold—the prevention of attack upon one's shores and the protection of one's shipping at sea. The United States has a very long coast that would be vulnerable in time of war. Sufficient military fortifications are not practical owing to the number that would be required and the prohibitive cost which they would entail. Dreadnaughts are our best defense. Submarines and torpedo boats are necessary adjuncts, but to depend solely upon them is unwise, for it disregards all sound naval experience and teaching. Small-ship advocates are usually more influenced by the lessening of expenditures than by the results that naval strategists know will follow in war. To rely upon such naval units instead of first line of battleships is to agree to surrender the control of the sea and the rights of our citizens upon it, abandon the islands under our protection, give up the Monroe doctrine, let the Panama Canal Zone be isolated if attacked by foreign fleets, and adopt the defensive ideas of a turtle. When the American people realize this, does anyone think that they will approve such a policy; that they will be willing to submit to any injury to their honor rather than support a proper navy in order to defend it? We know that they will not.

The best defense is an offensive operation. For in war as in everything else moral effect has to be reckoned with, and a country in fear of an attack is in a very different position from one that does not lie under this danger. Few Governments can act with calm judgment when an enemy is close at hand. The pressure brought to bear through popular sentiment and fear nearly invariably results in unsound military action. History proves this.

We are fortunate in the isolated position we enjoy, but with modern inventions this isolation is becoming practically less and less, and even in the early days of the last century it was not so insurmountable that a foreign fleet could not blockade our ports.

One dreadnaught is vastly superior to a number of smaller warships which collectively may have a greater total of tonnage, broadside, and so forth. Two frigates in the time of Nelson were never equal to a battleship, and two or three Oregons to-day are not equal to one New York. The latter having the superiority of speed, range, concentration, weight of broadside, and armament could keep out of harm's way while it destroyed its less efficient opponent. The idea of a ship built 15 or 20 years ago attempting to oppose a modern dreadnaught would not be considered by any naval expert.

To argue that men can do practically everything regardless of equipment is to rely upon the inefficiency of your enemy and not upon your own preparation. There is nothing more dangerous than to underestimate an opponent. It is a good way to court defeat. Courage and ability can do much, but they can not perform the impossible. The country that learns from history and takes advantage of all modern inventions is the one that is bound to succeed. Once a nation has obtained control of the sea it can blockade the ports of its enemy, attack its shores, and harass its commerce at will. Last year our exports amounted to $2,428,506,358 and our imports to $1,813,008,234. Do we want to surrender these to the power of a hostile fleet?

We can but judge the future by the past, and there is no stronger argument for an adequate navy than the history of our country. I wish that the facts were more clearly taught in our schools, for to my mind it is of the highest importance that future citizens should understand what sea power has meant to us.

It was the British control of the sea in the Revolutionary War that enabled them to disembark their troops at will upon the coast, thereby saving their army much of the hardship that ours was forced to endure in long marches. Washington's evacuation of Long Island and New York and the cutting in two of American communications through the control of the Hudson were due to the aid of Admiral Howe's fleet.

The turning factor of the war was the acknowledgment of our independence by France, which was decided upon because of Burgoyne's defeat. Yet how few of us realize that this defeat would not have occurred if the English advance had not been delayed, owing to the necessity of their building ships and wresting the control of Lake Champlain from the small American fleet under Benedict Arnold.

It was the coming of the French fleet under D'Estaing which forced the British to evacuate Philadelphia, and for a while even New York and Narragansett Bay were in danger. How important the latter position was considered can best be judged by Rodney's own words, uttered after it was abandoned, toward the end of the war:

> The evacuating of Rhode Island was the most fatal measure that could possibly have been adopted. It gave up the best and noblest harbor in America, capable of containing the whole navy of Britain, and where they could in all seasons lie in perfect security, and from whence squadrons in 48 hours could blockade the three capital cities of America, namely, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia.

Finally the surrender at Yorktown was, in Washington's opinion, more of a naval than a military victory, for it only became possible after the British fleet was driven away by the French under De Grass and Cornwallis's army cut off from the support of the Navy.

The War of 1812 is an example of the inability of a people to enforce its rights upon the sea unless it has an adequate navy at its command. Had the suggestion of Gouverneur Morris, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, been followed and 20 battleships constructed, how different might the history of our country have been. England never would have dared to enforce her orders in council or Napoleon the Berlin and Milan decrees had the United States at that time been a naval power.

Unfortunately the policy of the country had been to rely upon harbor defenses and gunboats. The few frigates that we had made a splendid record, and are thought of with pride by all Americans; but they could not accomplish the impossible, and when England was freed by the defeat of Napoleon from her European blockade our vessels were driven off the seas, and it was with difficulty that our frigates were kept from falling into the hands of the enemy. Decatur had to take his ships up the Thames above New London, and the Constellation never saw blue water, but was bottled up inside the capes of the Chesapeake. The gunboats that were to protect our coast and harbors were easily driven back, and the city of Washington was burned. If it had not been for Perry's victory on Lake Erie and MacDonough's on Lake Champlain we might even have lost some territory when the treaty of peace was signed.

It is of interest as showing the value of an offensive operation, even if the attacking force is weak, to study the cruises of Bainbridge, Decatur, Rodgers, and Porter. With a few vessels they were able to do considerable damage to British commerce by sailing in the trade routes followed by homegoing ships. The rates of insurance rose, and there was much protesting by English merchants to the admiralty. Porter finally sailed even to the Pacific. He badly injured a whaling industry there, with the result that a fleet had to be sent against him. These cruises created more uncertainty and trouble for the English Government than 500 gunboats could have done.

During the Civil War the taking of New Orleans by Farragut probably prevented Napoleon III from recognizing the Confederacy. The control of the Mississippi detached the main part of these States from one of their chief sources of supply, and this, with the blockading of the Atlantic coast, destroyed all commerce and finally bankrupted them.

To-day our Navy stands in third place. A few years ago it was second; but with the increased activities of Germany, it has now dropped down to third, with the danger of occupying a still lower grade unless we carry out the dreadnaught program contained in this bill. This rating is not based upon the opinion of American officers alone. It is the opinion of the experts of the world; and to argue that we have not been given our proper position is to say that these recognized naval authorities are not rightly deciding the question, which is a proposition too ridiculous even to be considered.

The total tonnage of Great Britain is 2,072,711, Germany 943,338, and the United States 760,002 tons. When the proposed vessels now building are completed England will have 2,611,291, Germany 1,228,208, and the United States 921,446 tons. Germany has built and is building 26 battleships as against 14 of the United States, built and building. It has been argued that the Indiana, Oregon, and Massachusetts should not be eliminated in computing the strength of our Navy, but it is an established rule of all nations to disregard a battleship launched 20 years ago, and these vessels fall under that class. Besides, their tonnage, speed, and the caliber of their guns are less than the German ships of the class of the Kaiser Frederick III. The Michigan and South Carolina can not be considered as dreadnaughts, because they have but 8 big guns, where the average dreadnaught has 10 or 12. They are 2 or 3 knots too slow and are not of sufficient tonnage. The above are a few of the many convincing reasons that explain the rating of the different ships by the experts.

One hundred and thirty-nine million dollars is a very large appropriation, but to cut it down by building less dreadnaughts is a suicidal policy, for the main object of this expenditure is to retain our position among the world's sea powers, and the only way this can be done is by constructing these first line of battleships. If it is not considered worth while to expend $30,000,000 for this purpose, it is hardly worth while to pay $109,000,000 for a Navy that will be dropping backward and deteriorating. It would seem like supporting the upkeep of an army but refusing to supply it with guns. Undoubtedly we pay more for our Navy than do other nations, but this to a great extent is due to the higher wages we give our people. Germany, for instance, has conscription, and many less naval stations. The 35 naval establishments we maintain are too many. If the suggestion made to a former Secretary of the Navy was carried out and Narragansett Bay and Newport News were made the only two naval bases on the Atlantic coast, with a similar number on the Pacific coast, an advantageous reform would be accomplished.

The proper way to regard our Navy is in the light of a form of insurance. Why should not a Government follow the principles of a shrewd business man? If we compare the cost of the Navy at different times with the wealth of the country at these times, we shall find what a small comparative charge it has been. Take the figures of Mulhall up to the census of 1850, and then the figures of the census, which would give us a valuation every 10 years, commencing with 1800. The following is a table made up on this basis. It shows that the average cost of the Navy as compared with the total property of the United States which it has to protect has amounted to a little over a mill:

Years.	Average valuation computed.	Average naval expenditure.	Percentage.
1801-1810	$1,321,245,000	$1,636,732	0.00123
1811-1820	1,732,470,000	4,675,502	.00269
1921-1830	2,335,930,000	3,295,086	.00141
1831-1840	3,301,915,000	5,041,751	.00152
1841-1850	5,637,199,000	7,237,696	.00129
1851-1860	12,198,889,800	11,996,977	.00098
1861-1870	23,718,414,100	46,848,730	.00197
1871-1880	36,983,933,100	19,658,796	.00053
1881-1890	54,959,300,050	16,867,629	.00030
1891-1900	81,131,690,950	38,635,164	.00047
1901-1910	110,000,000,000	100,678,000	.00091
General average			0.00120

The Commissioner of Pensions, in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, gives the amount of pensions to date, as follows:

War of 1812, service pensions	$45,923,014.46
War with Mexico, service pensions	47,632,572.34
Civil War, service pensions	4,294,596,944.47
	4,388,152,531.27

I have not been able to find the exact cost of the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the Civil War up to the present time, but Kremer's One Hundred Great Battles gives the following statistics. They evidently include pensions:

War of 1812	$107,159,903
Mexican War	100,000,000
Civil War	10,189,929,900
	10,397,089,803

I do not believe that these figures of Mr. Kremer are exaggerated. If we consider the damage to our Nation in the Civil War alone arising on account of the increased insurance on all American vessels, of the loss of exports and imports, the destruction of commerce, and the annihilation of our merchant marine, is it not easy to believe that the figures are rather under than over estimated? Keep in mind these facts, and the appropriation of $139,000,000 for a Navy to protect us and possibly prevent some future war does not seem extravagant. I believe that from the viewpoint of sound business prudence there is no item that we can less afford to eliminate from our budget than the $30,000,000 for battleships.

It may be all right to take theoretical stands in favor of universal peace, but the world has not yet arrived at a point of civilization where it is a possibility. The only way that we can enforce policies that we believe are right and which affect our honor is by a proper navy. The history of the world teaches that the greatest factor for peace in any country is adequate preparation. Germany in modern times has been probably the most military of all nations, yet she has not had a war for over 40 years.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GERRY. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman has considered the destruction of property and the monetary consideration, but he has not taken up the loss of human life. Has the gentleman any estimate as to the many human lives that were lost in the Civil War?

Mr. GERRY. No; but there would have been more if it had not been for the United States Navy, because without it the war probably would have been prolonged.

The argument has been made that not to increase our Navy this year would be an example for other nations to follow, but our authorization of but one battleship last year and one the year before did not make England, Germany, France, or Japan decrease their navy building. Such a program can only be successful when agreed to by all the great powers of the world. Until all stop building no one can, for to do so simply means to drop back and lose the advantages already gained.

Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt that the American people as a whole are overwhelmingly in favor of proper naval strength so that our voice can not be ignored in the council of nations nor our demands refused when we know that they are just. The two-battleship program is popular because it is both sound and patriotic, and a very heavy responsibility rests with this House in determining whether or not we shall sustain it. The importance of the policy requires that the issue be decided on broad, national, and statesmanlike reasoning, for the action that we take may be a determining factor in the future welfare of our country. Should we refuse this support we must do so realizing that if war arose the responsibility of the country's state of preparedness would rest with us, and that should any ill fortune come because of the lack of naval strength, those who voted against the bill would have to bear the onus and the remorse.

For though Allah and earth pardon sin, remaineth forever remorse.

[Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS] to use some of his time.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, the United States owes no apology to the Republic of Colombia. If the present crisis in Mexico emphasizes one fact more than another, it emphasizes that fact. This Government could not temporize longer with Huerta and save its self-respect. We could not have temporized with Marroquin in 1903 and saved either our self-respect or our rights.

We have been, among the nations of the world and in the history of the world, peculiarly the benefactor and protector of other nations. Within a period of less than 100 years the great powers have divided Africa and Asia. We have held the Western Hemisphere inviolable against European conquest and partition. We have seen the great Republics of Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, and their sister States rise to power and wealth. We have coveted nothing but the friendship of their people. And this we have had, except in those instances, happily temporary, where the passing adventurer or scheming faction, fattening on revolution, have prejudiced the people against us. We have been kind. We have been patient. We have been faithful to the interests of the New World, and in our dealings with these sister nations we have been straightforward and just.

Now, after over 100 years of benefactions, this Nation is asked to cloud the greatest physical achievement possible in the Western Hemisphere with an expression of regret to a blackmailing faction in Colombia. We are asked, at the crowning moment of accomplishment of the greatest engineering work in history, to taint our unselfish service to the nations of the earth with a confession of obliquity. There is no Government in the world which could compel the confession. There is no Government which would try. For the humiliating demand comes, not from without, but from within.

The news comes from Paris that we have concluded a treaty with Colombia in which the Government of the United States, in the name of the people of the United States, expresses sincere regret to the Republic of Colombia for our attitude at the time of the creation of the Republic of Panama. This is done in no mere polite usage of diplomatic phrase. A previous treaty negotiated with Colombia in 1909 by ELIHU ROOT, then Secretary of State, has no such qualification. It is a straight-out, abject apology. And for what?

Twelve years ago in Colombia the President was Marroquin. He was another Huerta. Elected as vice president, he was soon in the President's chair, for the elected President, M. A. Saclamente, treacherously seized and thrown into prison, under duress resigned. A little while before, the trip of the Oregon had renewed American interest in building the canal. A commission had been appointed to consider canal routes. Theodore Roosevelt was President and was bringing to the task the pressure of his marvelous executive genius, initiative, and energy. The Panama route was preempted by the French company. That company asked a prohibitive price for its rights. The American commission recommended the Nicaragua route. Then the French company, which had asked $100,000,000 for its rights, reduced its demand to $40,000,000.

The United States agreed to make the bargain provided Colombia would consent to the transfer to the United States of the French company's right in return for the payment of $10,000,000 in cash by the United States. A treaty to this effect was submitted to Marroquin. That individual was not actuated by a desire to accomplish a great work for the world. He was after American gold. The most direct route to it was, of course, in the immediate acceptance of the $10,000,000. But a more indirect route fired his imagination. In 1904, within two years, the French company's rights expired. If he could stave off the conclusion of the bargain until 1904 he believed he would obtain the $40,000,000 in addition to the $10,000,000. Marroquin first agreed to the treaty, but a Congress, elected for the purpose and dominated by Marroquin, craftily rejected the treaty.

The people of the State of Panama were outraged by this conduct. The completion of the canal was vital to their well-being. The Marroquin bunco game of waiting until 1904 meant not only delay, but it meant that France, in protection of the French company, would be down in the Isthmus, and international complications would follow. Moreover, Panama had had a full share of trouble. In 53 years, from 1850 to 1902, it had, on its record, 53 revolutions, rebellions, and insurrections. It was generally known to those interested that the rejection of the treaty by Marroquin's Congress in 1903 would be followed by trouble in Panama. The newspaper correspondents there knew it. The foreign consuls knew it. And two United States Army officers, Capt. Humphrey and Lieut. Murphy, who had returned from the Isthmus, saw President Roosevelt on October 16, 1903, and told him there would unquestionably be a revolution on the Isthmus. Roosevelt did not temporize. He never does. He acted. There were American citizens to protect, and he directed the Navy Department to station various ships within easy reach of the Isthmus.

On November 3 the revolution occurred. One life was lost. A Chinaman was killed by a shell from a Colombian gunboat. The Republic of Panama was established. It was recognized by the United States and the rest of the world. De Marroquin, the designs of his eager cupidity fading into thin air, offered to accept the original terms if the United States would restore Colombian sovereignty over Panama. He confessed his turpitude, the cheap blackmail game he had attempted and failed in. His offer was rejected. Panama prospered and passed into 12 years of peace she had not known for half a century. This is the transaction, told briefly. One year after the transaction Theodore Roosevelt was elected President by the largest majority ever received by a President. Afterwards, reviewing his official activities and having in mind those critics who asserted that he had fomented revolution at the Isthmus, he wrote:

No one connected with the American Government had any part in preparing, inciting, or encouraging the revolution, and except for the reports of our military and naval officers, which I forwarded to Congress, no one connected with the Government had any previous knowledge concerning the proposed revolution, except such as was accessible to any person who read the newspapers and kept abreast of current questions and current affairs. By the unanimous action of its people and without the firing of a shot the State of Panama declared itself an independent republic. The time for hesitation on our part had passed.

With these facts in mind let us examine the text of the treaty between the United States and Colombia in settlement of the controversy over Panama, as published in the Paris Temps:

ARTICLE 1. The Government of the United States, desiring to put an end to all disputes and differences with the Republic of Colombia occasioned by events which have brought about the present situation in the Isthmus of Panama, in its name and in the name of the people of the United States, expresses sincere regret for anything that may have interrupted or altered the relations of cordial friendship existing long between the two nations. The Government of the Republic of Colombia, in its name and in the name of the Colombian people, accepts that declaration in the full assurance that every obstacle for the re-establishment of complete harmony between the two countries will thus disappear.

ART. 2. Colombia will enjoy freely and in perpetuity the free passage through the canal of its troops, supplies, and warships.

An explanatory clause says that the same article stipulates commercial advantages for Colombian products imported through the Canal Zone, special advantages in Panama Railway traffic when service by the canal is interrupted for any cause, and when its use is required for Colombian agents and troops and for war material, and also advantages for traffic in Colombian products, especially coal, oil, and salt.

ART. 3. Payment to Colombia, six months after the exchange of ratifications of the treaty, of the sum of $25,000,000 is stipulated.

ART. 4. Colombia recognizes Panama as an independent nation, with the limits laid down by the Colombian law of June 9, 1855, the line of which on the Pacific Ocean will terminate at a point equidistant between Cocalito and Ardita. The United States undertakes to induce the Government of Panama to send an agent to negotiate with Colombia a treaty of peace and friendship, in which shall be introduced an arrangement relative to the pecuniary liabilities of the two countries, in conformity with precedent and with the principles of law.

The treaty which Secretary of State Root negotiated with Colombia in 1909 had no apology. Its preamble read:

The United States of America and the Republic of Colombia, being equally animated by a desire to remove all obstacles to a good understanding between them and to facilitate the settlement of the questions heretofore pending between Colombia and Panama by adjusting at the same time the relations of Colombia to the canal which the United States is now constructing across the Isthmus of Panama, have resolved to conclude a treaty, and to that end have appointed——

This Government was not guilty of moral relaxation in its attitude. And there can be no justification in the expression of regrets.

Col. Roosevelt has said:

We did our best to get Colombia to let us treat her with a more than generous justice; we exercised patience to beyond the verge of proper forbearance. When we did act and recognize Panama, Colombia at once acknowledged her own guilt by promptly offering to do what we had demanded and what she had protested it was not in her power to do. But the offer came too late. * * * Colombia was solely responsible for her own humiliation; and she had not then, and has not now, one shadow of claim upon us, moral or legal; all the wrong that was done was done by her.

John Hay has said:

The action of the President [Roosevelt] in the Panama matter is not only in the strictest accordance with principles of justice and equity, and in line with all the best precedents of our public policy, but it was the only course he could have taken in compliance with our treaty rights and obligations.

Theodore Roosevelt needs no defense from me or from any man. The record of his administration is beyond the reach of calumny. He made progress and he maintained peace and prosperity. His life is a throbbing, vital part of his day and age. His acts have written the strongest, the most virile, the most moving chapters to be found in the history of this generation. Whether it was sending, as an officer to his Government, the protest for the private soldiers in fever-stricken Cuba, or as a private citizen ramming back down the throat of a slandering editor the accusation of intemperance, or inaugurating as President a great policy, every act of his reflects courage, integrity, rectitude. And every year since he left the White House adds emphasis to his surpassing statesmanship.

It was his statesmanship which vitalized the neglected Sherman antitrust law; which found the way to arbitration between capital and labor; which revived the interstate-commerce laws; which strengthened the public service in every department, built up the efficiency of the Army and the Navy; which added new administrative departments and new activities; extended the Government's protection over the food of the people; expanded the advantages of the post office; gave stable government to Cuba; set the Filipinos upon their feet; inaugurated the great policy of conservation; forwarded the national projects of reclamation and irrigation. It was his statesmanship that brought peace after the bloodiest war in 50 years—the struggle between Russia and Japan.

It was his genius which wrought the dream of Balboa, after 400 years, into reality. It was his initiative which turned the mighty engine of this people's energy to the work at the Isthmus. It was his gift at organization which has given to the world in 12 years, without scandal, its foremost engineering achievement—the canal. [Applause.]

Shall this Government "in the name of the people of the United States," at the hour of completion of the canal, at the moment of righteous pride in national accomplishment, accept the hypocritical contentions of a trafficking Marroquin, and express regrets for the strong, square, open acts of a Roosevelt? [Applause.]

It is an outrage against the record of Roosevelt to express regrets. It is an outrage to extend in the name of the people of the United States, who indorsed him and his acts, an apology to anyone. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS].

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] delivered a remarkable speech in this House on Friday last, when the bill now before the House was under discussion.

It was remarkable for beauty and lucidity of expression. It was remarkable for the lofty altruism that pervaded it.

It was remarkable as a logical demonstration that war is irrational and unnecessary at the very moment when the sable-plumaged vultures of war are hovering over the country.

With the hopes and aspirations expressed I am in most hearty accord.

Civilization had not proceeded very far until courts founded upon approximations to justice, a sense of which exists in the breasts of the most primitive man, were established for the purpose of settling the disputes of individuals by appeals to reason.

Society, government, will not permit the individual to take the law into his own hands.

Every injury to his property, his person, or his honor must be righted in courts of justice. Even the attempt to enforce his rights by violence is an offense against society.

And so, Mr. Chairman, I have long since believed that the day will come when the community of nations will establish a great international tribunal where all nations will be obliged to take their quarrels for settlement, and the decree of that tribunal will be a final adjudication of any cause of complaint whether it should be of injury to property or national honor precisely as such complaints of individuals are now settled in our civil courts, and the decrees of such tribunal should be enforced by the aggregate power of all nations as the decrees of our civil courts are now enforced by the aggregate power of the individuals of the community establishing the court.

But just here, Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to differ somewhat from the distinguished gentleman.

Not indeed as to the end he has in view, but as to the road he would take to reach it.

He believes that "justice can be substituted for force as a basis of government."

I agree that it is greatly to be desired that justice should be substituted for force.

But regarding the slowness of human nature to change, I am confident that any tribunal without the physical power to enforce its decrees will be a failure.

With all our vaunted civilization physical force is necessary. Behind all our great institutions, our schools, our churches, our courts, stands the soldier.

Disraeli once said "sentiment rules the world," but it does not yet rule all the world.

The sentiment of justice happily rules in our civil communities, but it does not rule all individuals of our communities. Courts are necessary, and sheriffs and policemen and soldiers are necessary to enforce its decrees, and a community whose courts have no physical force behind them would soon go to pieces.

Besides, honest litigants quarrel when each thinks justice is on his side, and when they come before a tribunal that tribunal must have the physical power to enforce its judgment of the justice of the cause or its decrees can be disregarded, which, in the case of national litigants, would be likely to follow in spite of all agreements, conventions, treaties, or sense of justice, and one such case would thoroughly discredit the tribunal.

As I said on a former occasion in this House, war, irrational, abhorrent, is not an unmitigated evil.

The stairway of human progress is an escalade of battles.

Mankind, from the puling babe to the potent Senator, only learns by knocking his head against the rugged rocks of experience.

Man is a fighting animal. Under the veneer of national civilization sleeps the tiger and the wolf, and I doubt whether the nations, the great nations, the civilized nations, have yet learned enough from the experience of war to abolish war by the power of public sentiment.

There is something in war itself that appeals strangely to the human heart.

The patriot who falls in the red front of battle is ever reared upon a higher pedestal than the statesman who from the retirement of his closet commands the destiny of the State.

There is such an utter unselfishness, such devotion, of the man who dies for his country that it creates, inspires, and uplifts public sentiment.

Tennyson sings:

> The placid arts of peace smell of meanness and deceit, while the tocsin of war transforms the clerk into a warrior patriot.

There are sentiments that lie deep in the human heart and that will make the Hague tribunal or any other tribunal without physical power to enforce its decree chimerical.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, there will come a day when national disputes will be settled in an international court, and that day can be and is being hastened by the efforts of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri and other enlightened men throughout the world.

No court, civil or international, can compel obedience to its decrees by "sentiments of justice." Public opinion can not compel, for the litigant, if a nation, may choose to defy public opinion.

If the United States, instead of haggling over the question of one battleship or two battleships, should set about to build a Navy such as she easily could, that would be paramount on every sea, and from her great throne of physical and moral power should call a congress of all nations, or if England, Germany, and the United States would unite to establish an international court to police the world, endowed with the physical power to enforce its decrees, and should decree the disarmament of all nations except for internal police, an enormous burden would be lifted from the shoulders of sweating millions and the uselessness and the impossibility of war would be speedily recognized by all mankind.

Mr. Chairman, until such a court shall be established we shall always be in danger of war, even though the Hague tribunal and arbitration may be more or less efficacious in composing national disputes.

At the very moment when the gentleman was making his speech orders from this Capitol sent a great fleet steaming southward, threatening war to a poor, distressed people already torn by savage uncivilized internecine conflict.

The cryptic utterances of the President but a few days ago portended grave troubles unless we should secure the good will of England by a surrender of what the American people believe to be their honorable rights in the Panama Canal. If his utterances meant anything, they meant threatened war.

The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who was assumed to speak advisedly and within the President's confidence, painted a dreadful picture of the horrors of war which would result unless the surrender at Panama should be made.

Under such circumstances, Mr. Chairman, war seems to be not only possible but imminent, and international peace far in the vistas of the future.

At such a time talk even of reducing the Navy—for we have little need for an Army save as an internal police and a school—is imprudent.

The great warrior-soldier Washington was a man of peace, and I commend his farewell address to those who would depend upon altruism and love of justice as a national defense.

In a dozen years the United States, if she chose to do so—and if Mr. Carnegie would give up what he has made out of armor plate it wouldn't cost very much—could build a Navy that would render her impregnable at every point and enable her to command the peace of the world.

This great peace-loving Nation then could, backed by her guns, create an international public sentiment that would result in disarmament, and we would have peace through government based on justice backed by force sufficient to silence dissentients.

If we had adopted such a policy years ago, there would have been no demand for a surrender of the Panama Canal to England.

There would have been none of these scare stories of Japanese invasion, none of this flouting of the Monroe doctrine, and none of the destruction of the lives and property of American citizens that has been permitted in Mexico for more than a year past.

Mr. Chairman, I favor a wise economy.

I am not familiar with the numerous items of this bill.

But I see so much of extravagance and waste in every department that I assume that there is need to examine closely the items of this bill and to cut out extravagances and waste. But I am in favor of an adequate Navy.

An honorable peace is the best investment this great, throbbing, pulsing Nation can make.

And preparation for war in the present state of world sentiment is the best prevention of war. [Applause.]

I would invest in a great Navy precisely as a prudent business man pays for fire insurance in proportion to the property he has at risk.

Practical men take the world not as they would like it to be, not as they hope it will be, but as it is. While we talk about peace and justice and public sentiment and world power, American citizens in all the South American Republics, and, for that matter, everywhere else, when they get into trouble, seek the protection not of the American but the British flag.

The scorn and contumely with which both factions in Mexico have treated American diplomacy should be a lesson to us.

I would take a brace on our Americanism.

I would make America proverbial the world over for standing up to her contracts.

I would announce to the world that the United States was going to control the Panama Canal precisely according to contract—"that the shipping of all nations would have the use of the canal on equitable terms without discriminations." But as to our own shipping, coastwise or deep sea, we would let them go through free, or we would not let them go through free, or part free, just as we might from time to time choose. Whether we subsidize or do not is no affair of Great Britain. She subsidizes her ships and we have the same right. Whether we choose to exercise that right is our business, and ours alone.

And if there is anybody who really thinks the United States built the canal so that all nations would have equal rights with herself in it, I would promptly disabuse their minds and proceed to make of that canal a great strategic naval and commercial base that in time of war would command both oceans and in time of peace prove a vantage ground from which an American merchant marine, now swept from the seas, might be reestablished, while at the same time giving all nations the use of the canal on just terms.

I would make the American flag known and respected in every part of the world.

The world does not know the American flag. It does not know the powerful, peace-loving, fair-dealing, big-hearted people the Stars and Stripes represent.

Send it out to the world; send it out in peace, please God, but send it out in power, panoplied by the tremendous energies of the mightiest people of earth. [Applause.]

O beautiful banner! Splendid in thy red stripes, that represent the red blood of manly hosts that have died on the field of honor that thou mightst live; splendid in thy pearly white, that stands for the pure hearts and purposes of patriots, living and dead, that have made thee the flag of the brave and the free; splendid in thine azure field, that proclaims faith in God, in justice, and the right; splendid in thy silvery stars, that light up the pathway to lofty achievement! Thrice splendid thou, O beautiful banner, for thou alone amidst all the proud standards and escutcheons of the nations of the earth, thou only dost represent a land where man may be free—free, with such abilities and capacities as God has given him, to work out his own fortunes unbuttressed and undeterred by class, rank, or privilege! [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from California, my colleague, Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Chairman, the bill under discussion carries two items that seem very small in comparison with the many large items that of necessity are in this bill, but are of great importance to the efficiency of the Navy on the lower Pacific coast. These are an item of $45,000 for the erection of coal-storage bins and one of $50,000 to provide for fuel-oil storage, on a wharf already completed by the Government for this purpose, on San Diego Bay.

The matter of establishing a coaling station at this point was first brought to the attention of the Navy Department in 1900. An investigation was made immediately by the Bureau of Equipment, the result of which was a recommendation that a site be acquired for a coaling station on the reservation under the control of the War Department. Later this coal-depot property was turned over to a custodian of the Navy Department, and the general board recommended the establishment of a station with a capacity of 20,000 tons.

The preparation of plans and specifications was not undertaken until 1904, the delay being due principally to the difficulties attendant upon the proximity to the quarantine station, so that the construction of any work at the station was deferred until 1907. Contract for the construction of cottages and a stable was effected in June, 1907, and in October of the same year contract was let for the construction of the wharf, costing somewhere in the neighborhood of $200,000.

It was my pleasure to walk through the 7-foot casing that inclosed the cluster of piles and cement for each of the piers. The entire construction, on the same durable, far-sighted basis, makes this one of the finest wharves on the Pacific coast.

In 1909 active operations were discontinued, and I have learned since becoming a Member of Congress that the department had set aside a certain amount with which to finish this work, but that some emergency had caused it to be diverted.

Concerning the need for an adequate fuel supply at this point, I quote from a letter written in December, 1912, by Admiral George Dewey:

> The geographical situation of San Diego, 450 miles south of San Francisco, close to the Mexican border, and the nearest United States port to Panama on the Pacific coast, points to its being a frequent port of call for the Navy as well as for commercial vessels when the canal is in operation. The Navy now has a coaling wharf at San Diego, and the harbor is used as a base for a part of the drills of the Pacific torpedo flotilla; the capital ships of the Pacific Fleet are at this date engaged in target practice in the immediate vicinity. The general board believes it probable that the naval use of this port will increase in the future rather than the reverse. There is room in the inner harbor for at least 16 capital ships in quiet, perfectly protected water, and there is now a limited coast defense.

I wish to emphasize this matter of a quiet inner harbor.

The first observation we have of record is that of Cabrillo, the discoverer of San Diego Bay, who entered in his ship's log, in September, 1542:

> A very great gale blew from the southwest; the port being good, we felt nothing.

Father Junipera Serra, in July, 1769, established at San Diego the first mission in California, and in his letters mentioned the similarity in climate to his beloved Spain.

Sixty years later Richard Henry Dana visited San Diego, and in his "Two Years Before the Mast" left a record of early life in California. In 1835 he describes the storm winds of California and mentions San Diego as one of three ports in California safe from these winds.

Alexander Agassiz, in 1872, stated:

> In enumerating the peculiar advantages of San Diego, there seems to be one which is of great importance. Perhaps, as a scientific man, I may lay more stress upon it than is necessary, but I hardly think it possible. I have seen many parts of the world and have made some study of this subject. It is the question of your climate. * * * This is one of the favored spots on the earth. * * *

When Gen. A. W. Greely, as Chief Signal Officer of the Army, was at the head of the United States Weather Service he contributed a paper on the climates of the United States.

In this article he said:

> The American public is familiar on all sides with elaborate and detailed statements of the weather at a thousand and one resorts. If we may believe all we read in such reports, the temperature never reaches the eighties, the sky is flecked with just enough of cloud to perfect the landscape, the breezes are always balmy, and the nights ever cool. There is possibly one place in the United States where such conditions prevail—a bit of country about 40 miles square, at the extreme southwestern part of the United States, in which San Diego is situated.

Quoting from a book, "Climate and Weather of San Diego," prepared under the direction of Willis L. Moore, Chief United States Weather Bureau, by Ford A. Carpenter, for several years local forecaster:

> The climate of San Diego is characterized by uniformity of temperature and invariability of sunshine. The temperature covers a short range and the sunshine is even more constant in winter than in summer. San Diego may truthfully be said to have the shortest thermometer in the United States with one exception—the southeast Farallone Islands.

Concerning the strategic importance of this harbor, 11 nautical miles north of the Mexican border, 89 nautical miles south of Los Angeles, and 482 nautical miles south of San Francisco, it is the nearest port of call for the fleets of the world passing through Panama. It is a landlocked bay, varying in width from 600 to 4,000 feet and about 15 miles long. The bar is generally smooth, 570 feet wide, and 35 feet deep at mean lower low water; the middle ground is always smooth, with a depth of 32 feet at mean lower low water. The State has turned the water frontage over to the city, and a municipal pier has just been completed at a cost of more than $1,000,000. This includes a bulkhead of 2,675 linear feet and the reclamation of tidelands to the extent of 50 to 60 acres, with 1,460 acres of tidelands owned by the city.

Besides her own immediate back country, which is being developed rapidly, the railroad into Imperial Valley and Arizona, now nearing completion, will tap an unlimited supply of food products, with fresh vegetables 12 months in the year at reasonable rates. This, I understand, is an item of great importance to the Navy Department in its problem of providing for the hundreds of men in each branch of the service.

This strategic importance in connection with our relations with Mexico and Central and South America has long been recognized, and the closer relations with these countries for which we had hoped through the opening of the Panama Canal first led our people to think of a unique "Exposition of Opportunity" to celebrate this opening.

The unfortunate civil war in Mexico, however, has put us on the defensive, as a border city, thinking of how we shall best equip ourselves against her instead of how we could cooperate with her, as we had hoped, in the opening up of her vast desert territory in the north, as we have begun to open up our vast desert country in the south and west, through the reclamation principles and methods.

A story is told of an admiral of the Pacific Squadron anchored at San Diego for target practice and drill during the war between Russia and Japan.

The admiral seemed very much worried.

"What's the matter?" asked a friend. "Ham and eggs not right for breakfast?"

"Ham and eggs!" burst out the admiral. "It's not ham and eggs I'm thinking about; it's coal. Are you aware, sir, that as far as use on war vessels is concerned this is a coalless coast from Vancouver to Valparaiso? If war involved the United States, where do you think we'd get coal to sustain our fleet?"

An incident that illustrates in some measure the necessity for the completion of this fuel-storage station occurred some time ago when the Denver, lying at San Diego, received orders to proceed to Acapulco to protect American interests. With no adequate supply of coal at hand, the cruiser was compelled to await the arrival of a collier. Under the circumstances of that time there was probably no desperate hurry, but under the present circumstances one may easily conceive of the value of this fuel supply close to the border, especially by a glance at the map to note the long Mexican coast line.

As a business proposition is it wise to allow this magnificent fuel wharf to remain practically useless for the want of the comparatively small appropriation required to equip it thoroughly when the needs are so great and the ships assigned for duty must either wait for a collier or proceed to San Francisco for fuel and then back by San Diego to Mexican waters, Central America, or the Panama Canal? [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the Commoner seems to be quite an official organ these days. I have here a short signed statement by the distinguished Secretary of State, which appeared in the last edition of the Commoner, just out, together with some very short comments upon it in this morning's New York Sun. The article is entitled "Counting the battleships and regiments," and came out the very day our fleet was speeding to Mexican waters, and we were, in effect, declaring war. I ask to have the article read from the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

"COUNTING THE BATTLESHIPS AND REGIMENTS."

The Commoner, out to-day, contains a signed article by its proprietor, the Secretary of State of the United States of America, ending with the three astounding paragraphs here subjoined:

"If our Nation desires to be measured by intellectual and ethical standards, how unworthy to brag of our strength and threaten to use that strength. 'We are ready to fight' does not arouse the enthusiasm that it did a few centuries ago. Brute force is not the level upon which this Nation settles controversies to-day; the question is not what we can do, but what we ought to do.

"The path of history is strewn with the wreck of nations that boasted that they were all powerful; they went down under Jehovah's inexorable law—and the 'God who ruled over Babylon is the God who is ruling yet.'"

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

"This question must be decided on moral principles and not by the counting of our regiments and battleships.

"What shall it profit a nation if it conquers the whole world and loses its faith in the doctrine that 'righteousness exalteth a nation'?

"W. J. BRYAN."

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Think of it!

The New York Sun comments editorially as follows:

This mess of apocalyptic rhetoric and ecstatic exhortation was put forth unofficially from the Department of State by the Secretary of State on the very day when the administration of which he, next to the President, is the principal figure, was counting its battleships and making an unprecedented demonstration of naval strength and threatening to use that strength; declaring that it is "ready to fight," and actually appealing to Congress for full war powers wherewith to settle an international controversy by brute force.

And Secretary Bryan indignantly denies that he thinks of resigning.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Is not the Commoner the same paper which in its last issue published the administration version of the Panama Canal tolls question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think it is. However, I am not able to subscribe to the Commoner. I can not, therefore, keep up with all of the official statements published in that journal.

Mr. MOORE. Is it not true that a great many statements which bear the stamp of official sanction appear in the Commoner that are not conveyed by way of information to Congress?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It would seem so.

Mr. MOORE. It would seem that we have here a gentleman who believes in peace in the Commoner, but as Secretary of State, if we consider the action taken yesterday, is advocating war with a foreign power. How are we to harmonize these conflicting interests in one personality?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am sure that I do not know; but I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have admired and do admire the efforts of Mr. Bryan in the Commoner, at least, toward a world-wide peace. If the distinguished Nebraskan has two characters, permit me, then, to say I admire the "Commoner" character.

I advocated here not long ago, during an opportunity I had to make a short address, the placing of the white nations of the world upon a peace footing, and I desire to make a few remarks upon that subject.

A union of the great white nations means peace. Such a union, on a peace footing, is insurance against war. Other great nations will be glad to come down to the peace footing of the United States. It may take some time to bring about this, but our fearful difficulties in Mexico only emphasize the necessity for it. Here we are face to face with a war which no one wants, and 337 Members of this House voting for an ambiguous resolution which most of those who voted for it did not want.

On yesterday's vote but 37 Members voted against that ambiguous resolution which comes as near meaning war as anything can mean, and yet pretends not to mean war. The 37 voting "no" were:

DEMOCRATS.

George of New York, Stephens of Mississippi, Witherspoon and Sisson of Mississippi, and Kindel of Colorado.

PROGRESSIVES.

Bell of California, Temple of Pennsylvania, and Kent of California.

REPUBLICANS.

Anthony of Kansas, Ainey of Pennsylvania, Bartholdt of Missouri, Britten of Illinois, Butler of Pennsylvania, Campbell of Kansas, Davis of Minnesota, Fordney of Michigan, French of Idaho, Gardner of Massachusetts, Gillett of Massachusetts, Good of Iowa, Hays of California, Howell of Utah, Johnson of Utah, Johnson of Washington, Kahn of California, La Follette of Washington, Langham of Pennsylvania, Mann of Illinois, Madden of Illinois, Mondell of Wyoming, Platt of New York, Sells of Tennessee, Steenerson of Minnesota, Stevens of Minnesota, Volstead of Minnesota, and Woods of Iowa.

The President said in his message yesterday that he did not need the authority of Congress to go ahead. And he did not. I predict that he will go ahead against Huerta without waiting for the Senate to strike from the resolution its ambiguous words. [Since this paragraph was placed in type we have gone to war. The Senate is still at work in an effort to perfect the resolution adopted by the House yesterday.]

No one wants this war. No one believes that we have taken all the steps which can be taken to prevent this war. One day we vote almost unanimously to indorse the resolution of Sir Winston Churchill for a naval vacation, and almost the next day—in the same session of the Sixty-third Congress at least—we vote ourselves into war. How can we go on with our peace treaties with all the nations of the world?

We are going to war without a cheer; without a martial note. There is no "Spirit of '76" in this war. The country has not been oppressed by foreign tyrants. There is no "Remember the Maine." No ship has been blown up. This is not like 1812. No American ships have been seized. Thornton's Cavalry has not been destroyed, as in 1846. No Fort Sumter has been fired upon. But war is here. Next comes an appropriation of $50,000,000 or more. It will be granted. It is now our country, right or wrong. And soon we may look for the lists of dead and wounded and missing. There have been 8,000 wars since civilization has recorded its actions, and all have told the same story of horror. Oh, how many have started from trivial causes? Read your histories.

Why not proceed to peace treaties with the five great white nations? Then we can stop war and take the soldiers off of the backs of the people. Then, too, we shall be in an alliance which can not fail, and when the time comes for Caucasian and Mongol to meet, be it 20 years from now or 200 years from now, we are ready. Besides, such an alliance would postpone—postpone possibly for generations—the conflict which has been inevitable since Caucasian and Mongolian parted on the plains of Ararat in the beginning of civilization.

One great branch of the human family slept the sleep of ages. It is now awake. Do not be deceived. All the Orient is awake. I need not particularize as to the nations we naturally think of first. But if things continue to develop as they have during the last five years, it will be only a few years before the British are driven out of India, and then 900,000,000 people on the other side of the Pacific will be free to arm themselves to enforce their common demand for unrestricted admission to the lands controlled by white men.

Oh, as we plunge into what we think will be a little war, let us remember that wars are very costly—the Franco-German War cost Germany about $300,000,000 and the Boer War cost Great Britain about $1,000,000,000—but only a few realize how colossal are the sums which are spent every year upon the maintenance of an armed peace. The nations of Europe spend at present about $2,500,000,000 per year on their armies and navies. In reality the cost of the European armies and navies is very much greater than $2,500,000,000 per annum. European nations keep under arms about 5,000,000 soldiers and sailors, the strongest and healthiest men of the race, men who are in the prime of life.

The maintenance of 5,000,000 men under arms costs the nations of Europe another $2,500,000,000 in lost earnings. Thus the preservation of peace costs European people altogether $5,000,000,000 every year, or sixteen times as much money as the Franco-German War cost Germany and five times as much as the Boer War cost Great Britain. The British national debt amounts to about $3,500,000,000. French generations yet unborn must pay the war bills of France. It is the same with the other great powers of Europe.

These nations would welcome a peace plan embracing the five great white nations, which would still leave them on a moderate war footing combined against all comers. What would be a peace footing for them would be a war footing for us. We could soon cut ours down.

A world-wide peace plan, embracing all nations, is not practicable. Witness our unfortunate situation with regard to Mexico, or, rather, as the resolution passed by the House would have it, our situation with regard to Gen. Huerta. That resolution reads:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States of America to enforce demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

Witness also the signed article from the Secretary of State, Hon. W. J. Bryan, in his Commoner, which I have had read by the Clerk of the House. That article is not presented with ulterior purpose in view. Not a bit of it. It is presented as very important testimony to prove the arguments that have just been presented. As editor, Mr. Bryan has one view; as Secretary of State, he is forced to another.

Mr. Bryan's situation is that of many Members of Congress. In the cloak rooms they freely express one view. On the roll call they vote another. Their explanation is "The President wants it," "The President 'right or wrong,'" "Our flag must not be insulted by a foreigner," and so forth.

These are the answers, not only as regards this situation, but, at some time or other, in all languages of all the races that made a world-wide universal peace impracticable. And all point to the need of a Pan-Aryan union.

Military and naval expenditure is rapidly rising, not only in the United States but everywhere. We can do our part toward ending it, and we can do it with honor. We can start now. We can save the Monroe doctrine. We can save Mexico. We can avoid setting back for a hundred years the union of those races whose faces are neither brown nor black nor yellow, but white, and whose religion is that of the one God, and whose precepts are those of the Great Teacher.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachuetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the bill that is under consideration in committee, I would like to see the number of battleships provided for in that bill multiplied by 2. I think one of the best ways to preserve the peace of the country is to maintain a large, strong, and powerful navy. It enables us to be strong in diplomacy, and then to be strong in every position which we take with reference to others. It does not mean that the great United States is going to carry a chip, so to speak, upon her shoulder and invite struggle or war. It means simply that she proposes to keep pace with the other great powers with whom she has a right to be ranked in order that she may maintain her place and her influence. In a time like this it seems to me almost unnecessary to urge upon the House a program for a large and strong navy. Yesterday in this room we heard the rumblings of war, intimations of that which may fall upon our country at any moment. The resolution which was passed, which received my vote, but a vote given with the deepest regret, may mean before 48 hours that our country is involved in war, and once the possibilities of this are opened up no human foresight can tell to what length the Nation may be drawn out. It may mean a conflict with Mexico; it may mean involvement with other powers. Surely it is a pusillanimous policy that prompts to a reduction of our naval strength and force. It is a weak-sighted philosophy that causes men to reason about peace, peace, when humanity remains the same, and nothing can ever disarm the nations until man shall be changed from within, so that a newer and better and stronger man shall be upon the face of the earth.

Pictures that one sees about him every day indicate all but too clearly, as the last speaker said, that beneath the veneer of civilization there is found the real raw animal, the brute man. Let anyone attempt to picture the scenes that occurred about the city of Torreon in Mexico, the brutal exhibit of the mad fury of the human race when it is let loose, and he can find no solution or consolation in the thought that men are very much better than they were years ago. I would like to lift my voice, humble though it may be and possibly without much influence in this House, in favor of increasing and strengthening the Navy of the United States far beyond its present strength. Every dollar spent in building up the Navy is a dollar spent by way of insurance of peace and the preservation of the dignity and the power of this great people.

Before resuming my place, I would like to say in connection with the resolution adopted by this House yesterday evening that I voted with great regret for it, because it seemed to justify the waiting policy of the President of these United States and his course in dealing with Mexico, which I can not approve; and it seemed to give to him unlimited power to exercise his thought and his judgment in handling the Army and the Navy of the United States. I listened to his message with the utmost intentness, and failed to find there those reasons which would prompt and help a vote in favor of clothing him with this power. I failed to find there a just and adequate statement of a cause for war, and for those reasons I would far rather have placed my vote upon the record as a negative vote than to have given the affirmative. But one moment, sir, and I am through. With the picture that was present to one's mind's eye, of the great fleet of this Nation flying toward Tampico and the possibility of the landing of our troops and our country being placed before the world after the deliverance of the ultimatum, which means only one thing, either apologize or fight, an American could not help but vote to stand publicly before the world in support of the President, while he might condemn privately and personally the conduct of his Mexican policy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD some remarks with reference to the repeal of the act of 1912 relating to the free passage of domestic commerce through the Panama Canal?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ESTOPINAL].

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who signed the minority report have made a great effort to show that the Navy of the United States is superior to that of Germany. This they have labored very hard to prove by very ingenious arguments in the face of all the reports of all the naval experts of the great nations of the world to the contrary notwithstanding. These gentlemen have apparently convinced themselves of their contention, and I confess that I would be happy to be convinced myself; but I am not. The stern, irrefutable fact that all of the expert evidence is against them has convinced me that their figures are wrong. But that is beside the issue, for the real issue is for us to be prepared for any eventuality.

Preparation for war that may never come is an insurance that bears very lightly upon this country. It in nowise affects our progressive march; but, Mr. Chairman, if we should neglect it and through this condition of unpreparedness we are drawn into a conflict with any big country, tens of billions of dollars would not measure our financial losses, and the cause of peace would receive a setback from which it would take many, many decades to recover.

It is unthinkable that this country will ever wage a war for aggrandizement, but the world has not advanced to that sane position in civic righteousness as to give us sufficient confidence in all others to warrant disarmament. No one claims there is not danger of war; not even the most pronounced advocate of disarmament has gone that far in statement, so far as I know. Therefore we must be prepared, that the danger of aggression may be lessened. We must not shut our eyes to plain facts that indicate the danger and the contingencies which may involve this country if we are not in a state of thorough preparation, but which, if we are so well prepared as to make the danger too present—too real and too apparent—to any nation which might seek an adventure of that kind with us we may escape.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, with the desire for peace as deep-seated as it is in me, ruling my sympathies and determining my actions, I must reject the theory that adequate preparation is opposed to peace. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe that the theory of preparation is opposed to war; that, as a necessary assurance against aggression, it composes our minds and confirms our peace proclivities. I believe that science is rapidly leading us toward the abolition of war and armament; that many who are within the sound of my voice will live to see conditions come about which will make war impossible; but until we shall have arrived at that stage of scientific progress it would be dangerous—indeed, almost suicidal—for us to close our eyes to conditions which make the danger of war ever present. We must have an adequate Navy—one which will keep us on a footing with the great powers. We have assumed large responsibilities and we must have the means at hand to protect ourselves in the discharge of them. The American people are not opposed to the development of our Navy to a size and efficiency which will insure both protection and peace. To the contrary, Mr. Chairman, the average American citizen feels proud of our efficient Navy and feels secure in the conviction that no power on earth, single handed, would dare attack us. If the time ever comes when we shall have to spend, as some contend, a billion dollars a year on our Navy, we will have the wealth to enable us to do it and the disposition to accede to the demand if conditions such as we now see them to be shall require it. Such predictions frighten nobody.

While we would all prefer to see the relatively small expenditures which we are now making in the interest of national protection and, to my mind, in the interest of international peace, that are spent for armaments, spent more directly in the interest of social and industrial betterment, there is no such ever-present menace as the startling assertion, often repeated, that the large navy countries are staggering toward bankruptcy.

While it is true that we appropriated in 1886 only about $15,000,000 for our Naval Establishment, we have progressed in national wealth and in the employment of inherent energies so far since that time that it makes the expenditure of one hundred and forty millions per annum now a less tax on the people than fifteen millions in 1886.

In 1887 the people of this country had a total deposit in all the banking institutions of less than three and a third billion dollars—the savings of less than three and a half million depositors. In 1912 these deposits had mounted up to seventeen billions, and the depositors numbered ten millions. The appropriation for the Naval Establishment for 1912 was less than eight-tenths of 1 per cent of these deposits in banks, and the aggregate appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the entire period of 25 years—1887 to 1912—is less than 12 per cent of the gain in these deposits of 1912 over those of 1887.

Mr. Chairman, in 1887 we exported $716,000,000 worth of merchandise; in 1912 two and one-fourth billions. This gain in merchandise exported alone, for 1912 over that which we sent abroad in 1887, would pay our Navy cost for these 25 years. And, Mr. Chairman, our exports of farm products of $537,000,000 in 1887 increased to more than a billion in 1912. These farm exports alone would pay the Navy appropriations of 1912 eight times over.

In 1890 the value of our farms was but $16,000,000,000 as compared to forty-one billion in 1910. Our total Navy expenditures for this duodecennial period—1890–1910—was scarcely equal to 4 per cent of our gain in farm values. Mr. Chairman, do these figures spell decay?

But let us take a view of our liquid farm assets. In 1890 the value of our farm products totaled but two and one-half billion dollars as compared to eight and one-half billions in 1910. Last year it is estimated that our farm products amounted to nearly $10,000,000,000. Let us use the two decade years as comparison. The $6,000,000,000 in gain in the values of these farm products of 1910 over 1890 would pay our Navy expenditures from 1890 to 1910—20 years—six times over.

And, Mr. Chairman, manufacturing industries, both in wages paid and in value of products, doubled in these two decades.

A more impressive or more vivid exposition of national energy is that in the year 1887 our total postal revenues amounted to but $49,000,000, whereas in 1912 the total was two hundred and forty-seven million; that our public-school expenditures which in 1887 were $116,000,000, had mounted in 1911 to $447,000,000.

We can run the whole gamut of American energies and find such wonderful growth in every line of endeavor that it constitutes a complete negation of any such extravagant assertions, so far as they apply to this country.

Mr. Chairman, this measuring of Navy appropriations by the different features of our national activities is probably incomplete without some reference to their relation to our growth in total wealth. This grew from sixty-five billions in 1890 to eighty-eight and one-half billions in 1900, an increase of twenty-three and one-half billions, this increase alone being seven billions greater than our entire wealth in 1860. Provision was made for a special census, in 1905, on wealth, which showed that we had in four years gained more than $18,000,000,000, or at the rate of four and one-half billions a year. This annual gain alone in wealth is more than 30 times the amount we propose to expend in the bill we are discussing.

Mr. Chairman, in proportion to the interests which we have at stake in this country, and in view of our great increase in material wealth, we are making a very conservative, I may say insignificant, expenditure for armaments, as an insurance against possible aggression, however remote it may be or however improbable it may seem. And this expenditure puts not as much as a straw in the path of our progress toward a magnificent ultimate, the pounds of which we can now hardly realize. This expenditure would be insignificant in its effect even if every dollar we are appropriating should be spent in other countries; but practically all of it is spent among our own people, and goes right into the channels of financial and industrial activities. And, Mr. Chairman, there is an important phase of economics that is manifesting itself in the service of both the Army and Navy along with this growth of our expenditures in these two branches. It is preparing the young recruits for better citizenship when their terms of enlistment shall have expired, or for better soldiers and sailors if they continue in the service.

But, Mr. Chairman, reverting to this indictment against military preparation in which it is claimed that the civilized countries are "struggling toward bankruptcy," it is well for us to measure the progress of other countries as compared to their military burdens. Germany is held up to us as one of the great war nations in preparation for conflict, and comes naturally to mind when we hear and read the indictments of preparation for the contingency of war; for if the nations of the world are "struggling toward bankruptcy" with militarism "rampant," that country would be in the lead in this financial desolation. Let us look at Germany's progress in the arts of peace.

Dr. Karl Helffrich, a German writer and financier, published in a monograph some figures anent the silver jubilee of the German Emperor in 1913. I am indebted to the published brief comment from our Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for some of the showings made in that monograph. It discloses an almost unbelievable story of German progress and of rapid advance in prosperity.

The manufacturing industries of that country have increased their output at least threefold in the last 25 years. A notable increase is in steel production, which has risen from less than 1,000,000 tons in 1886 to more than fifteen millions in 1912, or more than 1,500 per cent.

The merchant marine of Germany, on January 1, 1886, showed only a million and a quarter net registered tons. In 1913 it showed more than 3,000,000 net registered tons, and of a kind and character for speed, stability, and efficiency that makes the increase all the more notable.

Mr. Chairman, it is generally conceded that when a people begin to show signs of decadence and a premonition of bankruptcy it first manifests itself in the decline of agriculture. Germany has to-day about the same area in cultivation that it had in 1886, and there are engaged in agricultural pursuits approximately the same number of persons. But the average productions of that country for the period of years—1883–1888—of the combined staple products, rye, wheat, barley, potatoes, and oats, of 40,000,000 tons, increased to 70,000,000 tons for the average yield during the period of years 1908 to 1912. A most astonishing exhibit, Mr. Chairman, of farming virility, which, when added to the equally remarkable gain in their manufacturing industries and in the expansion of their carrying trade, shows a people marvelously progressive and prosperous and far from the gloomy path that leads to bankruptcy. But before I leave this discussion of Germany's advance in agricultural efficiency I wish to call attention to her sugar-beet industry. I quote from the report I have mentioned:

> The per acre yield of sugar beets increased from 11.3 to 13.4 metric tons between 1888–89 and 1910–11, and the sugar value of each beet was made to grow. In 1888–89 the factories worked up 7,896,000 tons of beets into 991,000 tons of raw sugar, 7.97 pounds of beets being required to make 1 pound of sugar. In 1910–11, 15,749,000 tons of beets were worked up into 2,590,000 tons of sugar, thus requiring only 6.08 pounds of beets per pound of finished product.

To bolster up the calamity cry of "bankruptcy" I have seen the following quoted from the report of The Massachusetts Commission on the Cost of Living, made in 1910:

> This diversion of labor and capital from productive industry to waste and destruction, with the accompanying diminishing of the necessaries of life and an inability to supply the world's demands, inevitably resulted in an advance of the prices of the commodities of common consumption. * * * In weighing the causes which have contributed to increase the cost of living this commission is convinced that a most far-reaching influence in creating, fostering, and perpetuating high prices is militarism, with its incidents of war and its consequences in taxation. The debt piled up for war and waste remains a burden on the life of the world—a burden calling every year for a huge interest payment of more than a billion dollars taken from the earnings of the nations. This is supplemented annually by many other billions to maintain hugh armies and navies of men taken from industry, who are organized, trained, and maintained for the day when they will again be hurled at each other, to duplicate the destruction of the past and pile up new and heavier burdens upon the thrift and industry of the world.

This is a fair sample of the extravaganza of those who urge a small Navy.

But, Mr. Chairman, the facts which I have quoted regarding Germany, showing a remarkable growth not only in the amount of production but in the scientific advance which gets a 75 per cent increase in total productions from practically the same amount of land with the same amount of labor, is a complete denial of this statement by the Massachusetts commission on the cost of living.

The remarkable increase in manufactures and commerce and the disposition of the people in prosperity to adopt a higher scale of living is probably the real explanation of the advance in food prices.

But this progress in wealth and industry is not confined to "military" Germany alone, as there are other nations, pictured as "weighted down with armaments," which show an almost equal measure of advance in commerce and industry.

The total foreign commerce of the United Kingdom for 1902 was less than $4,000,000,000; in 1912 it has reached six billions, a gain of more than two billions in 10 years.

In 1902 her total gross steamship tonnage was 13,000,000 tons, represented by vessels averaging less than 1,500 gross tons each. In 1912 this steamship tonnage was nearly 18,000,000 tons gross, with the increased tonnage represented by vessels averaging over 2,000 tons gross, and in increased speed and mechanical equipment for loading and unloading they represent a capacity and efficiency that adds materially to the increase in tonnage.

France, in some respects the most prosperous nation in the world, had a total foreign commerce in 1902 of one thousand six hundred and sixty-eight millions; in 1912 it was two thousand eight hundred and fourteen millions.

Italy, with six hundred and twenty millions in 1902, had in 1912 one thousand one hundred and fifty-seven millions.

Russia increased from seven hundred and forty-one millions in 1902 to one thousand four hundred and seventeen millions in 1912.

Austria-Hungary, from seven hundred and thirty-seven millions to one thousand two hundred and seventy-six millions.

Japan, with two hundred and sixty-two millions in 1902 and five hundred and sixty-eight millions in 1912, showed the largest per cent of increase.

I have been unable to obtain the shipping data of these last-named countries, but they undoubtedly would show the same rapid increase as is shown by the figures of Germany and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chairman, war is, of course, a great destroyer of life and property and in some ways retards progress and prosperity, but preparation does not indicate war. It may indicate peace; and in my judgment it does. But, as I have already said, yet say again to emphasize it, these figures totally disprove the charge that these preparations are a burden on the people to the extent that we have seen in writings and preachments and that have been cited in arguments on the floor of this House.

There has probably not been a year in the last decade—no; not in the last two decades—when there were not more than three times as many idle men tramping the streets of our cities and along the railroads of this country, marauding and destroying, than were enlisted in the Army and the Navy. Before we decry the Army and the Navy for taking men out of the productive channels of life, and thus causing the high cost of living, we should try to solve the problem of voluntary and involuntary idleness of these three times as many that stagnate in cities and tramp the country and the several times as many more that are idle at home during certain seasons of the year. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WILLIAMS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 15, 1914:

H. R. 13765. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

On April 16, 1914:

H. R. 12169. An act providing for an additional appropriation for a public building in the city of Monroe, N. C.

On April 18, 1914:

H. R. 4544. An act to reserve certain lands and to incorporate the same and make them a part of the Caribou National Forest Reserve.

On April 16, 1914:

S. 135. An act for the relief of Severin and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen;

S. 1884. An act for the relief of Phoebe W. Chase; and

S. 4943. An act to amend section 1 of an act of Congress approved April 9, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 80), entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes.

On April 17, 1914:

S. 54. An act for the relief of George W. Hoyt.

On April 18, 1914:

S. 75. An act for the relief of Theresa A. Murray;

S. 175. An act for the relief of Lawson Reno, collector second district of Kentucky; and

S. 3610. An act for the relief of C. E. Moore.

On April 20, 1914:

S. 1829. An act for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from New Jersey to make a request.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address by the Secretary of Commerce delivered at the University of California March 23, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAGE of North Carolina). The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by the Secretary of Commerce. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, there are two items in this bill to which I object, and when it is read for amendment under the five-minute rule I shall move that they be stricken out. I now desire to submit some facts and figures relating to these items and to state, as fully as I may in the time allowed me, why I regard these proposed expenditures as most unwise, if not wholly indefensible. I also desire, if allowed the time, to submit some remarks relative to the comparative cost of building ships of war in Government navy yards and building these ships by contract in private yards.

The items to which I now particularly desire to direct the attention of the House are to be found on page 22 of the bill, the one making available an unobligated balance, not exceeding $148,000, of an appropriation heretofore made for marine barracks at Boston for building a slip and equipment, and the other appropriating $200,000 for building slips and equipment at the Philadelphia or League Island Navy Yard. It is stated in the report which accompanies this bill that these appropriations are asked to enable "the Boston and Philadelphia Navy Yards to construct the vessels awarded to these yards as a result of competitive bidding between private shipbuilding plants and other navy yards."

The naval appropriation bill approved March 4, 1913, provided for the construction of one transport, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $1,850,000, and one supply ship, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $1,425,000.

When these ships were authorized it was not contemplated that they would be built at either the Boston or the League Island Navy Yard. Neither of these yards has had any experience in this class of work. The last ship built at the Boston yard, 10 years ago, was the small steel sailing training vessel called the Cumberland, of 1,800 tons displacement. The construction of such a vessel as that is a very simple matter compared to that of the supply ship of about 8,500 tons displacement which the Secretary of the Navy now proposes to have built at that yard. The Philadelphia yard, to which has been awarded the building of the transport, has never built a modern ship of any class, and neither of them can ever build either of these ships unless Congress votes the money to equip it with the requisite building ways and cranes to enable it to undertake the work.

The Secretary of the Navy invited the private shipbuilding concerns of the country to bid on these ships and directed the navy yards to furnish estimates showing at what cost they could be built by the Government. The bids of the private and the estimates of the public yards were submitted on the 20th of December last. They are embraced in a statement furnished by Rear Admiral Griffin, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, and are to be found on pages 329 and 330 of the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs. I shall incorporate them in my remarks.

Statement furnished by Rear Admiral Griffin, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, before House Committee on Naval Affairs.

SUPPLY SHIP "NO. 1."

[Bids opened Dec. 20, 1913.]

Item and division.	Navy yards.
	Boston.	Charleston.	Mare Island.	New York.	Norfolk.	Portsmouth.	Puget Sound.
Labor:
Hull	$245,179.00	$447,661.00	$364,625	$534,440	$407,640	$422,642	$376,173
Machinery	110,060.38	162,167.96	151,715	145,046	179,610	174,533	160,502
Material:
Hull	295,327.00	293,987.00	337,735	309,246	277,640	323,329	304,878
Machinery	212,325.96	236,217.74	236,585	224,197	232,400	297,886	206,542
Indirect:
Hull	135,671.00	145,363.00	153,587	170,748	159,445	117,261	167,862
Machinery	47,785.92	63,010.62	67,988	45,896	73,570	60,184	70,956
Total:
Hull	676,177.00	887,011.00	855,947	1,014,434	844,725	863,212	848,913
Machinery	370,172.26	461,396.32	456,288	415,139	485,580	532,603	438,000
Total yard estimate	1,046,349.26	1,348,407.32	1,312,235	1,429,573	1,330,305	1,395,815	1,286,913
Yard estimates for drafting:
Bureau of Construction and Repair	[1]25,300.00	12,500.00	None.	None.	45,800	[1]20,500	11,070
Bureau of Steam Engineering	[1]7,840.00	None.	None.	None.	None.	[1]15,000	12,000
Total estimates	[1]33,140.00	12,500.00	None.	None.	45,800	[1]35,500	23,070

[1]Not included in total estimate submitted by yard.

TRANSPORT "NO. 1."

Item and division.	Navy yards.
	Mare Island.	New York.	Norfolk.	Portsmouth.	Puget Sound.	Philadelphia.
Labor:
Hull	$448,830	$744,258	$543,800	$587,131	$493,896	$379,094.00
Machinery	155,228	162,594	187,015	184,640	184,281	150,235.18
Material:
Hull	427,931	453,547	380,250	449,326	390,693	419,682.00
Machinery	259,059	241,265	261,700	329,206	218,893	216,164.04
Indirect:
Hull	190,492	242,748	212,130	162,945	219,202	135,862.00
Machinery	70,335	50,318	76,137	63,180	81,826	48,532.77
Total:
Hull	1,067,253	1,440,553	1,136,180	1,199,402	1,103,791	934,638.00
Machinery	484,622	454,177	524,852	577,026	485,000	414,931.99
Total (yard estimate)	1,551,875	1,894,730	1,661,032	1,776,428	1,588,791	1,349,569.99
Yard estimates for drafting:
Bureau of Construction and Repair	None.	None.	51,000	[1]28,900	14,000	43,000.00
Bureau of Steam Engineering	None.	None.	None.	[1]15,000	15,000	12,500.00
Total estimate	None.	None.	51,000	[1]43,900	29,000	[2]55,500.00

[1]Not included in total estimate submitted by yard.

[2]Includes also reporting weights, mold loft work, and inclining experiments.

[Bids opened Dec. 20, 1913.]

TRANSPORT "NO. 1."

Class 1: Hull and machinery in accordance with department's plans and specifications.
Class 2: Hull and equipment per department's plans and specifications, with machinery of type proposed by bidders.

Bidder.	Class.	Time.	Speed.	Price.
		Months.	Knots.
New York Shipbuilding Co.	1	24	14	$1,752,000
Fore River Shipbuilding Co.	1	24	14	1,804,000
Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Co.	1	24	14	1,931,100
Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.	1	24	14	1,730,000 [1] 1,725,000
Do	2	24	14	1,700,000 [1] 1,695,000
The Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co.	1	24	14	1,832,000 [1] 1,825,400

SUPPLY SHIP "NO. 1."

New York Shipbuilding Co.	1	24	14	$1,399,500
Fore River Shipbuilding Co.	1	24	14	1,419,000
Seattle Construction & Dry Dock Co.	1	21	14	1,404,000
Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.	1	22	14	1,350,000 [1] 1,345,000
Do	2	22	14	1,320,000 [1] 1,315,000
The Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co.	1	24	14	1,401,000 [1] 1,394,900

[1]If tried at Lewes, Del.

Whilst the figures in this table show that the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. was the lowest bidder on each of these ships, they also show that the estimate of the Boston yard, which was only requested to estimate on one ship, was much lower on the supply ship, and that of the League Island yard, also requested to estimate on only one ship, was much lower on the transport. They further show that the Boston yard estimate is $265,586 below that of the Mare Island yard, which, of all the Government yards, is the only one, as I am informed, that has had experience in this class of work. The colliers Prometheus and Jupiter were built at the Mare Island yard, and there are now under construction at that yard two other fuel ships, the Kanawha and Maumee; and therefore it is safe to affirm that the estimates submitted by it are more to be relied upon than are those of a yard which has never built a ship of this size or type. The estimate of the New York Navy Yard was $1,429,573, or just $383,224 more than that of the Boston yard; and surely its large experience in building battleships should enable it to estimate more accurately than a yard laboring under the many disadvantages of the Boston yard.

A comparison of the estimates submitted by these three navy yards is quite instructive. Take, for instance, those of Mare Island and Boston. The former estimated the cost of work in the hull division at $855,947, the latter at $676,177, a difference of $179,770 in favor of the inexperienced yard. For machinery the Mare Island estimate was $456,288 and the Boston $370,172, a difference of $86,116 in favor of the Boston yard. The entire difference, as I have shown, being $265,886.

The estimate of the Philadelphia yard for the transport was $1,349,569.99, whilst the figures of the Mare Island estimates were $1,557,875, and those of the New York yard $1,894,730. In other words, the League Island yard, that has never built a ship and is not now equipped to do so, estimated it could build this ship for $202,306 less than Mare Island could and $545,161 less than the New York yard could.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I have such little time I can scarcely yield.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman has referred to the estimates of cost at the Philadelphia yard and says he can not account for the low bid. I merely want to make the statement——

Mr. JONES. I can not yield to the gentleman to make a statement in my time. I am very sorry I can not do so.

Mr. MOORE. There are reasons for it—the matter of labor, fuel, and transportation.

Mr. JONES. I can not yield in my time.

These were the first or original estimates. They were so manifestly erroneous that they were promptly rejected by the Navy Department and returned for revision. When they came back the Boston yard estimate of $1,046,349 for the supply ship had been increased to $1,163,413, and that of the Philadelphia yard for the transport from $1,349,569.99 to $1,458,304.99, or considerably more than $100,000 for each ship.

But even more astonishing is the difference in the cost of labor as shown by the estimates of the Boston yard and those of Mare Island. The original estimates show a difference of $161,000 in favor of the Boston yard, and the revised estimates a difference of $86,000, or 31 per cent less in the case of the original estimates and 16 per cent less after the Boston yard had revised and raised its estimates. These wide discrepancies are not to be accounted for upon the theory that wages are higher at Mare Island than at Boston, for from the best information I have been able to obtain the average wage at the former yard does not exceed the average wage at the latter by 5 per cent, if at all.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact which I do not believe will be disputed that higher wages are paid at the Boston yard than are paid at any other shipbuilding yard on the Atlantic coast, and yet the revised estimate of this yard was $266,000, or 25 per cent less than that of the New York yard. The revised estimate of the League Island yard was $390,000, or something over 25 per cent less than the estimate of the New York yard.

These facts alone are sufficient to convince any reasonable man that it is not possible for the supply ship to be built at Boston or the transport at Philadelphia for anything approaching the sums estimated by those yards, respectively. If the estimates of the New York and Mare Islands yards are worthy of serious attention, then certainly no reliance whatever can be placed on the estimates of either the League Island Navy Yard or the Boston Navy Yard. If the estimates of the Boston and Philadelphia yards are even approximately correct, then it is certainly true that no more shipbuilding should be done at either the New York or the Mare Island—particularly the New York—Navy Yard.

There are many convincing reasons why the Government should not undertake to have its ships built at either Boston or Philadelphia, particularly at Boston.

The climate of Boston is such that work such as is required in building the hull of a ship can not be economically done during at least five months in the year. There are no successful shipbuilding establishments in that vicinity. The Fore River Shipbuilding Co. at Quincy can scarcely be called "successful," for it has passed through several reorganizations and has never, as I am informed, paid a dividend, and the Bath Iron Works owe their success entirely to the fact that they specialize in torpedo boats, for which they get a good price. The successful shipyards are located on the Delaware, on Hampton Roads, and at San Francisco, and of these the most successful are in mild climates. It is absurd to say that shipbuilding can be done as economically at Boston as at other yards more favorably situated and which enjoy a mild climate, as do the navy yards at Norfolk and Mare Island, Cal.

That these two ships which the Secretary of the Navy has directed shall be built, the one at Boston and the other at Philadelphia, can not be constructed within the revised estimates is, I believe, the consensus of opinion of all disinterested naval officers who are qualified to speak upon the subject.

As a matter of fact, as I am reliably informed, the revised estimates of Boston and League Island Navy Yards were submitted to a board of naval officers selected because of their special knowledge of the cost of the construction of naval ships. This board, after the most careful and exhaustive study of the revised estimates, as I am also reliably informed, came to the conclusion, and so reported to the Secretary of the Navy, that neither ship could be built in either yard for a sum as low as the bid of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., which company, as I have said, was the lowest private bidder for both ships. And yet, notwithstanding that the estimates of cost of the Boston and League Island Navy Yards for these ships were far less, as I have shown, than those of the New York and Mare Island Navy Yards, which have had considerable experience in building large naval vessels, and notwithstanding that a board composed of naval officers possessing special knowledge of the cost of building ships for the Navy, in fact, expert advisers of the Secretary of the Navy advised against it, the building of this supply ship has been given to the Boston Navy Yard and that of the transport to the Philadelphia Navy Yard. It surely must have required the strongest and most persuasive arguments to have overcome considerations of such convincing force as these. But this is not all to be said upon this subject.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I can not yield, as I have only a few minutes.

The sum of $348,000 is asked for in this bill to equip these navy yards with the necessary building ways and cranes to enable them to begin the construction of these two ships, and this sum, it must not be forgotten, is not included in their "estimated" cost. Even if this money is appropriated to construct these building ways and cranes asked for, it will require from 8 to 10 months to complete them, and to that extent will delay the completion of the ships. It may, therefore, be conservatively affirmed that if the building of these ships is undertaken at the Boston and League Island Navy Yards they will not be completed within the next three years, and that their cost to the Government will be several hundred thousand dollars more than it would cost to build them by contract. This will mean that they will not be completed within the life of this administration. When then the judgment of the Naval Board has been justified, upon whom will fall the just criticism sure to follow?

Naval Constructor Baxter, stationed at the Boston Navy Yard, is authority for the statement, according to the Boston Transcript, that the work on the keel of the new supply ship will not be begun before next fall, and that the work will take three years.

It is now more than 13 months since Congress ordered the construction of these ships, the intent evidently being that the effectiveness of our Navy should be increased by the addition of these auxiliaries at the earliest practicable date. It is quite obvious that in ordering these vessels to be built at the Boston and Philadelphia Navy Yards this manifest intent of Congress has been lost sight of. If there does not exist that urgent need for the building of these ships which was represented to be the case when Congress was asked to make provision for their construction, then it is clear to my mind that they should not be constructed at all. If there is urgent need for these vessels, then they should be constructed within a reasonable period.

When the Navy Department called for bids from private shipbuilding yards for the construction of these ships the circular contained the positive statement that no bid would be considered which did not involve a delivery of the vessels within 24 months from the date of the contract. Time was then regarded as of the very essence of the contract. It was to be a 24 and not a 36 months' job.

Mr. Chairman, in view of such an array of facts as these, I submit that it would be an act of supreme folly for Congress to expend the sums asked for in this bill to equip the Boston and Philadelphia Navy Yards to build large naval vessels. I am not unmindful of the powerful political influences which have been brought to bear in favor of these yards, but the building of these ships is purely a business proposition and one that should not be influenced by the importunities of the heads of great municipalities, such as Boston and Philadelphia, and the chief executives of such great Commonwealths as Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, even when supported by the pleadings of the entire representations in Congress of those communities.

I hold in my hands a large number of clippings from Boston newspapers showing the desperate efforts resorted to in order to secure the building of the supply ship at the Boston Navy Yard. On the 17th of February the Navy Department announced that the supply ship would be built at Boston. On the 13th of February, just four days before this decision was reached, the Washington correspondent of the Boston Herald wrote his paper in part as follows:

HERALD BUREAU,
Washington, February 13.

The contract for the new naval supply ship may go to the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. Secretary Daniels was all but ready to announce the award this afternoon to that company, which was the lowest private bidder. News of this reached the Capitol from a thoroughly reliable source.

Representative MURRAY heard what was in prospect. He called Democrats of the Bay State delegation together and all except Representative GILMORE descended upon the Navy Department. The Representatives were terribly in earnest, especially after their conversation with Secretary Daniels verified the report. They told him in very positive terms that the award of this contract South, when the Boston yard had been the lowest bidder, would be outrageous. It would be taken up in the Senate and House. Congressmen from Massachusetts would demand to know why this had been done.

* * * * * * *

Secretary Daniels said the experts of the department were opposed to having the vessel built at the Boston yard, because they thought a year would be required to equip the yard to build the ship, causing undesirable delay, and also that the vessel could not be built at the Boston yard within the available funds.

A Washington special to the Boston Advertiser, under date of February 17, had this to say of the efforts of Gov. Walsh and the Massachusetts Representatives in Congress:

The governor in the afternoon had a conference with the Secretary of the Navy, and the announcement that the contract had been awarded to Boston followed. It is believed that the representations of the governor had the effect of swaying the mind of the Secretary from awarding the contract elsewhere. It is believed that it came hard for the Secretary to make the decision he did, but with the governor of Massachusetts intervening the Secretary found the forces arrayed against him too much to overcome.

The Massachusetts men in Congress are jubilant, especially Congressman MURRAY, in whose district the navy yard is and but for whose timely discovery that it was planned to award the contract elsewhere than to Boston the announcement to-day would have been different. He aroused the delegation and the governor, and the wires became too hot for the Secretary to handle in a manner to suit himself.

The Boston Record of February 18 had this to say in respect to the award of the supply ship:

The Navy supply ship is to be built here, after all the effort expended in behalf of that purpose, and in due time everyone here will know what a supply ship is, though few do now. It may never be decided whether the chief credit for bringing the work here should go to Gov. Walsh, Mayor Curley, or Congressman MURRAY, all of whom have claims, or whether some silent influence turned the trick; but it is enough to know that Boston wins while Norfolk weeps; that the South-in-the-saddle graciously stooped to greet New England, and that hereafter the sound of the builders will echo through Charlestown and convert the water front thereof into a busy and prosperous place.

These are but three of the many Boston newspaper expressions as to the political influences exerted in favor of having the supply ship built at Boston. It is the consensus of Boston newspaper opinion that the building of this ship would not have gone to the Boston yard but for the exertion of political influence too strong to be resisted. [Applause.]

That navy-yard-built ships cost very much more than ships built by private contract has been very completely demonstrated by an experience extending over a period of many years at the two large Government navy yards best fitted for efficient and economical construction.

To substantiate this I refer to the statement of Admiral Watt, Chief Constructor of the Unitel States Navy. This statement is set forth in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 26, 1913, at page 4131, and is as follows:

Navy-yard built.	Cost about.	More than.
Connecticut	$374,000	Louisiana, a sister vessel built by contract.
Florida	2,269,000	Utah, a sister vessel built by contract.
Jupiter	590,000	Cyclops, a sister vessel built by contract.
New York	1,463,000	Texas, a sister vessel building by contract.
Cincinnati	770,000	Formal proposals received for their construction.
Raleigh	714,000
Maine	780,000	Limit of cost inside which it is estimated that vessels could have been contracted for.
Texas	449,000
Vestal	250,000	The average of informal estimates received from three shipbuilding companies. (See p. 359, Secretary of the Navy's hearing, Jan. 12, 1911.)
Prometheus	140,000
Total	7,799,000

This tabular statement shows that the nine ships built in the navy yards at New York and Mare Island and one ship built at Norfolk cost $7,799,000 more than they would have cost if built at private yards.

At this rate our new Navy would have cost the American people $70,000,000 more to construct in navy yards than by private contract.

The waste of money shown by Admiral Watt's figures is sufficiently great. As a matter of fact, the actual waste is much greater.

In the case of the New York, now nearing completion at the New York Navy Yard, the cost to the Government in the way of indirect expenditures, payments on account of leave, holiday, and disability, and payments made to employees in the classified service for drafting, accounting, and clerical work, not a dollar of which is included in the "limit of cost" of this ship, has aggregated a sum in excess of a million and a half dollars. Under the system of accounting now employed at navy yards this immense expenditure must be excluded from the "limit of cost" of the New York. I hold in my hand a letter just received from the Secretary of the Navy which gives these expenditures in detail. It reads as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 13, 1914.

Subject: Cost of battleship New York.

MY DEAR MR. JONES:

1. Referring to your letter of the 6th instant requesting the cost to the Government of the battleship New York, including indirect expenses, such as leave, holiday, disability, clerks, and draftsmen, there is given below such of the data requested as has been furnished to date by the navy yard, New York, of the cost of the New York, exclusive of armor and armament:

	Hull.	Machinery.	Total.
Labor:
Expended to Mar. 1, 1914	$1,825,308.66	$634,735.19	$2,460,043.85
Estimated to complete	77,508.60	36,343.44	113,852.04
Material:
Expended to Mar. 1, 1914	1,535,685.51	808,024.60	2,343,710.11
Estimated to complete	118,714.00	356,474.00	475,188.00
Indirect:
Expended to Mar. 1, 1914	615,447.12	202,269.30	817,716.42
Estimated to complete	26,120.40	11,593.56	37,713.96
Leave [1]			174,911.73
Holiday [1]			177,227.40
Disability [1]			40,079.04
Classified employees employed in construction of New York but charged to current appropriations (estimate of commandant)			287,070.00
Leave and holiday of classified employees employed in construction of the New York (estimate of commandant)			28,930.00
Cost to Government of hull and machinery by reason of construction in navy yard, according to returns received from New York			6,956,442.55

[1] Resulting from construction of New York and charged against appropriation "Increase of the Navy; Construction and Machinery."

2. Attention is invited to the fact that the above total cost to the Government of the New York is subject to modification, as the final actual cost of work covered by the estimates to complete may be either more or less than the estimates mentioned above.

3. The above statement of total cost to the Government of the construction in the navy yard, New York, includes expenditures for indirect charges under the existing system of bookkeeping; also expenditures for leave, holiday, and disability which have resulted by reason of the construction of the New York. Such expenditures are lodged against the appropriation "Increase of the Navy; Construction and Machinery," which appropriation covers the cost of hull and machinery of the New York, but are excluded from the "limit of cost" of the ship by the phraseology of the appropriation act of March 4, 1911.

4. The above total cost to the Government of the New York includes also the charges for classified employees while engaged in drafting, accounting, and clerical work for the New York. In accordance with statute law such charges are covered by the annual working appropriations, and therefore are not included in the "limit of cost" of the vessel, although such expenditures result from the construction of the vessels.

5. The commandant of the navy yard, New York, reports that the total expenditures to March 1, 1914, on battleship New York, together with the small estimated amounts to complete the vessel, indicates a performance lower than the original estimates by $413,750.50 under hull, and $245,884.91 under machinery, or a total of $659,635.41.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES, M. C.,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

It seems from this letter that the actual cost to the Government of the New York, built at a public yard, is $6,956,442.55, as against the contract price of the Texas, the sister ship of the New York, built by the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., for the sum of $5,830,000. In addition to the contract price of the Texas, there was something paid for extra work; but, with these amounts added, the contract-built ship Texas cost the Government more than a million dollars less than the Government-built ship New York.

It can not be denied that the items set forth in Secretary Daniels's letter are part of the cost of building a ship. It ought not to be denied that Congress is entitled to full and exact information of the actual out-of-pocket cost of building a ship in a navy yard. The present system of cost keeping does not give this information. As I have pointed out, Admiral Watt, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, states that necessary items of cost do not appear in the official figures of ship costs. The items to which I have referred show that the costs thus omitted are very considerable.

Congress should compel a system of cost keeping which would continuously and succinctly keep before it the actual cost of public works proceeding under its authorization.

In the annual report of the Paymaster General of the Navy for the year 1912, at page 12, that officer says:

The pay of clerical, drafting, and messenger services at navy yards and stations should be included in the cost of work. This is not done at the present time and leads to criticism of the accounting system.

In the report of the Paymaster General of the Navy for the fiscal year of 1913 that officer says:

Consolidation of all appropriations will undoubtedly simplify accounting and facilitate the Navy's business generally. A great shipbuilding establishment would find its operations most seriously interfered with, if not rendered unprofitable, were it obliged to divide its efforts, expenses, and materials under several hundred arbitrary accounting heads corresponding to the number of naval appropriation accounts. The present plan is so completely fallacious that it is to be wondered at that of the many efficient business men in Congress none have demanded that a consolidation of appropriations be effected.

The following quotation from my report for the year 1911, slightly modified, states the logical considerations which call for a consolidation of appropriations:

"The naval appropriations at the present time are very complex, and many of them carry identical clauses. Their consolidation would simplify all business transactions connected with purchases, permit more accurate cost accounting, facilitate the reporting of expenditures, and result in an economical distribution of funds by administrative authority at the time the necessity for a particular expenditure becomes apparent."

If the actual additional cost involved in these uncharged items, which the Government pays out of other appropriations, be added to the official cost of the 10 ships mentioned in Admiral Watt's tabular statement, it would be found that those vessels actually cost the Government approximately $10,000,000 more than they could have been built for under private contract.

The Navy Department fully recognizes the much higher cost of ships built in navy yards. That department is now requesting an appropriation for the construction of two battleships, eight destroyers, and three submarines. The department by letter of February 13, 1913, transmitted to the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs an estimate of the comparative cost of the construction of these vessels. These estimates, exclusive of armor and armament, showed that the vessels could be built in private yards for $25,600,000, while in navy yards the cost would be $32,003,000, or about 28 per cent more than the cost under private contract. This comparative statement will be found at page 849 of the recent hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs.

While it is clearly established that the initial cost of navy yard built ships has been and is now much greater than contract-built ships, statements have appeared in the press, upon the apparent authority of the Secretary of the Navy, that navy yard built ships are, nevertheless, superior on account of requiring less expenditure for repairs than corresponding contract-built ships. Evidently these reports have been based on the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy in the hearings before the Committee on Labor. In the printed report of these hearings between February 27 and March 21, 1914, page 35, the following appears:

Secretary DANIELS. * * * We find when we build a ship that the repairs in the years to come are not so much as in the private-yard-built vessel, as a rule.

Mr. MACDONALD. It is cheaper in the long run, although the initial cost may be greater?

Secretary DANIELS. I think so.

As the statement is an important one, if true, I have taken occasion to get the reported cost of repairs on four large battleships. Two, the Connecticut and Florida, built at the New York Navy Yard, and two, the Louisiana and Utah, built under contract with private yards. This information was obtained upon application to the Navy Department, and is contained in a letter from Admiral Watt, chief constructor, which I shall now read:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1914.

Subject: Cost of repairs on battleships Connecticut, Louisiana, Utah, and Florida.

MY DEAR MR. JONES: 1. In reply to your letter of even date, requesting a statement of total amounts spent for repairs to date on battleships Connecticut, Louisiana, Utah, and Florida, there is given below a statement showing expenditures on these vessels to March 1, 1914, for repairs and alterations:

Fiscal years.	Connecticut.	Louisiana.	Florida.	Utah.
1906	$236.97	$5,748.39	.....	.....
1907	54,960.29	105,404.49	.....	.....
1908	140,482.70	66,691.43	.....	.....
1909	198,292.56	125,556.53	.....	.....
1910	197,843.82	205,839.54	.....	.....
1911	70,531.18	53,849.20	$185.44	.....
1912	57,258.78	80,476.70	16,473.29	$18,605.90
1913	70,980.28	211,799.83	31,476.11	62,824.12
1914 (to Mar. 1, 1914)	127,017.48	29,549.59	103,040.84	13,933.01
Total	917,610.06	885,915.75	151,175.68	95,363.03

Sincerely, yours,

R. M. WATT,
Chief Constructor, United States Navy,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. A. JONES, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

These vessels were made the subject of comparison because each of the Navy-built ships has a sister contract-built ship. They were the only ships which could be properly compared. The Connecticut was built at the New York Navy Yard, while the Louisiana, her sister ship, was built at the works of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.

The cost of repairs on the Connecticut up to March 1, 1914, amounted to $31,000 more than the cost of repairs on the Louisiana up to the same date.

The battleship Florida was built at the New York Navy Yard, while the Utah, her sister ship, was built at the works of the New York Shipbuilding Co.

The cost of repairs on the Florida up to March 1, 1914, amounted to $55,000 more than the cost of repairs on the Utah.

By referring to Admiral Watt's letter it will be found that the cost of repairs was greater on the Connecticut than on the Louisiana until 1913, when for the first time the cost of the Louisiana repairs exceeded those on the Connecticut.

During the fiscal year ending March 1, 1914, the expenditures on the Connecticut were greater than on the Louisiana, resulting in an excess of total cost of repair on the Connecticut above indicated.

In the case of the Florida and Utah, in 1912 and 1913 the repair cost on the Utah was larger than on the Florida. In 1914 the repair cost on the Utah was very much less than on the Florida, resulting in an excess total cost of repair on the Florida above indicated.

Applying the reasoning of the Secretary of the Navy to the actual facts, it might be claimed that the contract-built ships were superior to the navy-yard built ships. I make no such claim. It is obvious, from the above figures, that when extensive repairs are made to a ship the cost of repair will show temporarily a higher relative expenditure.

The unrepaired sister ship, doubtless equally in need of repairs, would on this showing seem to be the better vessel; but when she in turn is repaired the relative equality of the vessels becomes apparent. It may be that the private yards and the navy yards build equally good ships. It may be that there is essentially no difference in quality between them. But I believe that it is unquestionable that the private contractor is required to do much more expensive work. It is very certain that the inspection of ships built in navy yards is by no means as rigid as in private yards, and Admiral Watt so stated before the Committee on Naval Affairs on February 6, 1912.

If navy-yard built ships cost more and are no better, why should Congress spend these large additional sums for only partially equipping two more yards?

The navy yards are a source of large expense to the Government. Up to a certain point this expense is justifiable and ought to be incurred. It is advisable that the Government should keep itself informed as to the cost of shipbuilding from time to time, and for that reason perhaps some extravagance is justified. It is essential that a number of naval stations should be available for the extraordinary repair incident to war. But adequate facilities for efficient execution of repair work, of supreme importance in time of war, are not assured by elaborate preparations for construction, nor can construction work be economically done with the equipment which is essential for repair. New construction and performance of repairs are separate and distinct.

Naval stations strategically placed should be kept available for repair service.

The building of an adequate navy has involved, and will involve, large expenditures. In order to get the best return possible, Congress must buy its ships in the lowest home market. If it is cheaper to build ships by private contract, let them be built by private contract.

If the United States could without expense to the people maintain five navy yards, each of which would be superior to the New York Navy Yard, and each of which would be in instant readiness to meet the demands of war, surely no voice would be raised in Congress against the project.

The United States to-day possesses precisely that resource. I refer to the five great yards—the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., the New York Shipbuilding Co., Cramps, the Fore River Co., and the Union Iron Works.

When, under a Democratic administration, we set out to build our new Navy, only one of these yards—Cramps—could undertake the building of a ship of even the earlier types. Even that company was not equipped to build a modern dreadnaught.

Congress adopted the policy of building ships by contract.

The Newport News Shipbuilding Co. built its large plant; the New York Shipbuilding Co. built its plant; the Fore River Co. built its plant; Cramps and the Union Iron Works greatly extended their plants.

To-day these plants could, under forced construction, turn out a dozen dreadnaughts in 36 months.

We call these "private yards." In time of war every one of them would be a navy yard.

Not only have these private naval yards been constructed and maintained without cost to the Government, but, as I have pointed out, the ships which have been built at these private yards have cost something like $70,000,000 less than they would have cost in navy yards. That vast sum was well worth saving. The United States has not had to spend one dollar in plant cost, not one dollar for repair or maintenance, and yet in these private navy yards it has every emergency advantage which it would have if they were publicly owned.

A wise policy called these yards into existence; an unwise policy may drive them out of existence.

The building of warships is the very highest development of ship construction. These five great yards are built and equipped for this class of work. Yards so equipped can not build the smaller vessels of the merchant marine to advantage, and if they could, the market for such vessels is very limited.

If the United States undertakes to build its own ships to the exclusion of private yards, there can be but one result. No private yard can stand against the vast resources of the Nation. But such a policy would be highly disastrous. The people would not long endure the tremendous cost of construction, upkeep, and maintenance of the necessary Government yards. Many people believe that our Navy is costing us too much now. What will they believe when an unwise policy has greatly increased the cost?

The question of building up navy yards is a very serious one. It has been tried before, and the Nation has refused to countenance the enormous expense that it has involved.

If we are going to try it again, let us at least carefully consider the propriety of that course before committing ourselves to a program of extravagance. When I voted for the naval appropriation bill of 1913, by which these ships were authorized, I did so because it was represented that the ships were necessary. I did so with no thought that I was thereby committing myself to the policy of building two shipyards in which to build two ships. It now appears either that the ships are unnecessary or that the national safety which they were designed to promote is secondary to a desire to build yards.

Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of the policy of building more navy yards in which to lose more money and, incidentally, cripple, if not destroy, the private shipyards, which are now efficiently maintained, and which without cost to the Nation are always available for its service in peace or war.

Gentlemen may urge that these appropriations for the Boston and Philadelphia Navy Yards are essential in order that these yards when placed in readiness for work will give employment to those seeking work.

I am interested in a matter of nearer consequence. I think it is more important that men be given work to-day than that they be given work a year hence, when it is to be hoped that the need will be less. I have pointed out that the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. was the lowest bidder on these two ships. One thousand men have been laid off at Newport News because the lowest responsible bidder did not get the work. These men wish to know whether it is just to deprive them of work to-day in order that men in Philadelphia and in Boston may get work 12 months hence.

During the two-month period following the opening of the bids, while the department had the award of the two ships under consideration, the Newport News Co., at considerable expense, held its working force together, so as to be prepared to build the ships within the two-year period imposed by the Secretary of the Navy.

When the department indicated its purpose to construct these ships at the navy yards the Newport News Co. began to cut down its force, and to-day a thousand idle men are asking why the department found it necessary to deprive them of their employment in order to give employment to some other workmen at some other place at some time in the future.

I believe that the present industrial depression is merely temporary. What is to be gained by increasing the number of unemployed in order that work may be available when the period of depression has passed?

If the navy yards fail to complete these ships within 24 months, or within 36 months, they incur no penalty.

If the vessels are destroyed or injured by fire or other casualty while building at the navy yard, the loss falls on the Government; if the same casualty occurs at Newport News, the Newport News Co. must stand the loss.

If navy-yard vessels do not meet the requirements of the contract plans and specifications, the Government must keep the inferior ships it has constructed. If the Newport News Co. builds an inferior ship, the Government is under no obligation to accept it.

To the successful and prompt completion of these vessels the Newport News Co. pledged all its resources, and in addition thereto filed a bond for a large amount. Its personnel pledged its ability and its status in the commercial world. Against all these guaranties the Boston and Philadelphia yards offer mere estimates, which are discredited by their own revision and by the estimates of other navy yards which speak from experience. Finally, the Boston and Philadelphia estimates are also discredited by the advisers upon whom Congress calls for advice and recommendations when appropriating for ships.

More than this, the Boston and Philadelphia estimates are discredited by the Navy Department.

While the Secretary of the Navy had all these bids and estimates under advisement the Navy Department informed Congress that the new ships for which it sought appropriation this year would cost 28 per cent more if constructed in navy yards than in private yards.

Five days later the Secretary of the Navy announced his determination to build the supply ship at the Boston yard and the transport at the Philadelphia yard, with the full knowledge that it would require $348,000, in addition to the estimated cost of the ships, to equip the yards to begin the work on them, besides involving a year's delay in their completion.

Newport News is a small city of only about 30,000 inhabitants, of whom some 6,500 are given employment by the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. When a thousand men lose employment in large cities such as Boston and Philadelphia it is scarcely felt, but when the same thing occurs in a small city like Newport News it not only entails hardship upon the individuals directly concerned, but is followed by business depression which most disastrously affects the entire community.

The people of Newport News, knowing that the great shipbuilding concern, in which they feel so intense and just a pride, was the lowest responsible bidder for these two ships; knowing upon the authority of the best naval experts in ship construction that they can not be built at a cost anywhere approaching the estimates of the Boston and Philadelphia Navy Yards; knowing that no Government yard, with experience as its guide, is willing to undertake to build either of them for any sum approaching the estimates of these two wholly inexperienced yards; and knowing that heavy expenditures of public moneys must be made upon these yards, even before the keels of these two ships can be laid, feel that a great wrong has been done, not only to the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. but to their entire community.

Personally I can not but feel, in view of all the circumstances surrounding the awarding of these ships, that the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. has not received a square deal, and that the Government will eventually be the loser thereby of several hundred thousand dollars, probably as much as a million dollars. For these reasons I indulge the hope that the items to which I have alluded may be stricken from this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] to use some of his time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

PHILIPPINE FACTS RELATING TO THE INDEPENDENCE THEORY.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, it would give me great pleasure on this occasion to speak of the many admirable traits and capabilities of the Filipino people, but I must restrict myself to political questions, and in their consideration something akin to a critical attitude must of necessity be assumed. I desire to present at this time some of the facts and conditions discovered by me on a trip of investigation recently made through the islands. It was my purpose in making that trip to secure first-hand and authentic information respecting those matters essentially interrelated with independence. The conclusions herein expressed were formed only after a most thorough and complete investigation, extending over all the Provinces, practically all of the wild tribes, involving a journey in the islands of more than 8,000 miles.

I assume that all those who advocate Philippine independence do so upon the theory that the withdrawal of American sovereignty shall be followed by the establishment in the Philippines of popular self-government embodying representative institutions. Should it be the desire of the Filipinos, a desire sanctioned by our acquiescence, to establish a monarchical form of government, I believe such a government could be established, and that when established it would be reasonably well conducted; but, so far as I have observed, no American has suggested such a form of government. Filipinos have not mentioned it, and the American people would never consent to it. I have no doubt we are all agreed that however efficient such a government might be, this is altogether too late a day in human progress for its institution. It would be a sorry spectacle in the history of nations for a monarchy now to be established, even though limited by a constitution, with the cooperation and support of the first great Republic of the world. So our attention well can be focused upon the single question whether the Filipinos are able to establish and maintain representative self-government.

The capacity of a people to govern themselves depends upon the racial elements composing the people and upon certain traits of character and conduct inseparable from their very nature. Alien and warring elements prevent unity of thought and purpose, and defeat supremacy of the right which is fundamentally essential to the success of free government.

By reason of many conditions, any one of which is controlling, representative self-government in the islands is absolutely impossible and independence from the United States unthinkable. The people occupying the Philippine Islands do not as yet constitute a homogenous nation. At times we hear it said that the Filipinos are wild and naked beings, savage as primitive man. Then again we hear it said they are refined and cultured, advanced in civilization. Neither estimate is correct if applied to all the people; both are correct if applied to some. There are many wild tribes hardly if at all outside the realm of savagery. There are many Filipinos educated and cultured, refined in human qualities. Then there are many, many more occupying various grades of development between these extremes. Truth is, there are more kinds of humanity, more different grades of human development to be found in the Philippine Islands than in any other single region of the earth's surface.

These differences are due, with few exceptions, to the varying opportunities for civilization and development enjoyed by the people in different parts of the islands. It is not wide of the mark to say that the different grades of development measure the extent to which Spain actually occupied the different parts of the country. The Spanish Government claimed sovereignty over the entire archipelago, but to claim sovereignty and to exercise it are two very different things. At no time during the four centuries of her rule did Spain actually occupy and control more than one-half of the territory in the islands. At times she exercised temporary dominion over some areas, more or less affecting the people, later to withdraw when pressure came. In certain regions Spanish power was entrenched, and there the highest civilization is found.

The aborigines of the islands were the Negritos, ethnologically an offshoot of the Negro race. Then came the Malay invasion from the direction of Borneo, Sumatra, and the Straits. The Malays drove the Negritos into inaccessible spots, and there we find them to-day. A few thousand in this mountain region, a few thousand in that, not above 40,000 in all, wild, timid, diminutive creatures who preserve their existence by keeping off the enemy with poisoned arrows.

Another Malay invasion followed after several centuries, and these newcomers drove those who had preceded them into the mountains and remote regions. Those thus driven back constitute for the most part the wild tribes of to-day. Spain never extended her dominion into or over these regions, contenting herself with the subjugation of the peoples living on the plains and along the seacoast. Centuries before Magellan sighted the Philippines fanatical Mohammedans moved eastward through Polynesia, across Borneo, and into the southern islands of the Philippines. They were missionaries, and spread the faith which ever since has been the dominant, controlling factor in the lives of these people. Thus, ethnologically, nearly all the peoples in the Philippines are Malays, and the presence to-day of radically different tribes, different languages, different manners and customs is due to centuries of isolation and different external influences to which the various sections have been subjected. These elements have never been molded together into one people, cemented into one nationality, with a common language, common religion, common customs, common institutions, and common aspirations. A mere crowd of people do not make a nation. Common racial origin does not unite into a single nationality. If it did, Germans, English, Scandinavians, and Americans would be but one nation. There must be homogeneity in national characteristics.

The island of Luzon, the largest and most populous of the group, in about the center of which is the city of Manila, naturally shows the most marked development in civilization and industrial progress, and yet the north third of the island is occupied exclusively by wild men, of whom they are several distinct powerful tribes. During all these centuries this land to the north has been as isolated from the land of the Christians as though the two had been in opposite hemispheres.

In a political consideration of the inhabitants of the islands sharp distinction must be drawn between the Christian people and the wild tribes, and these two great classes must be treated separately.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Do any of these northern tribes that the gentleman speaks of use poisoned arrows at this time?

Mr. MILLER. Only the Negritos to any considerable extent; but I must add that some of the wild Tingians, farther to the north, have been found to do so, but to a less extent.

Of the 8,000,000 people in the islands about 6,800,000 are Christian, and constitute the people we generally have in mind when we speak of the Filipinos. Little has been said about the wild tribes, because until recent years little has been known about them. We see now, however, that they occupy a very large place in the Philippine problem.

The Christian inhabitants consist of several well-defined groups. They are often spoken of as tribes; but I do not think that term should be applied to any of the Christian people. In the island of Luzon, the largest and most populous of the islands, there are several of these different groups. Beginning farthest to the north we find the Cagayans; then the Ilocanos along the west shore between the mountains and the China Sea; then the Pangasinans, the Zambalans, the Pampangans, the Tagalogs, and the Bicols. Then a little farther south we find the middle islands occupied by the Vizsayans, the most numerous of all. Each of these groups speaks a different language, wholly unintelligible to the members of any other group, each has certain customs and characteristics peculiar to itself, and each has a certain tribal pride and patriotism.

True, indeed, these groups have a similar religion, dress alike, and possess many common customs, but they are kept separate by lacking a common language. Some of them also are more aggressive than others, and there results certain jealousies, unimportant in many, but serious in certain quarters. The big branches of the Filipino people are the Ilocanos, industrious and aggressive; the Tagalogs, independent and warlike; the Vizsayans, rapidly developing. The Vizsayans number three and a quarter millions, and are more numerous than the Tagalogs and Ilocanos combined. The Tagalogs have heretofore been the dominant branch, and their nature demands this place. With Democratic success in America, the possibility of independence suddenly appeared before the islands. Immediately certain Tagalog leaders held secret meetings, determined if independence should come to hold its destinies in their hands. I am strongly of the opinion, based upon mature consideration, that the Vizsayans would not submit to Tagalog supremacy. The attitude toward each other of these two all-powerful tribes would be one of the gravest dangers confronting an infant Filipino republic. While no Malay people have ever yet welded themselves together into a single nation, the situation in the Philippines is not without hope.

During the 15 years of American occupation marked progress has been made in welding these elements together. We have given them for the first time popular education. As learning advances among a people, superstition, local prejudice, petty partisanship, false ideals, and intolerance retreat and disappear. Such has been the recent history of the Filipinos, but the process has only fairly started. You can not make over a people in a single night. You can not change character by a mere change of sovereignty. The process is evolution, not edict or resolution. A common language will not have been attained before at least another generation, and even then the melting into a nation will be far from complete.

Then, Mr. Chairman, for a people to be completely self-governing they must possess a governmental consciousness or an appreciation of the responsibilities of popular government. The lack of this consciousness and the lack of this sense of responsibility impressed me more than any other one thing I found in the islands. It must be understood that now I am speaking of the great mass of the people, not of the educated leaders. Nor am I speaking of the permanent character of the people. I am calling attention to the state of political evolution they are in to-day and probably will be in for another generation or two.

Capacity in a people to organize and maintain self-government is only attained after centuries of history. When once attained it never departs. It becomes physically interwoven with every fiber and every tissue. It is an inseparable part of every human being. It is as much a part of his make-up as is the capacity to breathe, to acquire a trade, or to follow the outward customs of his people. Place Teutons or Celts wheresoever you will, on the bosom of America, in the wilds of Alaska, in the jungles of Africa, and immediately, by habit, they will organize and maintain self-government. When they do this they give expression to a capacity resulting from centuries of evolution.

This truth has been admirably expressed and its concrete application most pertinently and forcibly made by one of the most distinguished men now living, the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson. In his work on Constitutional Government in the United States, written in the recent year of 1907, he says, beginning on page 52:

> Self-government is not a mere form of institutions, to be had when desired, if only proper pains be taken. It is a form of character. It follows upon the long discipline which gives a people self-possession, self-mastery, the habit of order and peace and common counsel, and a reverence for law which will not fail when they themselves become the makers of law—the steadiness and self-control of political maturity. And these things can not be had without long discipline.
>
> The distinction is of vital concern to us in respect of practical choices of policy which we must make, and make very soon. We have dependencies to deal with and must deal with them in the true spirit of our own institutions. We can give the Filipinos constitutional government, a government which they may count upon to be just, a government based upon some clear and equitable understanding, intended for their good and not for our aggrandizement; but we must ourselves for the present supply that government. It would, it is true, be an unprecedented operation, reversing the process of Runnymede, but America has before this shown the world enlightened processes of politics that were without precedent. It would have been within the choice of John to summon his barons to Runnymede and of his own initiative enter into a constitutional understanding with them; and it is within our choice to do a similar thing at once wise and generous, in the government of the Philippine Islands. But we can not give them self-government. Self-government is not a thing that can be "given" to any people, because it is a form of character and not a form of constitution. No people can be "given" the self-control of maturity. Only a long apprenticeship of obedience can secure them the precious possession, a thing no more to be bought than given. They can not be presented with the character of a community, but it may confidently be hoped that they will become a community under the wholesome and salutary influences of just laws and a sympathetic administration; that they will after a while understand and master themselves, if in the meantime they are understood and served in good conscience by those set over them in authority.

Every lesson in government learned by the Filipinos under Spanish rule it is necessary that they unlearn. During four centuries they had witnessed government take the form of legalized graft; they had observed in the possession of office but an opportunity to advance selfish motives; they had been taught that it is the right of a few to govern and the duty of the rest to obey. It has been necessary that they learn new ideals of government, acquire new standards of citizenship.

In general, it can be said a Filipino does not have proper respect or consideration for another's views and rights. There is intolerance of opposition and a marked tendency to force others into agreement. Many persons are shocked at the treatment Filipinos accorded those of their people who would not join in the insurrections of 1899. It is apparent that the acts employed, however unspeakable in their cruelty, were plainly and openly thought proper, as the object was to coerce all to the insurrection cause. The recent ludicrous act of their legislature in writing into law the political platform of the present dominant party springs from the same trait. This becomes serious politically, because in representative self-government the majority must not abuse its power, nor must it overlook the rights of the minority. Reversing the picture, this characteristic inclines the minority to refuse its acquiescence in the decision of the ballot and to resort to a contest of force. The world to-day is witnessing too many awful spectacles of government where this trait abounds.

This misconception of the obligations and responsibilities of citizenship in a representative self-government was never better illustrated than in the famous speech made by a prominent Filipino to the Taft party in 1905. He said:

> If the Philippine Archipelago has a governable popular mass called upon to obey and a directing class charged with the duty of governing, it is in condition to govern itself. These factors, not counting incidental ones, are the only two by which to determine the political capacity of a country—an entity that knows how to govern, the directing class, and an entity that knows how to obey, the popular masses.

The Filipino has not yet learned that the ballot is a sacred institution and that upon its purity depends the existence of free government. When we established elections in the islands we did not for a moment imagine those elections would be carried on without some fraud, but no one was prepared for the chicanery, trickery, and double-crossing rascality that has characterized much of the balloting down to date. The qualifications for voting are very mild, and yet only about 15 per cent of the adult male population actually votes. Of those voting upward of 70 per cent are illiterate, it being necessary that their votes be marked for them. The percentage of literate voters in the last election to the whole population was but 1.47. There results work of a monstrously fraudulent character, involving candidates, judges, and voters. A very large number of elections are contested, and the evidence submitted in these contests can well make the Filipino's best friend pause and reflect. Were it not for the strong arm of America extending over this land, protecting the weak, enforcing the right, and preserving peace, many of these elections would be settled by the power of the lion's might.

Again, Filipino officials have not shown honesty and capacity in handling public funds. At one time in the Provinces we filled the office of treasurer with Filipinos, but the result was most unfortunate. The Filipino had not yet forgotten his Spanish lesson and was unable to keep public funds sacred from private use.

In recent days when funds have been apportioned among municipalities for public works, the officials of these municipalities all being Filipinos, many instances have occurred where the funds were used up in salaries and not a peso remained for the work. These items do not indicate unregenerate rascality; not at all. They indicate an undeveloped sense of the sacredness of public trust, of the responsibility of public service.

The passionate orator who declaimed before the Taft party upon the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government because there existed a class willing to govern and a class willing to be governed, made himself ludicrous in our sight; yet in his statement is contained an important fact. Because of ignorance and indifference the great mass of Filipinos have no well-defined political ideas, but they have leaders of learning, skill, and industry. These leaders are not full-blood Filipinos. It is safe to say that practically every Filipino in public life to-day is a mestizo, either Chinese mestizo or Spanish mestizo. These men are leaders because of superior ability, and they constitute a distinct class. Should independence be granted, this class doubtless would became "the entity that knows how to govern—the directing class." Should that event occur, "the entity that knows how to obey, the popular masses," would not, in my opinion, be allowed real participation in the government. They would not have the capacity to do so and complete subservience would result.

Amid such conditions a monarch could live, but what a farce would representative self-government become!

I made a special effort to ascertain if the Filipino people want independence. Full opportunity was taken to acquire the information. All the political leaders, of every shade of opinion, expressed a desire for independence. Throughout the Christian Provinces, wherever I went, I was met by speeches asking for independence. The voices of these people who addressed me united into one big chorus, asking "independence."

I resolved to find out if these speeches expressed the views and wishes of all the people. It must be said they did express the views and wishes of most of the political leaders, professional men, many of the business men, and most of the educated men. While many leading business men in public expressed the opinion that the Filipinos can handle independence, yet full information convinces me that if they really thought independence soon to come they would be filled with most profound alarm.

I find, however, that very few Filipinos have any comprehension of the burdens, responsibilities, or danger entailed by independence. Some of the leading Filipinos, it is true, thought independence could be handled in other respects but were afraid they never could successfully maintain international relations. To their mind this constituted an insurmountable barrier.

When I got away from the more highly educated and leading class and mingled with taos, or common people, I discovered some remarkable things. This class constitutes over 80 per cent of the population. It is ignorant, easily led, patient, and peaceful. I found some of them talking for independence. I asked them what they thought this independence was. Some replied, if they had their independence, they would not have to pay any more taxes; others thought independence meant they would not have to pay their debts, they would all be free from past troubles. I found practically no one of this class who had anything like a correct idea of what independence is; but by far the majority of this tao class—and that means a majority of living Christian Filipinos—have no ideas whatever regarding independence, and many have never heard of it. To illustrate this fact, let me cite one incident: Iloilo is the second largest city in the islands. It is a flourishing, progressive city. It has always been one of the independencia immediatista centers of the islands. As a visitor I was beautifully entertained. There were many cries for independence. Determined to meet and talk with the common people, I cut loose from the arranged program, and one morning started at 6 o'clock, with an interpreter, for the country. Selecting a good place on the main road, we set up camp under a big mango tree. All passers-by were invited to sit down and smoke. We soon had a large crowd. They did not have the remotest idea who I was. After asking them about their work, their crops, and their general prosperity, I asked them what they thought of independence. I asked them all, going from man to man, and of that entire crowd not one had ever heard of independence, had not the remotest idea of what it was. All, save just one. He said he had heard of this thing called independence. One day he was in Santa Barbara, and a man was making a speech in the plaza. This man told them they needed independence and ought to have it. "Well," I asked, "what do you think?" After hesitating a moment, he replied: "Crops are good this year, and I don't believe we need independence."

One day I was in the far-away country of Davao, among a wild people called Bagobos. I had summoned the headmen of the tribe, and we sat beneath a great tree in the forest. Here were famous fighting men, renowned through the tribe. Here were aged counselors, whose wisdom was respected. Here were young chiefs, eager to earn renown. All bore themselves with great dignity, clad in beautiful garments iridescent with beads of a thousand colors. I asked them what they thought about independence. No one had ever heard of it, or of anything like it, save two or three who lived together near the coast. They said there came to them one day a man who said he was a Filipino and who told them they needed independence. "What is this independence?" they inquired. Whereupon the Filipino replied, "Independence is like this: Now, when you want to grow a crop of rice, you cut down the trees and the brush. Then you dig up the soil. Then you set out the rice plants, care for them till they ripen; then you gather the rice. When you want another crop, you do all this over again. Now, if you had indepedence, all you would need to do is to prepare your ground. Then Osmena would come, scatter a handful of rice over the earth. Instantly there would spring up a great crop of ripened rice, one that would never disappear, and all you would need to do is to pick the rice on forever." Then, naturally, I asked, "What do you think about that?" "We did not believe him," was the short, sharp reply.

In point of efficiency the Filipinos could not and would not maintain a government comparable with that we have established. They need the constant spur and direction that comes from American intelligence to transform their agricultural processes from that primitive character employed by primeval man to present-century methods. To do this, governmental direction is fundamentally essential. The produce of the soil can be multiplied many times by the application of new methods, the growing of new crops, and the prosperity of the people vastly augmented.

There has been established in the islands under American direction a splendid public-school system, one more perfectly adapted to the needs of the people than any other I have ever seen. This has been supported most generously and enthusiastically by the Filipinos, to their everlasting credit. I noted that wherever these schools were under immediate American supervision, the actual teaching being done by Filipinos, they were progressive and efficient, but wherever that supervision did not exist they were extremely poor and inefficient. I have no doubt but that if American direction were generally removed from the schools, the decline would be quick and appalling.

No work in the islands has been more superb or more vital than that of the Bureau of Public Health. Time was when full 50,000 each year fell a prey to smallpox. Now the disease is almost unknown. Time was when unnumbered hordes died from beriberi. Now that disease is checked, soon to be eliminated. Time was when the unspeakable horror of cholera and plague ravaged and depopulated. To-day it is practically unknown. Modern science applied with American vigor has made this disease-ridden region sanitary and healthful. But most of the work has been done in the face of native opposition. While in many regions a sanitary consciousness has been developed, and many Filipinos are now loyal to the cause of health rules and sanitation, yet if left to themselves, everyone knows this splendid health service would be vitally crippled, if not absolutely destroyed. The marked progress of Filipinos in recent years in health matters indicates that if the present forces be continued, in time they can reasonably care for themselves, but that time is far from being present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I will yield 15 minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 15 minutes more.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I think he ought to have time in which to complete his address. It is very interesting.

Mr. MILLER. Passing over many minor questions, there remains the great problem of the wild tribes. To my mind that is by far the biggest thing in the way of independence. Gentlemen may speak lightly of it and throw it aside, but it will not down. It can not be disposed of in that way. It stands before us, big and stubborn.

In the first place, the Filipinos know comparatively nothing about the wild tribes of the islands. What they do have in mind is mostly erroneous. After visiting certain wild tribes I have returned to Christian country and been appalled as some leading, first-class Filipino would tell me confidently what those tribes thought and what they wanted. He believed what he said, but in every detail it was squarely contrary to the facts. My eyes had seen and my ears had heard the truth. It is apparent the Filipinos do not consider the wild tribes as constituting a governmental problem. After an honest effort to get their point of view I am driven to the conclusion that the Filipinos generally believe they could and would, in case of independence, dispose of the wild tribes by placing a government over them, opening up their lands to Filipino colonization and quite speedily eliminating them. What would follow the attempt to carry out such a program makes one shudder to his very soul. Every Filipino who spoke to me on the subject, and they were many, informed me that the wild men and the Moros desired the independence of the islands and preferred Filipino to American rule. How squarely opposed this is to the truth will soon be disclosed. It is to be noted that heretofore the Government of the wild tribes and the Moros has been almost exclusively in the hands of Americans, which accounts for the fact that the Filipinos are completely ignorant respecting them.

Go with me to the great and beautiful mountains of northern Luzon, the home of the Igorrotes and wild men. This is sacred ground. Not only is here the home of 400,000 people now living, but in those valleys and about those mountain tops reside the spirits of departed ancestors back through all the ages. This is the land of the bold and fearless head-hunter. These fighting men are the most superb physical specimens to be found in the Orient. The bracing air of their mountain home, the vigorous exercise of their mountain climbing, make them strong of heart and strong of arm. They are more numerous than were the Indians at any time within the confines of the United States. They are compact and people the entire region. This is their country, their fatherland. Spain never could force her sovereignty over this area. No Filipino ever had the hardihood to attempt to disturb them. Then came the American. Courageous, self-reliant men were sent to organize a government and to stop the awful slaughter incident to head-hunting. These men had to show by their personal courage and strength that they were fit to be the apos, the rulers, of these people. Witness the transformation. These hordes, whose religion and whose pastime had been head-hunting, have ceased the slaughter and developed a consciousness that head-hunting is wrong. Their wondrous energy is now turned to building trails, better houses, systems of irrigation, and other public works. Their appreciation of what the Americans have done it is their constant joy to express, and their loyalty to the American Government is full-hearted and complete. [Applause.] As I entered their land I crossed two mountain ranges and was among the heights of a third when a typhoon struck us with wind and rain. Urging my horse along the trail as rapidly as I could, I suddenly found myself in the midst of an Igorrote village. I stopped. There before me across the trail arose an arch of bamboo and palm, gracefully erected, covered with orchids and beautiful plants. At the top floated the American flag. From out a thatched-roofed hut, somewhat larger than the rest, a schoolhouse, hurried more than 100 Igorrote children, and in the shelter of a spreading palm lifted up their childish voices and sang "The Star-Spangled Banner." [Applause.] It was the first time I had heard our national anthem anywhere in the islands.

At Bontoc, the governmental center of the Mountain Province, were gathered many thousand wild people to meet me. They came with their old men, their fighting men, their sisters, and their wives. And especially came the chiefs, representing 200,000 people. After a marvelous canyo, lasting two days, I took these chiefs or headmen, 125, into a lengthy conference. I asked them one by one if they desired the Americans to leave and the Filipinos to govern them. It was a novel proposition. They had never thought of such a thing. But they soon talked with striking emphasis. With explosive language and many gestures they recounted what the Americans had done for their people, and they asked that the Americans never leave, that their government continue on forever. Then, with grim vigor that sprang from conscious power, they declared that never, never would they permit a Filipino to rule over them.

I talked with these men one by one, and after a time those who were through gathered at one side. Soon they were talking loudly and angrily. There was distinct commotion. Suddenly two or three powerful headmen rushed over to the governor and demanded what this Americano meant by telling them the Americans were going to leave. If they were going to leave, when were they going and when were the Filipinos going to try to come in there to be their Apos. They wanted to know now if these things were going to be, as their people would have something to say about it. The situation was rather tense, and I saw instantly that something had to be done. So I called them all back, told them the Americans had not decided to leave, that I asked the question because a Filipino told me the mountain people wanted the Americans to leave and the Filipinos to be their Apos. They all insisted upon telling me over again how much they wanted the Americans to stay, and enlarged on what they would do to the Filipinos should they come there to govern them.

I held similar meetings with headmen at Benaue and Quiangan, and with exactly similar results. During the two weeks I rode through this region I talked with practically every headman of these powerful tribes, and without exception met with the same determined attitude. Do not minimize what this means. These people can deliver the goods. In the twinkling of an eye 50,000 fighting men will gather at their chieftain's call. They are men mighty in battle. They will never submit to Filipino rule, but can and will, in the defense of their valleys and their homes, beat back all the armies a Filipino nation can send against them.

But if these people were not able to make good their threats, not able to beat back the advancing Filipino, what have you to say, you whose first political tenet is that there should be no government except with the consent of the governed; what have you to say about forcing upon these multitudes of people a government they are ready to shed their blood to prevent?

Now, go with me a thousand miles to the south into the land of the Moros. Here is a people more warlike, more fanatical, more invincible than the wild men of the north. When knighthood was in flower and our Christian fathers with the cross upon their standards struggled with matchless courage but ineffectual strength to drive the Moslem from the Holy Land, there journeyed Saracen missionaries through the Straits Settlements, Sumatra, and Borneo, into the southern group of the Philippine Archipelago. They taught the faith of Islam and prayed to Mohammed. They taught that the Koran was the true guide to faith and the true rule of conduct. Their hearers gripped their teachings into their souls, and ever since their Mohammedan faith has been the vital, ruling fact in their lives. Bold and fearless, bloodthirsty and fanatical, they proved irresistible in conflict. Spain was never able to secure more than a precarious foothold in their land. Many a gallant Spanish army withered and wasted before their whirlwind attack. They were fierce pirates and roamed the seas. The traveler to-day beholds among the Christian islands, even up to the very door of Manila, ruins of forts erected by the Spanish, a refuge and a protection from the Moro hordes. Up to the very time an American army first sailed for the Philippines the Moros in their fleet boats skimmed the seas of the north, plundered and devastated whole villages and provinces, taking back multitudes of captives to become slaves. They have ever been the hereditary enemies of the Filipinos, hating and despising them with all their fanatical hearts. They hold the Filipinos to be their enemies by heredity, their mortal foes in religion. You and I agree this should not be so, but it is so. It is to them the great thing in life. I have heard Filipinos say the Moros would welcome Filipino rule. Misguided, mistaken souls! Oh, if their eyes could but see, their ears but hear the truth!

To the traveler these people possess a wondrous fascination. In the fierceness of their spirit, the cruelty of their customs, the dignity of their bearing, the brilliant color of their Arabian-like dress, and with the ever-present turban on their heads, they move before the western eye like a panorama from the Arabian Nights.

I journeyed first to the great island of Mindanao and into the region of Lake Lanao, a magnificent lake of clear, cool water, 2,000 feet above the sea, crowned by a circle of noble mountains. These Moros are the most intelligent and powerful of them all, though less fanatical than their Sulu brethren. I met their people and conferred with their datus or chiefs at three different places. The principal meeting was at Dansalan. Here were datus and sultans representing all the Lanao Moros. Here was the wise and powerful Amai Manabilang, the most highly respected of them all. Here was Amai Sankakala, clad in pure white, in token of his recent pilgrimage to Mecca. Here was the black-garbed, fierce-looking datu who ruled the restless hordes far beyond that majestic mountain to the south. Here were old datus, young datus, fighting chiefs, and chiefs willing to fight, all clad in their gorgeous apparel. He who is chief among them, by custom, talks first. Up rose Amai Manabilang and addressed me as follows:

Your coming is nothing but pleasure, a joy like a large crystal—bright and beautiful. The vision is like a stream of clear water running pure and clean to the sea. This joy is the same as if our father and mother had arrived here to-day. America has been a father and mother to us. When the Americans came, they arrived bringing much better conditions. It was not like the Spanish Government that forced everything and took everything. We ask that the Americans will always be our father and our mother and that the American Government will always be over us. When the Americans first came we thought they were like the Spanish, so we fought them. But you were too strong for us, and then we thought it wise to make peace. We were surprised and made happy when we found your Government is just and fair. Your orders are for the betterment of our people. We ask that you not interfere with our religion. The Koran was given by God for people to live according to the ways of God. Its teachings are just and fair, and so are your laws. All are for the betterment of man. God gave us the Koran and you give us laws, and in the combination of these two you will find everything man needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman an additional 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for an additional 10 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. A strange moment in human history! A thrilling sight for American eyes! Back in the distant past, in the early hours of Europe's history, the Mohammedan host threatened all Christendom. Approaching from Africa, on the west through Spain, on the east across the Bosphorus, all Europe shook with the struggle. On the field of Tours and before the walls of Vienna the Saracen advance was stopped forever and Christianity saved to the world. Twelve centuries have passed. The principles of Christianity have perfected human government, solved the problem of civil institutions. Christian institutions have marched westward around the globe. The greatest Nation of all times, the most humane of all governments, has pushed the forces of Christian civilization westward till they have reached the land of the Mohammedan. There in Moroland, underneath the American flag, I beheld the cross and the crescent at peace, united for the well-being of a race. [Applause.]

All those Moro chieftains expressed similar sentiments, in figurative language and with feeling most intense. At length I asked them what they would do if the Americans left and Filipinos came to govern them. At the suggestion of a Filipino government there was a distinct commotion. Their figures became tense, their eyes flashed, they shifted about, fierce sounds came from their lips. Then Amai Manabilang rose to his full height, all eyes turned upon him. Folding his arms, he looked me steadfastly in the eye, then smiled as he said, "You Americans are our friends. If the Filipinos come to govern us, you take good seats on these hills and watch what we do to them." There was a general shout of approval.

Journeying to the distant Cotabato country, I found the Moros at the place of that name violent in their anti-Filipino feeling. They elaborated at great length upon the reasons why they could not and would not submit to Filipino rule. One big fellow, fierce in every expression, demanded to know if the Filipinos were coming to try to govern them. I said, "Some of them want to." "If they do," he shouted, "you go out on that island over there in the Celebes Sea, where you won't get hurt, and watch what a Moro does with a Filipino."

Going up the Cotabato River into the interior of Mindanao, I came to the region ruled over by Datu Piang, the most powerful Moro living. As our little boat curved in to his landing we were greeted by a full congressional salute, fired from Spanish cannon he had captured in years long gone by. He and his datus expressed great liking for the American Government, but grew violent at the suggestion of Filipino rule. There was once a Filipino president in the Moro country. It was in the days of the insurrection. Some Filipinos gathered at Cotabato one day, selected a president, and started a government. The next morning at dawn Moros seized the president, took him to the bank of the great river, and made him kneel. A barong flashed for an instant and the president's head rolled into the river. At Piangs the Moro, a datu, who did the physical act of decapitation was pointed out to me. I asked him what he would do if the Filipinos should come to govern the Moros. He was a sour-looking chap. He made a face and said, "I'm getting old; but I did it once, and think I can do it again."

So it was everywhere—in far-away Davao, in Zamboanga, Basilan, Siasi, Bongao. At Jolo I had a strange experience. The island of that name is the one hostile spot at the present hour. The inhabitants are the very fiercest of fanatics, and among them are many outlaws. This island is the home of the Sultan of Sulu. At the meeting of datus and chiefs I was surprised at the talk they gave me. They said they had the same kind of skin the Filipinos had, and that perhaps they could get along all right with a Filipino government. But there was every evidence of a lack of frankness. All the expressions were strained and wholly unlike the way Moros talk. They did not respond to my questions. After some four hours I told them they were not talking frankly with me and it was useless to confer further. I dismissed the meeting. Toward evening of that same day a big Moro datu, all dressed in white, came to me and asked if I would go to the Sultan's house outside the city wall. Of course I would. To my surprise, I found all the datus there. They said they had not talked straight to me in the morning and were sore distressed. With the utmost earnestness and vehemence they then expressed the most violent antipathy toward the Filipinos. When asked what would happen if the Filipinos should try to rule, one datu replied, "This island will then be full of Filipinos, all slaves of the Moros." I inquired why it was they talked so differently in the morning. The Sultan replied that a few weeks prior there had come to them a Filipino who told them I would soon visit them, and when I came I wanted and expected them to say they had a skin similar to that of the Filipinos and could get along all right under a government of the Filipinos.

There is but one conclusion here. The Moros will never submit to Filipino rule. It will be war to the death, and there are those who predict a conquest by the Moros, not of the Moros. These people are developing under American government. They ask a continuance of that government, and it would be repugnant to them to the last degree to impose Filipino rule over them. Is their future to be ignored? Are their highest wishes to have no consideration? In this connection I must speak of a matter of gravest moment. We have of late induced these Moros to disarm. We have taken from them their means of defense under promise that we will protect them. What becomes of our plighted word, our sacred honor, our plain duty, if, having made them helpless for the time, we turn their ancient foes, fully armed and equipped, upon them?

But let us turn from these Moros, who love to fight and can hold their own, to a weak and defenseless people, the wild people of Bukidnon. Their country in the northern part of Mindanao is cut off from the sea by a narrow strip inhabited and controlled by Filipinos. The Filipinos here are a bad lot. They are certainly below the average of Filipino people. For years and years they lived on the work of the wild Bukidnons. They looked upon him as their legitimate prey; they robbed him of his hemp, and they robbed him of his stock; they made him virtually a slave.

Just one illustration: A wild man came down to the port of Agusan. He had hemp to sell. A Filipino told him he needed a partner, one to sell what he raised. He prevailed upon the Bukidnon to affix his mark to what he said was a contract of partnership. Three years passed. All that time the wild man had continuously brought down hemp and produce for his partner to sell; but he never received any payment. Then he asked for some money. The Filipino indignantly replied he had nothing coming, and showed the wild man that instead of a contract partnership he had signed a deed to all his property—all his land, all his hemp, all his carabao. And the Filipino officials refused him any relief.

In despair the Bukidnons fled to the hills and the trees, leaving their country, the most beautiful in all the Philippines, almost depopulated. Then came the Americans, three years ago. They held back the rapacious Christiano; they protected the wild man, got him to come down from the trees and the mountains and to build beautiful villages on that wonderful plateau. The transformation was instant and marvelous. Fields are being cultivated, rice, corn, coffee, pineapple, and cocoa berry are being produced in large quantities. Model villages, clean and sanitary as Spotless Town, have appeared. The public school has started the great work of public education. As I rode on horseback through this Province, along splendid trails built by them, saw the industry, the prosperity, beheld this peaceful, patient, helpless people, and realized what American justice had brought to them the American flag had for me an added glory.

At Tangkulan were gathered the headmen of the tribe. Some had ridden their little ponies more than a hundred miles to attend. I no sooner entered their midst than I noted they were under great emotion. I soon learned the cause. The angry Filipinos on the coast, now deprived of their prey, had of late exultingly told the Bukidnons that there would soon be independence, the Americans were going to leave, and then for them to watch out! They would be in Filipino hands forever!

The first to speak was a young man, in full vigor. He said he had heard the Americans were going to leave and let the Filipinos rule. He had talked it over with his people. The young men had decided to fight, while the old men, women, and children took to the mountains.

Another man, apparently of great influence, said he and his people had talked this over carefully. They had decided that they themselves would kill all their women and children, and the men would die fighting. At the end he said, "If they get us, we may as well be dead."

Thus they talked, all the representatives of these 60,000 people. The last to speak was an old man, most famous among them all. He had journeyed far to meet the American representative. He made a venerable appearance as he rose to speak. He recited the wrongs of his people, how they had suffered from the Filipinos, how discouraged and afraid they had lived in the trees and the hills; then how prosperous the times, how happy their lives, since their friends the Americans had come:

I am old and my days are few. Soon I must leave, but my people! Better that you cut their throats and leave them dead than turn them over to Filipinos.

With tears streaming down his face he knelt and begged that I take home to America, to the great people there, his one prayer, that never, never shall the American Government withdraw its protecting arm from his helpless people.

Gentlemen, that message I convey to you now.

There are many other wild tribes which I visited, notably the Negritos, the Bagobos, the Subanos, the Manobos, the Tagbanuas, and the Mangyans, but the tale as to them is but a repetition of that which has been told. These people occupy half the entire area of the archipelago. They are human beings. They have rights, if any human beings have rights. Filipino rule would mean bloodshed and injury. It would undoubtedly mean the abuse and annihilation of the weaker of these tribes. These tribes are violently opposed to that rule. If consent of the governed is to be our guide, we must apply it here as elsewhere.

Independent, representative self-government in the Philippine Islands is an impossibility now. This is not the opinion of a single observer. It is the unanimous verdict of all, both Democrats and Republicans, who have themselves seen conditions. There are many Filipinos to-day as elegant, refined, and capable of governing themselves as any people on earth, but not so the big majority. Great progress has been made, yet the stages of evolution are many, and but few have been reached. I have great faith in the Filipino race. I think they should have full opportunity to develop a distinct nationality, and when developed I believe it will play its full part in the promotion of human welfare. But now thought should be turned from independence to the economic development of their country, the fusion into a nationality, the growth of a governmental consciousness, the production of Filipino leaders and broad-minded statesmen. Above all things, the Filipinos need a native who will tell them the truth about themselves; a statesman who sees the real needs of his people and directs their energies accordingly.

The duty of America is clear and certain. Our purpose toward these islands was nobly conceived and has been well advanced. We have started a work, it must be finished. The honor of America is at stake. The capacity of America is at stake. The eyes of the world are upon our work. Let that work be carried on, as it has been begun, with fidelity to ideals and with unflinching courage. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS].

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Maine will be granted. [After a pause.] No objection is heard.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] to use some of his time.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is made. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-two gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

Ainey	Campbell	Clayton	Dies
Anthony	Candler	Connelly, Kans.	Difenderfer
Avis	Cantrill	Connolly, Iowa.	Dooling
Barchfeld	Carew	Conry	Doremus
Barnhart	Carlin	Copley	Driscoll
Bartlett	Carter	Crisp	Evans
Brodbeck	Clancy	Crosser	Fairchild
Burke, Pa.	Clark, Fla.	Dale	Fields

Finley	Helvering	Madden	Smith, Md.
FitzHenry	Houston	Maher	Smith, N. Y.
Flood, Va.	Hoxworth	Manahan	Sparkman
Frear	Hughes, W. Va.	Martin	Stanley
Gilmore	Johnson, S. C.	Merritt	Stout
Gittins	Kent	Moss, W. Va.	Talcott, N. Y.
Godwin, N. C.	Key, Ohio	Murdock	Tavenner
Goodwin, Ark.	Kiess, Pa.	Neeley, Kans.	Taylor, Ala.
Graham, Pa.	Knowland, J. R.	Norton	Temple
Green, Iowa	Korbly	O'Brien	Thomson, Ill.
Gudger	Lafferty	O'Leary	Walsh
Guernsey	Langham	Patton, Pa.	Whitacre
Hamill	Lee, Ga.	Plumley	White
Hamlin	L'Engle	Post	Willis
Hardwick	Levy	Powers	Wilson, Fla.
Haugen	Lindquist	Rainey	Wilson, N. Y.
Hawley	Loft	Riordan	Woodruff
Hay	McGuire, Okla.	Rucker
Hayes	McKenzie	Sinnott

The committee rose; and Mr. POU, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the naval appropriation bill and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 326 Members had answered to their names, and he presented therewith a list of absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum having been disclosed, the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] has the floor.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, the subject upon which I propose to address you is exceedingly important. I can not help but believe, gentlemen, that it is sufficiently important to warrant me in asking you to give me a patient hearing. In my remarks I am going to proceed upon the theory that one Member has as much patriotism, as much genuine love for country, and is as zealous to do his whole duty as another Member; that each Member will consider and seriously go into the facts which I may be able to submit and will vote upon this important question fearlessly and honestly as representatives of the American people should do. We are right in the position we take or we are wrong. We therefore ask you, as we feel we have a right to ask you, for a patient hearing upon the subject. If we are unable to convince you of the justice, of the wisdom, and of the patriotism of our position, then we say to you vote with the chairman of this committee; but if we are able to show you beyond any question that we have due regard for the national defense and that there is no earthly need for building more battleships at this time; that it means a criminal waste of the public funds; in other words, if we show you that we have an "efficient Navy" at the present time, or if, on the other hand, we show you that in order to increase the efficiency of our Navy, if that is our purpose, we should make provision for arming and manning the ships which we already have constructed and lying idle, instead of authorizing additional battleships, then we hope to have your support. The rule, however, is universal that the burden of proof always devolves upon the proponents of a proposition. If that rule were employed in this case, those who insist upon more battleships would see their cause falling hopelessly to the ground, without a single prop upon which to rest it. We are reversing this rule and are assuming the burden, and are going to convince you, if you will go into the question carefully, that we do not need additional battleships at this time.

The advocates of naval extension have submitted no facts or substantial reason why we should have additional battleships now. The bald statement that we need four additional battleships comes from the general board, a self-constituted body within the department which assumes to tell Congress what should be done. These technical gentlemen admitted when before our committee that they view the question wholly and solely from a military standpoint. I do not wonder at this, nor do I blame them for it. From early life they have been engaged in this business, so that they are unable to take any other view of it. But let me say this to you, my friends: You can not point to a single instance in history where the military arm of the Government has not at all times been reaching out after additional power, but may God save the country when the military reaches the ascendancy and the people become subservient to that influence. [Applause.]

The general board recommended four additional battleships. Are we going to follow the general board? They either know the needs of the Navy or they do not. The committee is following the board just halfway in recommending two battleships. The committee believes just one-half of what the general board says. I say to you the architect may know the way in which the building should be constructed, but I reserve the right to say whether or not I need the building in the first place and how much I propose to spend upon it in the second place.

In assuming the burden of proof in this matter, which we should not be compelled to do, I shall in support of my position quote alternately from the highest naval authorities in the Navy Department as well as the highest authority on naval matters in this House, the present chairman of the committee on Naval Affairs. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I do not approach the discussion of this question as a partisan or as a member of any political party, but I approach its consideration as an American citizen and as one who claims the proud distinction of that title.

Appreciating the importance of the subject and fully realizing the gravity of the situation, I believe that not only should the American people sustain the Government in its entirety and submit to the necessary tax burden, but they should also be ready at all times to respond to a call to arms when the Nation is in peril, in order to preserve intact and unsullied every principle and right which were vouchsafed to us by our fathers for the benefit and enjoyment of our children and our children's children.

During the consideration of the naval appropriation bill on March 31, 1910, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] so completely and so forcefully expressed his views, and I find them so thoroughly in accord with and so clearly expressive of my position, that I desire now to quote, as follows:

> I come as a friend of the Navy. I come cherishing for the history and the traditions of the Navy the most exalted respect. I would write upon every battleship "My battleship," and proclaim a personal interest in every effort and in every interest that affects the American Navy. I believe that at the water's edge politics should cease and patriotism be supreme. And yet, with this feeling with which I come, I do not claim to be, if I may use the word, a "navomaniac." I believe that there are other interests of the Government. I believe that there are other duties of the Government to perform. I believe that there are other functions resting upon Congress which are as important, which are as essential, some of which are as much needed and present to the consideration of Congress as urgent an appeal and as strong a demand as every consideration which may be presented in behalf of the Navy. And while I would accord to the Navy every consideration which a just and proper and reasonable regard for the interests of the people upon the broadest and most exalted plane would require, yet I would not have it displace and drive away these other important interests. The public welfare demands that these other important matters should receive attention and consideration at the hands of this Congress.

The gentleman from Tennessee was then ranking minority member on the committee of which he is now chairman. The bill at that time authorized the construction of two battleships, but he was urging Congress to authorize one.

I would not for one moment insinuate or presume to question the sincerity or the motives which prompt Members of this House in providing appropriations for naval extensions, yet at the same time I can not refrain now, as I pointed out in my former speech on the naval appropriation bill in 1913, that the metropolitan press of the country, when we reach the consideration of the naval bill, begins a systematic campaign for naval extensions, and as soon as the bill is passed they cease their efforts and you hear nothing further about the impending peril which is about to befall our country until the next appropriation bill is reached. In this connection I again desire to quote from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], and remember now this is what the present chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs said on March 31, 1910:

> Another thought to which I wish to call the attention of Members is the fact that every year as we approach the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with the regularity and the unerring certainty of the dogwood blossom, there is started a newspaper propaganda of impending peril and conflict and disaster with Japan or some other power.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HENSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will ask the gentleman if this year we have not an impending peril that is well timed for the consideration of this naval appropriation bill?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that something like a month ago I was at the Navy Department having a talk with the Secretary of the Navy, and on that occasion I told him that beyond any sort of question, in my judgment, our Navy people would do that which would bring on trouble between this country and Mexico. I told him that I was as certain of that as I was of anything that had not already happened; that if it were possible they would precipitate trouble between this country and Mexico. He dissented. He did not believe that I was right. I am reminded now of the fact that I made that prediction. You gentlemen, since my friend has asked the question, can judge for yourselves, from the reports coming from the reporters who are on board the battleships that are now speeding toward Tampico, as to the anxiety of the naval officers to get into Mexico. They are anxious for it, my friends, beyond any sort of question. The whole trouble has been brought upon us by circumstances which no doubt every Member in this presence regrets sincerely.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will ask the gentleman further if it is not a fact that a naval officer's action practically has got us into this position?

Mr. HENSLEY. That goes without saying. Of course it was the duty of Congress to stand by the Chief Executive of this Nation in a crisis of this kind. But I say, and I have no doubt every Member who has studied the question seriously must believe, that a great Nation like ours is in a tremendously embarrassing position when it is placed in the attitude of allowing a naval officer to issue an ultimatum which practically means a declaration of war should the other interested nation refuse to comply with the terms of the same.

Mr. BURNETT and MR. GREENE of Vermont rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. I believe the gentleman was reading from the speech of the present chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs as to the existence of a newspaper propaganda a few years ago, when he was in the minority?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes. He was the ranking member of the Democratic minority on the committee at that time, and his voice was then heard here in this House thundering against these increases.

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman further if that same newspaper propaganda is not still in existence?

Mr. HENSLEY. There is no question about it. I have a magazine here in my hand, the Scientific American, with articles written by men in the Navy Department, arguing for naval extension. They are even going so far as to send out over the country from time to time rear admirals retired, who are disseminating the spirit of militarism. We have something more than 150 rear admirals on the retired list with only 25 on the active list. Over $1,000,000 annually is paid out to rear admirals retired, all busy at all times in society and campaigning for increases.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. HENSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Did I understand by the gentleman's reply a few moments ago that a naval officer in any sense exceeded his authority or went beyond what was expected of him under the regulations of the Navy?

Mr. HENSLEY. You will have to consult the regulations.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is the reason I asked the question. The gentleman's statement ought not to be made unless he has consulted the regulations.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARTON. I will ask the gentleman if that is not the very matter that is pending before Congress to-day—the question of the President supporting the admiral's declaration and we supporting the President?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes. There is no question about that, and we all regret that the admiral assumed that authority.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to impress upon the Members of the House, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] did on that occasion, the fact that this agitation shifts according to the convenience of the situation. A few years ago it was Germany that was the great bugaboo. Then, when it served the purpose, it was shifted to Japan.

Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? We are told by experts in the Navy Department that we need four battleships each year. Why do we need additional battleships? These same experts confessed to our committee that neither Great Britain, Germany, nor any of the other European countries would think of sending as much as 50 per cent of her naval strength against us in time of war.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is that the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]?

Mr. HENSLEY. No; that is not the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee. I wish to say here and now that in the consideration of this bill we should take into account the many battleships we now have at Tampico and those that are hurrying down there, and we should also take into consideration the battleships that we have now that are not manned and officered and prepared to go down there. If all this array of battleships will not impress that half-blood Indian who holds sway down in Mexico, then I presume the contention of the gentlemen on the other side that we should authorize on paper the building of two new battleships will absolutely repress and control him.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not a fact that the Mexican Government has only two battleships, and each one is a muzzle-loader?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes; that is my understanding, and the Dolphin could blow their fleet out of water.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think we could take some of our old, obsolete ships, so called, like the Tallahassee, and destroy the Huerta forces?

Mr. HENSLEY. There is no question about that, my friends. There is no use getting excited over a proposition like that.

Mr. Chairman, if we waive the fact that over 20,000,000 of the best citizens of our land are German descendants, and that the great body of our people are of English descent; if we do not consider the intermingling of the blood of all the great nations of the world which has produced such a splendid type of manhood; if we do not even consider the commercial relations which exist between all these countries, but proceed upon the theory that the actions of these great nations, and our Nation included, are not based upon civilization, fair and honest conduct between countries; in other words, that there is no civilization, that it is only a thin veneer and means nothing; if we should not consider any of these facts, but take into consideration only the physical facts, as a military nation would, even then I ask you why should we continue increasing our Navy by building dreadnaughts and larger dreadnaughts all the time? If we need additional battleships, certainly provision should be made for their proper equipment, so that they can be put into active service in case of war.

And I want to say right here and now that some gentlemen have said that we need additional battleships—that we need four additional battleships—but that the condition of the Treasury is such that more than two battleships should not be authorized now. I say to you that I repudiate a statement of that character. If this great Nation of ours, whose citizens love the Stars and Stripes and who are ready to go to war and suffer even death to prevent it from being dragged in the mire—if this great Nation needs 10 battleships, we are not so poor but that we could authorize them. [Applause.] But if we do not need one battleship, then why authorize it? That is the proposition that confronts you.

What is the situation with reference to England and Germany? Their navies, we all know, are intended especially for use in the North Sea and not intended for use against us. The efficiency of the Navy is ascertained by making a detailed comparison; and, having done this, I say to you that we have the second greatest navy afloat to-day, I care not what the Navy League and the jingo press of the country may say to the contrary. If you will consider the facts, I will convince you of the correctness of that statement. What was the opinion of the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs on March 31, 1910? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] stated his opinion as follows:

> I stand here to say that, taking the American Navy to-day in the tonnage, in the character of its ships, in the size and the character of the guns on those ships, it is to-day the second naval power in the world, and is only excelled by the English Navy.

The Navy people seemed to be horrified and much perturbed when a few weeks ago we declared, after having carefully gone into all the facts, that we are the second naval power in the world. We knew whereof we spoke. Why should the Navy people be so horrified and distressed over the fact that our Navy is superior to the navy of Germany and of all the other nations of the world, excepting Great Britain? I can see nothing in that to distress or to disturb them. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has very properly and vigorously protested against the spirit which would seek to undermine and destroy international confidence for the purpose of furthering the military spirit of our Government, as follows:

> I desire here and now in behalf of the American people, as far as I am able to speak for them and in my own behalf as a Member of Congress, to enter a solemn and a vigorous protest against the spirit that would seek to undermine and destroy international confidence in order to further a naval hysteria in this country. I believe that friendship and cordiality and good-fellowship between nations should be emphasized and should be encouraged, and that the American Congress should set the stamp of its disapproval and repudiation upon the theory or the policy that it is built upon, fostered, and encouraged by a propaganda that has for its basis the undermining of international confidence, good will, and good-fellowship.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to know whether or not the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee has changed his opinion since he uttered those words.

Mr. HENSLEY. He evidently has. If you were present and heard his speech on Saturday afternoon, you must have heard him severely criticize the minority members who signed the minority report for the position we take now upon the proposition.

Mr. BURNETT. In the same connection I should like to ask whether there have been such changes in conditions as would warrant that sudden change in the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HENSLEY. I will say to the gentleman that I will get to that, but I might say that in his comparison of our Navy with the Navy of Germany he carried us to 1917, at which time he says our Navy will be superior to the Navy of Germany. Continuing, the gentleman from Tennessee said:

> Standing before you this afternoon and measuring my words with the facts before me, and, in my judgment, I can substantiate them and make them good, I say there is no necessity, either from the standpoint of our domestic conditions or our international relations, for the construction each year of two battleships. The construction of one battleship will not only maintain the efficiency and the adequacy of the American Navy, but it will add a proper increase to the development of the American Navy.
>
> Now, that raises a clear-cut and well-defined issue; and I am prepared to meet that issue. In meeting it, permit me to say that I do not seek to appeal to your fear, to excite passion, or to arouse misgivings, but I desire to submit to your impartial judgment, to your intelligent reason, to your highest and best conceptions of patriotism, as it may effect our relations and conditions here and abroad.

These were the sentiments so aptly, so well expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] in 1910, when the Democrats were in the minority in this House and when he was the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Mr. Chairman, I say here and now, that if the gentleman remains in Congress 50 years longer he will never be able to excel the speech to which I refer for clearness of thought, for good sense, and for statesmanship. Proud must have been his people who help to bear the tax burden, those people from old Tennessee, the land of "Hickory" Jackson, when they read this speech, which in its every line breathed patriotism and in its entirety evidenced a deep sense of responsibility consonant with the heart throbs of the plain people of our whole country. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Tennessee then quotes from the 1905 annual report of the Secretary of the Navy, who says that from indications at that time our Navy would seem sufficient to provide for any contingencies within the limit of probabilities. He then quotes from President Roosevelt's annual messages to Congress in 1905 and 1906 in support of his contention. And then commenting upon these documents, he says:

> I have called your attention, if you please, to these declarations of the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States, and I ask you to remember and to note that in his message to Congress President Roosevelt says: "I do not ask that the number of units shall be increased." What was the number of units at that time? It was 27 battleships. What is it to-day? It is 33.

I ask what is the number of units to-day? It is 39; and the 6 which we have added since that time are more powerful than any other vessel afloat, as for instance, the last two battleships authorized—the Pennsylvania and No. 39—each have a displacement of 31,400 tons, and the largest vessel in the American Navy at the time of the authorization of these two ships was the Wyoming, which had a displacement of 26,000 tons, so that each of these two vessels exceeds the largest vessel of its class in tonnage 5,400. At the time of the authorization of these vessels the largest battleship in the Germany Navy had a tonnage of 24,305, or 6,694 tons less than each of the two ships to which I refer. When we authorized the last two ships, the largest battleship in the English Navy had a tonnage of 23,000, or 8,400 tons less than the Pennsylvania and No. 39. So you can see how we are leading the way, setting the pace, for the great nations of the world in armament, the taxpayers bearing the burden and the great supply companies and the personnel of the Navy Department reaping the rewards. I know this is not popular with certain people, but I am appealing to the hearts and to the minds of the patriots of this country and not to those who have a special interest in the subject. I can imagine that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], when he delivered this great speech to which I am calling attention, must have been assailed by the jingo press and by these special interests then as I am assailed now.

Now, again reverting to the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], Mr. Hinshaw, of Nebraska, propounded the following question:

> Are there not certain accessories belonging to the battleship that help constitute the unit?
>
> Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we need colliers, and I stand for colliers. I am insisting to-day that the American Navy is top-heavy in battleships and deficient in colliers and in docks and accessories that go with the battleships.

I now submit, as I have heretofore contended, that we should make provision for these necessary auxiliaries. To simply increase the number of battleships to whatever extent imaginable, without making provision for necessary auxiliaries, would not promote the efficiency of the Navy. We could provide the necessary auxiliaries for our present ships for the cost of one additional battleship, which will be ineffective without them. If it is efficiency that we want, then submarines and other craft such as airships should be provided. In this connection, I desire to read a brief statement made by Admiral Dewey in 1900, after having witnessed an exhibition down on the Potomac, as to the value of submarines, as follows:

> Gentlemen, I saw the operation of the boat down off Mount Vernon the other day. Several members of this committee were there. I think we were all very much impressed with its performance. My aid, Lieut. Caldwell, was on board. He could tell, if necessary, what was done from the inside. The boat did everything that the owners proposed to do. I said then, and I have said since, that if they had had two of those things in Manila I never could have held it with the squadron I had. The moral effect—to my mind it is infinitely superior to torpedoes or anything of the kind. With these craft moving under the water it would wear people out. With two of these in Galveston all the navies of the world could not blockade that place.

Now, let me say right here that if you will observe the newspaper reports from London, you will find that Great Britain is leaning toward submarines. They are making vast extensions in that direction, and are devoting a great deal more of their time and funds toward providing air craft. In this country it seems that the proposition uppermost in the minds of the Navy Department is more battleships and better personnel legislation.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLINE. I heard the gentleman from Missouri use the term "efficient navy." I do not understand just what he means by that. Will he kindly make a short explanation?

Mr. HENSLEY. Efficiency of the Navy, as I see it, is gotten at by measuring our Navy with the other navies of the world. And when you measure them and compare them as carefully as did my friend from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] on last Saturday, you can see beyond question that we have the second greatest navy afloat.

Mr. CLINE. I want to inquire whether the amount of coast line that we have is taken into consideration in constructing a navy, or whether we lay the basis of an efficient navy on the ground of what the other nations have?

Mr. HENSLEY. Our isolation is an asset instead of a liability. The technical men of the Navy Department stated to our committee that Great Britain would not think of sending as much as 50 per cent of her navy against us in time of war. Neither would any other European country. And then, further, with reference to the coast line, I would much prefer to use as my authority the present chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, as he expressed himself in his speech on this point in 1910, which I shall quote later on in my remarks.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No doubt the gentleman is familiar with the document, and I want to ask him if anywhere in his speech he refers to the statement made by Winston Churchill, First Lord of the British Admiralty, in introducing the naval budget in Parliament, as to the tendency to decrease the size of the great ships of that navy and to increase the number of submarines?

Mr. HENSLEY. I will say to my friend from Texas that I am very sorry, indeed, that I could not incorporate into my speech, though I read it very carefully, the speech made by the Hon. Winston Churchill to which he refers.

Col. Goethals, who appeared before our committee during the last Congress, had this to say as to the value of submarines:

> No hostile fleet would come within 500 miles of Panama if it were protected by submarines and torpedoes.

The other day I heard the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee criticize us for using that language in our report because it does not appear in the record. Let me say to you—perhaps you do not know—that all the hearings had before our committee are sent to the Navy Department, where they are gone over, and a great many things said before our committee are never found in the report submitted to this Congress.

I have an instance in my report where an admiral before our committee was giving his testimony, and I undertook to develop the fact that preparedness very often causes nations, as well as individuals, to be aggressive and to stir up strife and conflict. This admiral, defending it from a national standpoint, said that he could see no objection to the individual carrying weapons. A member of the committee, when I made mention of the fact, said he had told the admiral that that should come out of the hearings.

But, my friends, I have as proof that it is in the hearings the fact that I submitted the identical question to the Secretary of the Navy and asked him if he subscribed to that sort of sentiment as expressed by the Admiral, and he said he did not subscribe to it. What I am getting at is the mental attitude of these gentlemen who are put into the school at Annapolis when mere boys, who are trained along certain lines; they can not see anything except from a military standpoint; they can not see as we do when we are looking at things with the welfare of the whole country in mind.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. What does the gentleman think about the perverted judgment of a man who will imagine that it would not lead to disturbance and strife for people in civil life to go armed with a pistol, dirk knives, and brass knuckles?

Mr. HENSLEY. Oh, that question answers itself.

Mr. CALLAWAY. If his judgment is so bad about ordinary people in civil life, does the gentleman think we ought to take his judgment as to how we should equip ourselves as a Nation?

Mr. HENSLEY. There is no sort of question about it—we ought not. The fact is we need these men who have been carefully trained by the Government at a tremendous expense; we need them in the service, not out of the service, as a great many have succeeded in getting out. We need them not to tell us what we should do about increasing our equipment, but we need them as naval officers and not as statesmen.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that we are following the advice of these fellows who, as shown by the statement the gentleman has made, have this perverted judgment in building up the Navy and equipping the Army?

Mr. HENSLEY. They are doing that all the time.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is it not a fact that we are about to declare war, following the punctilio of one of these men so easily agitated?

Mr. CONRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CONRY. Does not the gentleman think that when Members are legislating for the Nation, with respect to the welfare of the Navy, the advice and suggestion of these men should be carefully considered and weighed? Does not the gentleman think that the advice of these men who have served in actual service in the Navy should be carefully considered and weighed with a view to the adoption of a policy in respect to the government of the Navy?

Mr. HENSLEY. There is no question but that we should avail ourselves of every bit of information they possess. There is no sort of question when they suggest things to this Congress that appeal to the committee—in other words, when they make out a case showing the need of an additional battleship for the defense of this country we should respond. But I say to you when the board known as the General Board sets itself up in the department and assumes to direct and control the action of Congress we should decline to follow them.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARTON. Before the gentleman goes away from the subject—he has stated that the testimony of these different people is taken before his committee?

Mr. HENSLEY. That is true.

Mr. BARTON. These hearings are sent to the different men that you have had before you for revision before it is printed?

Mr. HENSLEY. That is also true.

Mr. BARTON. To cut out subject matter as well as to revise?

Mr. HENSLEY. They revise it and go over it all.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will allow me, they revise the hearings, but they cut out nothing that is substantial unless by the consent of the committee. If it is a matter that ought not, by consideration of public policy, to be published, it is cut out.

Mr. BARTON. Who is the judge of that?

Mr. PADGETT. They revise their remarks as we would revise ours here.

Mr. BARTON. Is the matter to be cut out submitted to the entire committee?

Mr. HENSLEY. No; it is not. Now I can not yield any further.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I would like to ask the gentleman one question in that connection. Do I understand that when you have before you witnesses with a view of securing from them information that will be of service to you and the House——

Mr. WITHERSPOON. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to correct him. It is a rule not to permit any Member of Congress to call one of these officers a witness.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why not? What do they call them?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I do not know; but it is very improper.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Does the gentleman say that when you have one of these men before you investigating matters that you are interested in you can not call him a witness?

Mr. HENSLEY. If you had seen the performance that we had one morning in our committee room you would have thought that it was a criminal offense to so refer to them.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, I will refer to him as a witness and proceed with my question. Does the gentleman say that when he has one of these men before him as a witness, seeking to elicit information that would be of service to the committee and to us in this House, and after you have secured the information that he is permitted to eliminate such portions as he may choose to cut out and thus rob this House of the very information we are seeking to secure?

Mr. HENSLEY. They absolutely censor and go over it.

Mr. POU. But that can only be done with the consent of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If that is the rule we are in a bad situation.

Mr. HENSLEY. I have never been called upon to assent to any such thing. Now, I can not yield any more; I must hurry on.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I think it is hardly fair for the gentleman to hurry on when such a matter of moment is under consideration. I think it is due to the America Congress to know about this. Let us know how they characterize themselves—although I differ with the gentleman's views on the naval bill.

Mr. HENSLEY. I do not want the gentleman to take up too much of my time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I would like to extend the time for the gentleman for half an hour.

Mr. HENSLEY. But the gentleman can not do that.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. While I am on my feet I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENSLEY. Very well.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Is it not a fact that minorities have a license in criticizing, and when minorities become majorities they have a new sense of responsibility, and would not that account for the attitude of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to-day?

Mr. HENSLEY. Let me say in reply to that question that I can conceive that perhaps one might change his judgment as respects a policy governing a situation, but I can not conceive how a man can face about and change a statement of absolute fact. [Applause.] That is the proposition.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENSLEY. I will not have time to yield.

Mr. FARR. It will be only a sentence or two.

Mr. HENSLEY. Very well.

Mr. FARR. Should not the gentleman now, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in fairness to his colleagues upon that committee and to the chairman of that committee, permit the chairman to make an explanation?

Mr. HENSLEY. Oh, no; he can make that in his own time.

Now, as I was saying, the cost of submarines is infinitesimal as compared with the cost of building and the upkeep of a battleship, while the fighting value is admitted by everyone. A modern battleship costs approximately $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, and costs about $1,000,000 annually for its upkeep. It, of course, requires tons of armor plate to build a battleship. It is stated that we are now paying the Armor Plate Trust from $160 to $180 per ton more than it would cost the Government to manufacture armor plate, allowing for all overhead charges, interest on the investment, and so forth. This explains why the Navy League and the beneficiary interests, who pretend to possess such a patriotic interest in our national defense, are asking for additional battleships instead of submarines and other necessary auxiliaries, which would really promote the efficiency of the Navy.

Now, I desire to quote further from the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]:

> So that in every phase of the question that looks to the fighting efficiency, in the guns and in the ships and in the size of the ships—because we have two of 26,000 tons and the largest that Japan is building is 21,000 tons—so that in any aspect of the case in which you may consider it, you can divide the American fleet by two, and either half of it is larger and more efficient in fighting capacity than the Japanese Navy.
>
> Now, my countrymen, I appeal to your patriotism and your sense of fairness. Is it right, is it patriotic, that we should use such a nightmare to stimulate the growth of naval hysteria in this country in order to foster the propaganda that I believe is set afoot and maintained by the beneficiary interests in this country that profit out of the spending of thirty or forty million dollars a year out of the naval program of this country?

We are therefore submitting, as we have in the past, to this tremendous gouge by the great corporations. The gentleman from Tennessee, in 1910, complained severely about this propaganda that has for its purpose the agitation and promotion of a naval hysteria, as he denominated it; and well might we complain to-day because of this situation. It is even more severe to-day than it was in 1910, as the stakes they are playing for are very much larger. A few months ago the country witnessed a spectacle wherein the people of Massachusetts, through the public utilities commission, determined to investigate a great railroad property, and a great newspaper in that vicinity thundered against any investigation. On the first movement the investigators discovered that two gentlemen, legislative reporters on two large papers, were in the secret employ of the railroad. Further investigation disclosed the fact that one of the professors of law in Harvard University was in the secret employ of this railroad company at $10,000 per year, engaged in molding public opinion favorable to the railroad. I do not say that the space in the metropolitan press that is being used all the time for extensions and increased armaments is paid for, as I do not know. I would like to know, I will say; but I do join with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] in declaring that when the Congress of the United States responds to such pressure by increases it brings about a very dangerous condition and is calculated to stir up our people and to be thoroughly misunderstood by the other nations of the world.

Now, quoting again from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]——

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is he a witness? [Laguhter.]

Mr. HENSLEY. No; he was the ranking minority member of the committee at the time he made this speech.

Mr. PADGETT said:

As I said, a few years ago Germany was worked for all it was worth. I remember a very amusing incident that happened. I will not call names, but one of the admirals came before our committee and asked that the doors might be closed, that the stenographers might be excluded, and that he might speak to the committee in executive session. This was some years ago, and he proceeded with bated breath to tell us of the nearness of impending disaster and conflict with Germany, and he dilated upon that question at length, and I sat and listened to it for quite a while, and after he had proceeded for some time, I could not escape the temptation, and when I had the opportunity I said to him, "Admiral, do you think this will take place and they will catch us before we can get home"? He smiled.

And, then, the gentleman from Tennessee calls attention to the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] had on the floor of the House a few days prior thereto predicted that five years from that time Germany's navy would be two and one-half times as strong as the Navy of the United States, and after making comparison in the number and caliber of the guns, he says:

I desire to call your attention to this fact: I said that Germany had 30 first-class battleships, and when I am giving those numbers with reference to all of these nations, I speak of those built and building. Of these 30 first-class battleships, 10 of them have not a single big gun upon them. Ten of them are carrying 9-inch guns, so that in the analysis of fighting power Germany has 20 first-class battleships carrying big guns and the United States has 33.

As to the program of the Germans, the gentleman from Tennessee said:

The Reichstag a few years ago fixed by law a definite program authorizing the construction of 16 battleships between 1907 and 1917. Up to the present time, of those 16 she has 8 building that constitute a part of her 30, so that in 1917, if she builds the other 8, she will have 38 battleships, and if we only build 1 a year from now until 1917, added to the 33 we have got, we will have 40 first-class battleships as against her 38.

I need not call your attention to the newspaper reports from Tokyo, which show clearly what has taken place over there in the last few months with reference to authorizing the increase the naval department of that country is insisting upon. The people have rebelled and are refusing the increases demanded by the navy people.

In Germany they even prosecuted and convicted numbers of persons who were engaged in stirring up strife between different countries in order to bring about increases. and I say here and now that these same influences are present here all of the time pressing home to this Congress the need for extension in armament, stirring up this country in order to bring about increases. There is no sort of question about that.

As previously stated, the appropriation bill under discussion in 1910 provided for two battleships instead of one, and in the next session of Congress there were authorized two battleships instead of one, and Germany has not varied from the program which she laid down, and, continuing, with reference to Germany, the gentleman from Tennessee said:

I say to you if you will analyze the situation you will see that in order to bring herself up to where she is she has loaded down her people and her country with debt, and yet there are some in this country who would imitate the policy and pursue the same conduct and load down the people of the United States with a military debt and a military burden. I stand here and protest against it.

Where is the gentleman from Tennessee who was then ranking minority member on the Committee on Naval Affairs? His voice to-day ringing out in this historic Hall, appealing with the same clearness, with the same earnestness, with the same patriotism as he did on the 31st of March, 1910, would be worth many votes, and his people would again rejoice not only in his consistency, but over his persistent efforts to serve the whole people.

Protesting further against the naval policy, the gentleman from Tennessee quotes from Secretary of Agriculture Wilson as follows:

A 40-acre farm of irrigated land comfortably supports a family of five. It costs $55,000 to make a 12-inch gun. The money that goes to pay for this gun would reclaim 1,571 acres of land, providing homes for 196 people. When all the guns on all the battleships are shot at one time, the Government blows in noise and smoke $150,000. This would reclaim more than 4,000 acres of land, giving homes to more than 500 farmers and their families. The money consumed in powder is lost to all future. The farmer who buys the reclaimed land must pay the Government back in 10 years, so it does not cost the Government anything to build up the country by helping the farmer. We should make more homes and not so many fighting machines.

At this juncture the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] interrupted the gentleman from Tennessee, as follows:

Mr. HOBSON. Does the gentleman think that these homes for American citizens and the internal industries could be propertly developed without some reasonable guaranty of continuing protection and peace?

Mr. PADGETT. I think we have got abundant guaranty of protection. I am not scared.

Mr. TALBOTT. It depends altogether on how far they are from the coast.

Mr. PADGETT. I am not scared. They are not coming in your day or mine, or in the day of your children and my children, within gunshot of this coast.

Mr. BURNETT. May I not suggest that the gentleman has probably got scared since that time.

Mr. HENSLEY. I wish you could all know the conditions just as they exist, and I wish the American people knew the conditions, and if the Navy Department were wise they would understand full well that the true friends of this Nation and of the Navy Department are the men who stand with me, because if the American people get on to the true conditions as they are in that department they will spew it out, repudiate it, and not stand for it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I want to ask how it comes that the chairman of this committee and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] are so close together now, when they were so wide apart then?

Mr. HENSLEY. I do not know. I have some newspaper clippings here that I would like to submit, to show you the efforts of the Navy people—the functions that are pulled off here so frequently—and how some Members, not because it is Mr. So-and-so, but because he is a Member of Congress and a member of this committee, are sandwiched in between admirals and rear admirals at this continuous round of banquets. Oh, you may say that does not amount to anything. A Member told me only a few days ago that not many years ago, when he first entered this Chamber, there was stationed out in Statutory Hall a man—the representative of the railway companies—who issued passes to Members of this House, and not one word of complaint was heard from the American people upon that subject. Let me ask the Members here to-day how long would the American people stand for a condition of that kind at this time? And they will not stand for these conditions any longer when they are apprised fully of the facts involved.

In 1912 I pointed out the shortage in officers to man the ships we already have. Admiral Blue, in his annual report for the fiscal year 1913, has the following to say in that connection:

By acts governing the appointment of midshipmen to the Naval Academy and permitting a limited number of enlisted men to be commissioned each year, Congress has already provided for the number of commissioned officers of the line. This number will reach a maximum in 1923, when there will be approximately 2,700 officers on the list. A careful estimate made of the number of officers required for the fighting ships already provided for shows that the above number is not sufficient to man the fighting ships in time of war, to say nothing of the auxiliaries required.

The gentleman from Tennessee on that question said:

We have at the present time 2,824 naval officers of all grades. We have an authorized enlistment of 42,000 enlisted men. You will find in the hearings of Capt. Usher, who appeared before the committee on behalf of the Bureau of Navigation, in answer to my question, a tabulated statement showing the number of men necessary and required to man our present complement of ships on a peace basis and on a war basis. On a peace basis it requires 3,652 officers and 60,902 men, or, if you please, a shortage of 828 officers and 18,902 men. On a war basis, to fit out and man the ships we now have, it would require 3,890 officers and 72,281 men, or we are short 1,066 officers and 30,281 men for the proper manning of the ships that we now have.

Mr. BURNETT. May I ask the gentleman when was that?

Mr. HENSLEY. I am quoting from the——

Mr. BURNETT. I understand; but I saw a statement recently in the press, that purported to come from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he said that all of these deficits were being filled and that there were a whole lot of fellows on the waiting list just tumbling over each other to get in and enlist, and I want to know whether there is still a shortage of men to man the ships we have already got and sufficient officers to officer the ships. I want to know whether that is so or not.

Mr. HENSLEY. I will say to the gentleman just a few moments ago I read the statement of Admiral Blue upon that point.

Mr. BURNETT. Then that newspaper statement is not true?

Mr. HENSLEY. It is like the statement made here awhile back that we did not have enough rounds of ammunition to start a war with any country, and you remember the speech of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in which he said we had sufficient ammunition.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will say to the gentleman I saw in the Washington Post day before yesterday an account of a number of battleships left at the ports because they did not have the men to man them.

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes; in New York.

Continuing, Mr. PADGETT quotes from Admiral Pillsbury, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in his annual report in 1908, in which he said that on an average it requires six years to train a man-of-war's man, or, in other words, that it takes twice as long to train and to qualify a man to operate the ship as it does to build the battleship; and in this connection he again quotes from President Roosevelt as follows:

No fighting ship of the first class should ever be laid up save for necessary repairs and her crew should be kept constantly exercised on the high seas, so that she may stand at the highest point of perfection. To put a new and untrained crew upon the most powerful battleship and send it out to meet a formidable enemy is not only to invite, but to insure, disaster and disgrace. To improvise crews at the outbreak of a war, so far as the serious fighting craft are concerned, is absolutely hopeless. If the officers and men are not thoroughly skilled in and have not been thoroughly trained to their duties, it would be far better to keep the ships in port during hostilities than to send them against a formidable opponent, for the result could only be that they would be either sunk or captured.

Mr. HOBSON. May I ask the gentleman if he believes that the authority he has quoted in the present case, if he were present, would advocate the building of less than two ships because of the lack of complement for our naval vessels?

Mr. PADGETT. I believe that since committing himself in two annual messages, to which I have called the attention of this committee, in which he says one was sufficient, that the gentleman from Alabama has inoculated him with that mysterious influence that has gotten him to be so enthusiastically in favor of an excessive naval program that I doubt if he would stand by what he said in his calm moments.

In this connection I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] what "mysterious influence" has inoculated him?

Mr. CALLAWAY. What is it that did the inoculating?

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. HOBSON did the inoculating then; I do not know who has been doing the inoculating since. [Applause.] I would like the gentleman from Tennessee to explain what mysterious influence has been wielded upon him that has brought him over to the position he now takes upon this subject.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had the time to make the careful, detailed comparison of the ships and of the guns upon the ships as was done by my friend, Judge WITHERSPOON, of Mississippi, but I have not the time. Mr. Chairman, I hope to get great pleasure later in life out of things incident to my service in Congress. Chief among them are friendships formed while here, and among all the friendships formed here I count as one of the rarest and sweetest the friendship for and my association with one whom I regard among the ablest and most patriotic, as well as the purest in mind and soul—Judge WITHERSPOON, of Mississippi. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it is claimed that our ships become obsolete in 20 years, and that, therefore, it is necessary to have additional battleships to replace them. We submit that even if ships become antiquated in 20 years that they are not useless. They can be equipped with the most modern armament and made as effective as when first launched. On that point I again desire to quote from the present authority in this House on naval affairs, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. PADGETT:

Speaking about ships becoming obsolete, I want to call your attention to a fact that may perhaps be somewhat misapprehended. It is said that the life of a battleship is 20 years. In one sense and to a limited degree that is correct, but the hull of a ship is preserved indefinitely. Admiral Dewey said it would be as good in a hundred years, perhaps, as when it was made. It is the machinery on a ship that becomes worn out and antiquated. It is the guns on the ship that become obsolete by improvement in other guns; but when that machinery is taken out and up-to-date machinery put in, when the old guns are taken out and up-to-date guns replace them, that battleship is approximately as good and as effective as when it was first launched.

[Applause.]

In comparing the United States Navy with the German Navy the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] very properly said:

Of battleships completed and provided for, the United States has 48 ships, with a tonnage of 688,341 tons; Germany has 46 ships, with a tonnage of 664,334 tons, showing that not only in the completed ships, but in the ships built and building, in the ships that constitute the fighting power and efficiency of the two Navies, the United States is ahead.

When you consider the amount of money we have spent upon our Navy to say that our Navy is inferior to the navy of Germany is preferring a charge of more seriousness against that department than I care to make; a charge which, if true, should be explained to the American people and the reasons given, so that we all may see and understand why it is true, where the people's money has gone and no results obtained with it. I do not care to make a charge of that character. We have spent in the last 13 years $400,000,000 more than Germany, and during this time $143,000,000 more than Germany and Japan combined. In the last 10 or 12 years we have spent something over $1,000,000,000 more than Japan, and yet some people try to frighten us about the strength of Japan. One billion dollars upon the basis of 100,000,000 population in our country represents $10 for each man, woman, and child. It represents to the State of Missouri $30,000,000 to $40,000,000; it represents to each congressional district of 200,000 population $2,000,000, and that is the amount we have expended upon our Navy in excess of the amount expended by Japan in the last 10 years. In the last 15 years we have increased the expenditures in the Navy Department 400 per cent. According to these figures, if we can judge the future by the past, we will in the next 15 years be appropriating $500,000,000 to this department alone. I am advised by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that this Congress will appropriate an amount which will represent $12 to every man, woman, and child in our Nation. Think of it. Sixty dollars to every family in this country. What do you suppose would happen in this fair land of ours if we levied and collected our taxes directly and the head of each family should be called upon by a Federal tax collector on the first of the year to pay $12 for each member of his family to support the Federal Government? Think of it, my friends. Ten to twelve times as much as it costs the average citizen to support his State government, and yet he comes in contact with the State government, aside from the postal branch of the Federal Government, fifty times where he touches the Federal Government once. It costs more to run the Federal Government than it costs to run all the 48 State governments combined, with their universities, normal schools, public-school system, courts of every description and kind, courthouses, poorhouses, and every other kind of State institution, and yet we are increasing these appropriations, increasing the burden which has already become galling to the American people. In this connection I desire to quote from the very able speech of Senator ASHURST, February 9, during consideration of fortifications bill in the Senate:

Mr. ASHURST. As I was saying, Mr. President, 65 cents out of every dollar which is raised by the Federal Government is used to pay the expenses of wars of the past and wars that we think, or pretend we think, may come in the future. In addition to that, a close and searching analysis of the facts will disclose that since the foundation of the Federal Government, in 1789, since its first day's existence as a Federal Government, for every dollar this Government has paid out to promote the arts of peace, the arts of agriculture, and those things whereby nations are subsisted—for every dollar we have paid out to promote the art of construction we have paid out $700 to pay the expenses of wars of aggression and defense.

We are appropriating this year, in round numbers, $25,000,000 for agriculture. The naval appropriation bill carries this year approximately $140,000,000, which means that every time we appropriate $1 for agriculture we appropriate $5.60 for the Navy.

The gentleman from Tennessee, in the great speech to which I have referred, declared that the Army and the Navy, the whole military establishment of the Government, in the last 27 years prior to 1910, had cost the taxpayers of this country the enormous sum of over $3,000,000,000, while the sum appropriated for agriculture during the same period was ridiculously small; and in that connection he further said:

Ah, my countrymen, I come to you again and look you in the face with all the patriotism of which an American citizen is possessed, so far as I am concerned, and I appeal to your judgment, to your patriotism, and I ask you, Is it not time to call a halt in this mad hysteria of naval development and apply something toward the development of the internal affairs and the internal improvements of our country?

A noble expression well expressed. What would you say if the same gentleman now came before this House and made a speech of this character? Why, gentlemen, there would not be any doubt as to the result.

Now, let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee—and I ask it in all candor and with the kindest feeling possessing me—what has brought about the change in your position? What do you see now that makes it necessary for us to increase our armaments five or six times as rapidly as we were increasing them only a few years ago? What "mysterious influence" has inoculated you?

With reference to the amount carried in the naval appropriation bill at that time, he asked:

Can we justify it either upon reason or upon sound public policy?

Mr. HOBSON. I will ask the gentleman simply, in conclusion on that point, if, with the deterioration of our fleet, he would regard a one-battleship policy as adequate for the defense of the United States in all its oceans and with all of its world responsibilities?

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated and restated that more than one battleship was extravagant, and that one would not only maintain the efficiency of our Navy but would provide every proper and reasonable increase. Now, Mr. Chairman, another thought. It is said that a big Navy is the best guaranty of peace. That is the popular slogan of those who are proclaiming for this great Navy. I want to say, as I said at the outset, that I stand for an adequate Navy, responsive to domestic and foreign requirements. I believe that such a Navy is proper; but I want to say that an excessive Navy, built responsive to an excited sentiment, built responsive to a naval hysteria, is not a guaranty of peace, but is a hazard to the welfare of the American people.

[Applause.]

Continuing, the gentleman from Tennessee said:

I want to say, further, that an excessive Navy built under the stimulus of agitation, fostered and encouraged by the beneficiaries of such a policy, is a menace to the peace of the world. I want to call attention, if you please, to another statement which I believe is axiomatic, and that is that excessive preparations for war lead to war. That is a sequence, and a necessary sequence, to a spirit of militarism. As a nation thinks, so it acts. We become like the ideals we create. A war spirit begets war.

Gentlemen, you can take the hearings and you will find where admirals have stated that a nation will be aggressive toward another nation in proportion to her state of preparedness.

In this connection I desire to quote from the hearings before our committee, as follows:

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Do nations fight to maintain their rights without any reference to whether they are as powerful or less powerful?

Admiral VREELAND. I think the aggressor is generally the more powerful nation, because he thinks there is something to gain by warring, and the other party to the contest is forced into it.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. The aggressor, according to your idea, would go into war because he thought that he could win in the war; is that your idea?

Admiral VREELAND. He would not become the aggressor if he were sure of defeat.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. What about Spain?

Mr. HENSLEY. I will say that if the battleship Maine had not been lying in the harbor of Habana we never would have had a war with Spain and we would never have sacrificed 10,000 citizens on the altar of battle. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee goes a little further. He quotes some Scripture. Mr. HOBSON had previously quoted some Scripture, and the chairman quotes Scripture, as follows:

Be not deceived. Whatsoever a man sows that he shall reap. If you sow unto the spirit, of the spirit ye shall reap life. If you sow unto the flesh, of the flesh you shall reap corruption. If you sow righteousness, ye shall reap manhood. If you sow the seeds of war, ye will reap bloodshed and slaughter.

And, continuing, he said:

This, the twentieth century, is not the age of war. It is the age of arbitration and of judicial consideration and judicial determination of questions. I want to lay down another proposition that I believe will find a lodgment in the judgment and in the intelligence of every man who hears me, and it is this: That the construction of each new battleship in excess of proper requirements increases suspicion of our actions and tends to destroy international confidence in the sincerity of our peaceful professions. It does not consist for us to hold ourselves out to the world continually proclaiming that we are the exemplars of peace and arbitration and judicial determination of questions, and at the same time be preparing all the while the implements of war and destruction.

I would rather go out of Congress if one can not stand upon that principle, the principle announced in that one sentence. I do not care what it means to me in that regard; I am going to be fearless and do what I conceive to be right in spite of results. Now a little further I want to call attention to this.

Mr. PADGETT further said:

I want to call attention to this: Our position, separate and apart from all the other countries, relieves us from territorial entanglements and political complications. We have no international skeletons in our closets; we have no ancient enemies. We covet no nation's territory; no nation would lay violent hands on ours. I shall not enlarge upon these. Other gentlemen have referred to the magnitude of our country and the vastness of our wealth and our resources as elements of weakness and as liabilities. I state that the vastness of our country is an asset and not a liability to the American people. "No pent-up Utica contracts our powers." Our civilization and our destiny and our manhood are not bottomed on battleships and big guns. They rest on the integrity of our conduct, the righteousness of our demands, and the justice of our cause.

Mr. Chairman, I declare that for the actual and proper defense of a nation, for the maintenance and preservation of the dignity of any country, we should look at all times to the state of her intellectual development, to the state of her civilization, to her commercial relations, and more especially to the peace and contentment of the whole people, for safety and security. Show me a country possessing these qualifications and I will show you a people patriotic, I will show you a people who revere the flag, and a nation more secure from foreign attack than any nation can possibly be which has her people bowed down with tax burden on account of her tremendous armaments. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, I say that we should study this question. I am going to make this statement to you: That if this case were brought before a jury, who, with uplifted hands toward high Heaven, would take a solemn oath to return a true verdict upon all the testimony adduced, Judge WITHERSPOON, Mr. GRAY, Mr. BUCHANAN, and I, opposing a score or more other Members of this House, could get a unanimous verdict against the authorization of two battleships. Then why should not we as Members of Congress insist upon some reason upon which to base the proposed authorization? Gentlemen, do not deceive yourselves. Ultimately the burden falls upon the men who toil in the mines, in the factories, and upon the farms; and I appeal to you to study it seriously, not as politicians but as patriots; study it as the gentleman from Tennessee must have studied it before he delivered this great speech in 1910, and then register your vote in the interests of the people and of posterity. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any Member of the House has given the subject matter of the Navy and its needs more sincere, careful, and unbiased consideration than I have. When I became a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I approached the subject in the attitude of a juror who knew but little about the case and had neither formed nor expressed an opinion as to its merits. My opinions, based upon all the facts available, may be erroneous, but I have reached conclusions satisfactory to myself and beg to submit the considerations on which my judgment is based.

This bill carries with it an appropriation of $139,964,333.61. This comprises the second largest appropriation made by the Government where no returns are realized, as in case of the Post Office appropriation, which is recompensed by postal receipts. The pension appropriation carries with it a larger expenditure, but in the case of pensions the Bureau of Pensions operates as a clearing house, and money expended in the payment of pensions merely changes hands and does not represent an actual loss or waste of money. But the money appropriated and expended in the maintenance of the Navy represents an actual waste, a depletion, which can not be recompensed and is justified only by the law of emergency. It will therefore be conceded that no more money should be appropriated for this purpose than is necessary.

There is one proposition on which we are all agreed, and that is we must have a Navy, and there must be some expenditure for that purpose. The point of difference is reached when we undertake to determine the extent of the Navy and the amount of the expenditure. We are all agreed on a further proposition, that we should have an adequate Navy—a relative term which can only be defined or understood in the light of many conditions and circumstances. First, our isolation and want of direct contiguity with the naval powers which are the sources of danger or apprehension is an important factor. Second, the extent and character of foreign navies with which we would have to contend in battle in case of hostilities with foreign powers. These are the two principal factors which must be considered in the determination of what is an adequate navy. The Navy, like the Army, is an arm of the Government established and maintained for the common defense. The preamble to the Constitution declares one of the purposes of Government is "to provide for the common defense," and Congress is empowered by the Constitution to provide for the common defense, and to this end is authorized "to raise and support armies" and "to provide and maintain a navy."

Now, if anyone shall contend that the constitutional purpose in maintaining a navy is for other than the common defense, that the Constitution authorizes the maintenance of a navy for the purpose of aggressive warfare, conquest, and subjugation, right here is where we part company and find no common ground upon which to stand. I know it will be said that even in the defense of life, property, and national honor the Navy and Army must become aggressive. That fact does not militate against my contention, which only involves the means employed and the mode of defense. Of course, a navy that would be sufficient for the common defense might not be adequate for aggressive war in foreign waters, and a navy that would enable us to go prowling about the world, seeking whom we might devour, would be more than adequate for the common defense. If we may be agreed that the constitutional limitation and purposes of a navy is that of defensive warfare, then we have advanced one step in our effort to determine what is meant by the term "adequate navy."

I assume that all men, and particularly every Member of this House, favors such a naval program as will enable us to cope successfully with any naval power with which we may be forced into combat in the defense of life, property, and national honor. We may well differ as to the extent of our Navy for the purposes just indicated, and I confess that when I reach the comparative stage, and undertake to offset or counterbalance ship against ship, gun against gun, and man against man, in the light of our isolation, inaccessibility to attack, and numerous other conditions which only the mind can conjecture, and which may or may not exist at the time of actual hostilities, I become confused and frankly admit that there is no rule by which the adequacy of any navy can be determined with any precision, accuracy, or certainty, and I have reached the deliberate conclusion that the only safe course to pursue is to maintain a navy of sufficient size to deter the enemy from making war upon us, and of sufficient strength to cope successfully with any fleet that may be sent against us. Counting battleships is like counting witnesses in a lawsuit. The preponderance of evidence does not depend upon the number of witnesses that may testify in the case, but upon the weight of their testimony. So, too, with battleships and guns. One or two battleships, more or less, may, but in all probability will not, determine the issue of any war. The preponderance will not depend on the exact number of ships, the number of guns, but upon the weight of the armament and the accuracy of the aim and the effectiveness of the shot.

We commenced the building of our new Navy 30 years ago. In that time we have expended $1,937,993,292.21. We may not always have expended the money judiciously; we may have been the victims of the Armor Trust, the Steel Trust, the Powder Trust, and other pet progeny of the Republican Party; but notwithstanding this, our appropriations have been so wisely made that we have a Navy third only to England and not greatly inferior to Germany. Experts tell us that Germany has a superior navy. Maybe Germany can outcount us as to fighting craft, the number of her guns, her enlisted men, as naval computations are made, but how about the man behind the gun? No nation on earth can outcount us there. No element in warfare, no single unit of strength in a navy, can offset this factor in an engagement.

My esteemed friend, Judge WITHERSPOON, has the happy faculty of computing and comparing the relative strength of the German and American Navies in the matter of tonnage, armor, and armament, and has entirely satisfied himself that our Navy is not inferior to that of Germany either in the number of ships, the tonnage, the armor, the armament, or other elements of strength. But I am not convinced, either by his logic, his adroitness, nor his plausibility, that he can with any degree of certainty compare the strength of any two navies so dissimilarly situated and which may be equal in a general way and arrive at any kind of a result that would be at all reliable or practical in case of actual hostilities.

Experts tell us that the only practical way to determine the relative strength of two navies is by the tonnage. This is evidently on the assumption that each nation adopts the latest and most improved methods of construction; that the armor plate used by different nations is made by the same process and is of the same resistive power; that guns are of the same capacity and effectiveness, vessels of the same speed, and that the men behind the guns are of the same courage, skill, and accuracy of aim. I can not wholly agree with this theory. Tonnage is an important factor, but will not alone determine the superiority of any one navy over that of another. The German tonnage may be greater than ours, but it seems to be satisfactorily, if not conclusively, shown by the figures of the gentleman from Mississippi that the guns on the German ships are not greatly superior to ours, and I doubt whether there are any gunners on earth who are equal in marksmanship to the American gunners. I do not say this from a sense of unduly exalted pride or overwrought patriotism. Marksmanship is indigenous to our soil, is bred in the bone of the native American, whose ancestor penetrated the forest, defended against the savage, and supplied his table with wild game. [Applause.] But the strength of a navy can be measured only by the units of strength that can be brought into action. What per cent of Germany's navy do you suppose could be rendered operative against the American Navy, engaged in a defensive war in our own waters? I go further than my friend from Mississippi and contend that our Navy is superior to that of Germany in this that a greater per cent of the fighting units of our Navy can be brought into action and utilized in defensive or aggressive warfare on either coast of America with the completion of the Panama Canal than can possibly be brought into action against us by the German Navy. But assuming this to be true, does it afford any reason or argument why we should rest on our oars and let Germany and the other powers forge ahead until they become admittedly superior to us and we become relegated to the rear with obsolete ships and an antiquated Navy? Does it not rather argue that we should continue a conservative building program and keep at least in sight of the procession?

It has cost fabulous sums of money to reach our place, third only to England, among the naval powers of the world. Our people have looked on with wonder and pride, never complaining, never halting the procession. We have marched forward with steady step, prosecuting a naval program which has made the American flag honored and respected around the globe. Shall we turn laggard now? Shall we quit the pace and permit our Navy to retrograde and deteriorate in the face of a naval stimulus among the naval powers unequaled before? Or shall we continue to pursue our moderate and conservative naval program and continue to maintain an adequate and well-proportioned Navy sufficient to defend American policies, protect our citizens, and uphold the honor and dignity of the Nation?

Judge WITHERSPOON used the Oregon as a subject for his discussion. If I understood him correctly, and I have read his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he takes the position that the Oregon is about the greatest battleship on earth, and I understood him to say that the Oregon could sink any six of the German battleships. I believe he stated in effect, if not in express language, what I have just said. Some one asked him if the guns on the Oregon were equal to the guns on a modern battleship. He assumed they were, but stated the reason they did not penetrate armor plate to the same extent was that they were tested with only half the charge of powder. The fact is that the guns on the Oregon were made before the day of smokeless powder, and I understand the fact to be that if you would put in one of the guns on the Oregon one-half of the charge you would put in a gun on a modern dreadnaught you would blow it into a million pieces. And then the question was asked him if the Oregon and other ships of that class could be manned with modern guns, and he said they could. He was then asked why it was not done, and he replied that the fact it was not done proved to his mind that there was an attempt made to raid the Treasury. I understand the fact to be that to change the armament would require the entire overhauling of a ship, and then they could be equipped with a very few guns, and not a sufficient number to make them serviceable in the first line of battle.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I understand you to say now that to put modern guns of the best kind on those old ships would require an entire change in the ships?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand so.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. If that be true, I will ask you why you voted for the appropriation in this bill to replace inferior guns with better guns, and why every appropriation bill for the last three years has carried large amounts of money for that very purpose?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can only answer as to the present appropriation bill. We have these old ships, like the Oregon and the Indiana and the Massachusetts, on our hands. They are useful for some purposes, if only coast and harbor defense, and so long as they are required to be maintained, officered, and manned at large expense, I believe in keeping them as serviceable as they can be made by reasonable repairs.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. If you are right in your contention that these old vessels can not have the best guns put upon them, I will ask you if you justify the expenditure of nearly $6,000,000 between the year 1906 and the year 1911 to reconstruct those ships?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know nothing about the overhauling of those ships during these years. I was neither a Member of Congress nor a member of the committee, and I want to say further that the gentleman misconstrues, unintentionally of course, my statement when he says I took the position that you can not put good guns on those ships. If I have not said it, I was about to say when I was interrupted that you can not put guns on those ships in sufficient number. You have not the space or room for sufficient guns to make them serviceable in the first line of battle.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. You say you can not put them on in sufficient number. Each one of those ships is armed with four 13-inch guns. Do you contend you can not replace those with four 13-inch guns of the very highest modern ship?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that it is impracticable to do so, and I understand further that a ship armed with only four guns would not have any business in the front line of battle among modern dreadnaughts with their full complement and equipment of guns, such as they are manned with to-day. There is one other reason why the Oregon and ships of that class can not be said to be as serviceable, by any means, as the gentleman indicated in his argument, and that is that they are not armored as ships to-day are armored. I understand that they are armored amidships only, and that they can not stand in front of a modern dreadnaught and modern guns. I am no naval expert, and of course I rely upon others for my information, but I have not lost confidence in mankind yet to that extent where I do not accept the statements of naval experts and give them some value. I do not wholly reject them, as does my friend from Mississippi, Judge WITHERSPOON, and my friend from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY].

Mr. O'HAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'HAIR. Do you say that our Navy is third in rank?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir. I think the naval world concedes that?

Mr. O'HAIR. Which navy stands second?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Germany.

Mr. O'HAIR. You said that Germany outranks the United State in effectiveness, size, and everything that goes to count in making a navy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think, including all the units and elements of strength which go to determine the efficiency of a navy, it must be admitted that the German Navy is superior to ours.

Mr. O'HAIR. Well, you referred to Judge WITHERSPOON'S comparison of the efficiency of the guns; do you mean the size of the boats, or tonnage of the boats, taken in connection with the effectiveness of our guns? Have we better guns than Germany?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean all elements of strength that go to constitute a navy, not only the tonnage but the armor, the armament, and the man behind the gun.

Mr. O'HAIR. I want to ask you another question. What is the matter with these old ships, like the Oregon and the Indiana? Are they of any account at all?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. O'HAIR. What are they good for?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are good for coast and harbor defense, and some of the more recent ones are serviceable in what we call the second line of battle.

Mr. O'HAIR. Is that because they will not shoot so far?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is because they have old guns which are not constructed for the use of smokeless powder, and these ships, as I have already stated, have fewer guns. I will answer the gentleman further in this way. There has been the same improvement in shipbuilding and navy building as there has been in every other field of human endeavor, and there is a vast difference between the modern battleship and one of the Oregon class in armor, armament, speed, and in every element of strength and effectiveness. There is no comparison between them.

Mr. CARY. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. CARY. I wish to make a point of order. This is a very important question, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present.

Mr. MANN. Let him finish, and then we can take a recess.

Mr. CARY. I think that is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-seven gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adamson	FitzHenry	Kindel	Plumley
Aiken	Frear	Knowland, J. R.	Porter
Ainey	Gard	Konop	Post
Anderson	Gardner	Korbly	Powers
Bartholdt	Gilmore	L'Engle	Rainey
Booher	Goldfogle	Lenroot	Riordan
Brodbeck	Goodwin, Ark.	Lever	Rucker
Broussard	Graham, Pa.	Levy	Rupley
Brown, W. Va.	Green, Iowa	Lewis, Md.	Scully
Brumbaugh	Griest	Lindquist	Sells
Burke, Pa.	Gudger	McDermott	Shackleford
Campbell	Guernsey	McGuire, Okla.	Sherwood
Candler, Miss.	Hamill	McKenzie	Slayden
Carew	Hamlin	Maher	Smith, Md.
Carlin	Hardwick	Manahan	Smith, Minn.
Clancy	Hart	Martin	Sparkman
Connolly, Iowa	Hay	Merritt	Stanley
Copley	Helgesen	Miller	Stevens, N. H.
Covington	Hinds	Mondell	Stout
Crisp	Hobson	Morin	Taylor, Ala.
Crosser	Houston	Morrison	Temple
Dale	Hoxworth	Moss, W. Va.	Thacher
Davis	Hughes, W. Va.	Neeley, Kans.	Towner
Difenderfer	Hulings	Neely, W. Va.	Walsh
Dooling	Humphrey, Wash.	Norton	Watson
Doremus	Humphreys, Miss.	O'Brien	Webb
Driscoll	Jones	Oglesby	Whaley
Eagle	Kahn	Palmer	White
Fairchild	Keating	Patten, N. Y.	Wilson, Fla.
Fields	Kelley, Mich.	Patton, Pa.	Wilson, N. Y.
Finley	Key, Ohio	Peters, Mass.	Winslow
Fitzgerald	Kiess, Pa.	Platt

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the naval appropriation bill and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 306 Members had answered to their names, and he presented therewith a list of absentees.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is not probable that the Senate will conclude the consideration of the resolution relating to our status with Mexico until a late hour to-night or to-morrow. I therefore desire to ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as to-morrow is Calendar Wednesday and might interfere with the resolution if it comes back, that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] finishes his address and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] finishes his address following it—I understand he wishes to occupy a few minutes—the House stand in recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the speeches by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] the House stand in recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was seeking to get a quorum, and the committee has not decided to rise. It seems to me this is an informal way of doing business.

The SPEAKER. It is. The rule is that under circumstances like that the House goes immediately back into committee; but the Chair thought that under the circumstances existing at this time an exception ought to be made.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama about the rule. To-morrow is Calendar Wednesday. Your rule protects Calendar Wednesday. What about a recess to Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer that question.

Mr. MURDOCK. The rule says that a recess on Calendar Wednesday shall not be in order.

The SPEAKER. That is so.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we recess until Calendar Wednesday, do we not eliminate that rule?

The SPEAKER. The House can take a recess until Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. I take it that if the House meets at 10 o'clock to-morrow, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will make a motion to protect Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not desire Calendar Wednesday to be interfered with to-morrow unless it is done after it is reached.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to prevent the consideration of this resolution that is pending in the Senate. On the other hand, I do not like to lose Calendar Wednesday unless it is necessary.

Mr. MURDOCK. Calendar Wednesday could be disposed of by a two-thirds vote?

Mr. MANN. It could be.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand it could be disposed of by unanimous consent, and unless it is necessary for the consideration of this Mexican resolution, I will say to the gentleman that before 12 o'clock arrives I shall move to adjourn, so that we can reassemble on Calendar Wednesday. Of course, if it is necessary to consider the Mexican resolution, we will do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] finishes his speech, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] closes, the House take a recess until 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

Accordingly the House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] will continue.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, since I was interrupted I have been informed that just now the American Navy is off the coast of Tampico and Vera Cruz, and that our marines have landed and that the American flag now floats in triumph over the scene where recently it was so ruthlessly insulted. [Applause.] Whether it means actual war I do not know, but this I do know, that if war is prevented it will be because of the prompt action of our very effective Navy.

I deprecate the view taken by Judge WITHERSPOON and others, who look with so much disfavor and even suspicion upon the recommendations of the General Board, who favor a building program which will not only maintain but augment our Navy and keep it at least third in rank among the navies of the world. I do not believe the distinguished gentlemen who compose this board are in any degree influenced or controlled by the selfish greed of armor-plate factories and supply concerns which may profit by naval construction. I do not agree, however, with the recommendations made by the General Board. I think the naval program outlined is entirely too big and contemplates too extensive a naval establishment. I believe that the board is actuated by a sense of mistaken pride, natural, perhaps, to men bred in the profession. Environment and education are important factors in every man's life, and it is excusable, if not laudable, on the part of Navy men, whose whole lives have been spent in naval atmosphere, to entertain high conceptions and ideals of the Navy and dream of the most majestic navy afloat. With all due regard to the integrity and patriotism of these men, they are not unbiased jurors, and are not the most competent to determine the extent of our Navy nor what the annual increase should be. We may not all agree as to the motives which prompt and influence the recommendations made, but we can agree that it would be unwise to turn over the purse strings to them or blindly follow their advice. I do, however, concur in the good judgment and conservative recommendations of Secretary Daniels, which have the sanction and approval of President Wilson.

While with America's wonderful resources and productive capacity we could in a decade overreach the naval powers of the world in naval construction and possibly thereby compel other nations to discontinue their mad rush for naval supremacy, such a course from our standpoint is unnecessary and uncalled for. The wiser, the safer, and the better course is to pursue our conservative program, continue to maintain the distance of intervening seas between us and the source of possible attack, rely in a large measure upon our inaccessibility to the naval powers of the world, maintain amicable relations with the nations of the earth, avoid entangling alliances and foreign complications, produce that the world may feed at our doors, promote the arts of science and of peace, and we will find a comparatively small Navy adequate and sufficient for every purpose. By this I do not mean that I would take any backward step, that I would cease our naval activities and call a halt in the increase of our Navy, but I do mean that I would not become a party and join in the mad race for naval supremacy that seems to actuate and move the rest of the world to-day. It would, to my view and way of thinking, be suicidal to cease our building program and, single handed and alone, declare a naval holiday. This is a day of progress, improvement, advancement, and achievement in every department of art, science, business, and field of human endeavor, and this progress is as pronounced in the matter of naval construction, armor, armament, equipment, and other naval appliances as in any department of the world's activities; and if we should cease building operations and naval increase it would be but a question of months, not years, until we would become relegated to an inferior rank among naval powers and would be unable to cope on equal terms with any respectable naval power. In this day of naval bases, wireless communication, aerial navigation, and fast seagoing craft, which eliminate time and distance and bring the ports of the world into direct touch and physical communication, we must not count too much on our inaccessibility.

We hear much complaint about the growing increase in expenditures for the Navy, and comparisons are made between the appropriations of 10 and 20 years ago and the present time. We are told that the appropriations have within one or two decades doubled, trebled, and even quadrupled, and great stress is laid upon the comparison of our expenditures and that of other countries. We are told that we have expended so many million dollars annually in excess of other nations in maintenance of our Naval Establishment, and the naval expenditures of this country and those of Japan are compared with great relish and the results urged as arguments why we should terminate our naval activities. I am not disposed to question these figures, but I do question the conclusions which gentlemen seek to draw from them.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman call it terminating naval building activity if we are continually building battleships, authorizing one each year, when it takes four years to build one? If you authorize one a year and keep four on the stocks building, is that terminating naval activity?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I would not call it ceasing naval activity, but it would be quite a material letting up. Last year, I understand, only one was authorized.

Mr. HARDY. We are building four now, are we not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are four in process of construction.

Mr. HARDY. If we build two a year, we will be at work on eight continuously, will we not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Somewhere about that number.

Mr. HARDY. And if we are continually working on four a year, the gentleman calls that ceasing building activity?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I am not what you call a big-navy man. I have given serious consideration to this question. I am inclined to believe—and the whole country believes—in prosecuting a conservative program. The question I have given most serious consideration is, Will one battleship maintain our relative rank among the navies of the world or shall we be compelled to construct two? Between these two propositions I halted for some time, and finally voted with the committee in supporting the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy for two battleships.

Mr. HENSLEY. Does the gentleman say that he so voted in the committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know what the gentleman alludes to. I made a motion to substitute one battleship for two. My motion was lost, and then I voted for two, and I am now supporting two.

Mr. HENSLEY. The gentleman said a moment ago that he voted to support the policy of the Secretary of the Navy before the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did.

Mr. HENSLEY. But after his proposal was turned down.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Spanish-American War stimulated naval construction in the United States and gave an impetus to the increase of our Navy far in excess of anything which had characterized our naval program prior to that war. We must not overlook the fact that the greater part of our expenditures for naval increase have been in the construction of modern battleships, which in armor, armament, and equipment compare favorably with any ships afloat. A comparison, however, of expenditures in the United States with those of other countries is by no means fair. The cost of labor enters into every enterprise and project of man, and our Government has been as liberal, or more so, than any private concern in the matter of wages and the hours of labor, and it is not strange to say that labor and all the products of labor which go into the maintenance of navy yards and naval stations and naval construction, not excepting the pay of our entire personnel, is far greater in proportion than that of any country with whom these comparisons have been made. This point was so ably and forcibly presented by the chairman of the committee [Mr. PADGETT] in his splendid address in opening the debate last Friday that I do not feel the need of extended elaboration. Suffice it to say that the enlisted men in the American Navy are better fed, better clothed, better cared for, and better paid, 8 and 10 times to 1, with a corresponding cost, than the conscripted subjects in either the German or Japanese Navies, with which countries the minority have made their comparison; and in every department of the Navy there is a wide difference, which accounts in a large measure for our excess expenditures. But it must be remembered that only about one-fourth of our annual expenditures goes to the increase of the Navy. Three-fourths of our annual appropriation is expended for other purposes than the increase of the Navy, and includes the duplication of expenses several times in the maintenance of useless navy yards and naval stations. A comparison of the expenditures for new construction and Navy increase between the United States and other naval powers for one year will illustrate the proportion that is expended by the United States in the matter of Navy increase. For the year 1913, for new construction, England expended $78,000,000; Russia, $58,000,000; Germany, $53,000,000; France, $44,000,000; and the United States expended $35,000,000.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. REED. Has the gentleman anything in his speech that would indicate what yard he refers to on the Atlantic seaboard as useless?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I only have my individual views, which I do not presume the gentleman cares to have at this time. I will say that the Secretary of the Navy promised the Committee on Naval Affairs that he would investigate this question, the duplication of charges resulting from too many navy yards, and make a report to the next session of Congress, and he may at that time recommend that useless navy yards be discontinued. This comparison for the year 1913 fairly illustrates the difference in expenditures between this and other naval powers, and shows very forcibly what a small proportion of our appropriations go for new construction and what a large proportion is expended for other purposes, including the upkeep of useless establishments.

It is true that our appropriations have multiplied in recent years, but so have our resources and our responsibilities. We are from time to time giving the Monroe doctrine a broader and more comprehensive interpretation. Foreign countries, which look with longing eyes to the colonization and commercial exploitation of American shores, are becoming restive, impatient, and even petulant over what appears to them to be a strained construction of a doctrine inimical to their political and commerical interests. While the Monroe doctrine has become fixed and vital as a foreign policy, and will be adhered to and enforced under any and all conditions, it is one source of irritation which may some time be resented by some nation which feels itself aggrieved by exclusion from American shores and the colonization of American territory, if we shall be found unprepared to defend our position. I am no alarmist; I do not predict hostilities with any nation across the seas; I do not fear either the probability or the result of foreign war. The dream of the distinguished Senator from my State who saw in his delirium phantom ships conveying myriads of yellow men to the Pacific coast, the blockading of our ports, the seizing of mountain passes, and our futile efforts to dislodge the invader, has no terrors for me.

If we preserve domestic tranquillity, no invader or foreign foe will in a thousand years maintain a hostile army over night on American soil. Foreign fleets may sink our Navy and destroy our commerce on the high seas, blockade our ports, and bombard our coast cities, but no foreign enemy will be so desperate or foolhardy as to attempt to either land or to sustain an army on the domain of Uncle Sam. This is not the source of our fears. Our danger lies, if danger there be, in the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine in Mexico, Central and South America, gratuitous responsibilities in the Philippines, the maintenance of the open door to China, and the extension of our Pacific trade and commerce.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman have any knowledge of the attitude of the South American countries toward the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the information that they do not take kindly to it, and do not accept our protection with good grace.

Mr. FESS. Is there any danger to the United States in that situation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think so; I think the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine is the greatest source of danger to our Nation; it bodes trouble always.

Mr. FESS. Is it a sufficient reason in the gentleman's mind for us to surrender it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not surrender the Monroe doctrine. I am in favor of maintaining it, and maintaining a navy sufficient to enforce it.

The preservation and enforcement of these rights lies in the efficiency and readiness of our Navy. So long as we maintain a navy of sufficient size, state of preparedness, and efficiency to stand as a warning to the nations of the earth, and as a protection against hostile fleets invading our waters and approaching our shores we need have no fear of foreign war. A navy just big enough to make us saucy, and yet not big enough to deter the enemy and stay the hand of the foreign jingo, would be a menace, and invite rather than avert war. Just how big a navy will answer this purpose I do not know; but this I do know, that we do not require as great a navy as if we were in close touch and physical contact with foreign powers, with no expanse of sea or ocean intervening. If we will but recognize that the Philippines have attained their majority, and give them their time, stand them up before the world clothed in the habiliments of free government, and thereafter stay at home and mind our own business, so far as the conquest and acquisition of foreign territory is concerned, it will not be a difficult or burdensome undertaking to maintain a navy adequate not only to deter the enemy and avert war, but to successfully defend against any attack that may be made upon us.

We have such a navy now. There is not a navy in the wide world to-day that can spare from her own waters and send to our shores a fleet able to cope with us. I trust the art of diplomacy can be relied upon in the future as in the past to play one nation against another and insure complications abroad that will deny to any nation the possibility of sparing enough of her ships to give us a breakfast appetizer. This point is well illustrated in the statement made by Admiral Vreeland in the committee hearings, where he said that no European nation could spare 50 per cent of her fleet and send them here to attack us. If the opinion of Admiral Vreeland is not at fault, and the art of diplomacy shall not fail us, we to-day stand invulnerable against the world. We have a magnificent navy. No man can review our assembled fleet, with its massive armament, its splendid equipment, and its magnificent personnel, without a sense of pride, an upheaval of emotion, a buoyancy of hope, and an inspiration of patriotism that can only animate the heart of a true American. [Applause.]

In the defense of American policies, the protection of American citizens, and the upholding of the honor and dignity of our Nation, with the inspiration and hope that attends a righteous cause, the American Navy stands to-day the superior of any navy on the face of the earth. Shall we maintain it at its present high standard and relative state of efficiency, or shall we, by a system of parsimony and false economy, humiliate our pride and sacrifice our prestige? For my part, I prefer to be in a position that will command respect in every port and compel princes, powers, and potentates—yea, dictators—to salute the flag. [Applause.]

I have given much thought and attention as a member of the committee to prevailing conditions in our Naval Establishment, and I find much that needs reform. We are maintaining on the Atlantic coast 7 navy yards and, including naval stations, coaling and training stations, 14 separate and district establishments. The expenditure for the maintenance and upkeep of all these establishments is enormous, and can be materially reduced by abandoning several useless yards on the Atlantic coast which have been established and operated for political purposes. Gentlemen who oppose this bill can find abundant food for thought in the matter of the maintenance and operation of these useless stations, and can more wisely and to better advantage employ their talent in an effort to limit the number and the unnecessary expenditure of public moneys in this direction than by attacking the increase of the Navy and its maintenance to a point of efficiency and adequacy. It would be a waste of time to indulge an argument here and wholly superfluous to state that a duplication of naval establishments multiplies overhead charges and necessitates a duplication of machinery, apparatus, equipment, dry docks, and cranes, which could be easily avoided if these various yards were consolidated. A majority of the yards on the Atlantic coast ought to be abandoned and the rest developed to the highest capacity and state of efficiency. The temporary cost of such improvement could be easily repaid by the sale of those abandoned and more than recompensed by the increased efficiency and saving that would result from the utilization of the plants at their full capacity at all seasons of the year.

I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact: That in case of threatened hostilities the nation contemplating war with the United States, in estimating costs and speculating as to the outcome, will not count our navy yards and our naval stations, but will, before throwing down the gantlet and declaring war, count the number and strength of our battleships and auxiliary craft with which they would have to contend in battle. Surplus and useless naval stations and navy yards are no guarantor or insurer of peace, but efficient battleships and trained seamen are. In case of actual conflict it is not the naval stations upon which we can rely for victory, but it is the superdreadnaught and auxiliary craft, which grapple on the main with the enemy in a life-and-death struggle for victory or defeat. Navy yards are established, naval stations maintained, and coaling stations operated, not because they are of any use in battle, but because they are necessary as a means by which we can provide the instruments of attack and defense in case of hostilities. Armor plants, gun factories, and powder mills are not maintained because they within themselves afford any defense, but because they afford the means which will render our ships upon the sea effective in battle. Dry docks and cranes and other apparatus and equipment are of no consequence in themselves, except that they enable us to construct, repair, and equip the fleet of battleships, cruisers, torpedo boats, destroyers, and submarines, colliers, and other attendant and auxiliary craft, which compose the fighting strength of our Navy.

Navy yards are only the incidents, the means to the end. The fighting ship, the instrument that must engage the enemy, is the principal thing for which the whole naval expenditure is made and the Naval Establishment maintained, and this—the increase of the Navy—strange to say, is the object of attack from those who oppose this bill. I am surprised that men informed and patriotic at heart will attack that part of this bill which provides for so conservative and moderate an increase of the Navy which calls for an expenditure of $36,456,734 for battleships and auxiliary craft, and shut their eyes to expenditure in excess of $103,000,000 proposed by this bill, in large part for the maintenance, upkeep, and operation of numerous useless navy yards and naval stations, which can not be justified from any economical standpoint.

The only answer that I have heard advanced in favor of so many stations is that in case of hostilities these stations would be accessible and afford ready means and opportunity for quick repairs to disabled ships. Has it occurred to those who advance this argument that it means that many more places which would in time of war have to be fortified and defended; that it would necessitate the division and scattering of our coast-defense vessels in order to prevent the enemy from occupying and availing themselves of these very facilities, whereas if our stations and navy yards were concentrated, say, to not exceed three on the Atlantic coast, our whole resources and every means of defense could be concentrated and strengthened manyfold?

And when I realize how helpless we have been in times of peace as well as of war in the hands of the Armor-plate Trust and the Powder Trust and the gun factories, with which we have been compelled to deal for want of our own facilities, I am surprised that gentlemen on the floor who find so much time to attack the essential features of our Naval Establishment, overlook the high-handed robbery, the shameful exploitation of our resources by these concerns, which not only practice their extortion in time of emergency, during the Spanish-American War, but pursue their merciless greed and advantage in time of peace. If gentlemen are in good faith, if sincere in their apparent zeal for the betterment of our Navy and the protection of our revenues, if not actuated by motives of political preferment or party advantage, why make the very substance, the ultimate aim of our Navy, the object of their attack? Why not employ their talents and their great energy in the direction of the reforms which I have indicated?

I can hardly believe that the gentlemen who oppose the provision of this bill authorizing two battleships are altogether sincere in their contention that we ought to authorize none. It is difficult for me to persuade myself to believe that sensible, patriotic men want to stop short and stagnate our whole naval institution while the rest of the world goes forward in leaps and bounds. It is a mistake to say that America sets the gait in naval construction and that other nations are merely engaged in a struggle to keep pace with us. Other nations may profit by American enterprise, skill, and ingenuity, may utilize our experience, and imitate our example in naval construction, but not because we do these things, not because they feel impelled by any sense of insecurity occasioned by our progress and development in these lines, but because they are eager to appropriate and avail themselves of every advantage in the wild scramble and mad rivalry between European nations in the matter of navy increase. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I repeat in conclusion that we should have a Navy sufficient to deter others from making war upon us, and sufficient to successfully cope with the enemy and defend against any hostile attack. Our Navy has attained too high a state of efficiency and has cost too much money to justify us in letting it deteriorate or become relatively less efficient. Naval men tell us that battleships and other fighting craft become antiquated and are useful only for coast and harbor defense after 20 years. This being true, and I assume it is, our existing Navy will deteriorate at the rate of 5 per cent a year, and at a much greater rate except for annual repairs, and each year become less efficient until at the expiration of 20 years, unsupported by the new type of fleet, it will cease to be effective for any practical purpose. The only wise course to pursue is to offset the deterioration by the construction from year to year of new battleships of the dreadnaught type and the usual complement of auxiliary craft, that we may not stand still, that we may not lag behind in the procession, and that we may maintain our relative rank among the naval powers and the relative efficiency of our Navy. By this means only can we maintain an adequate Navy and reap the full benefit of our large expenditures heretofore made, and avail ourselves of the full effect and efficiency of our present adequate Navy, the efficiency and adequacy of which will continue and be maintained only by the adoption and adherence to a progressive building program.

The recommendation made by the Secretary of the Navy has the sanction and approval of the President. The naval program outlined is a conservative one. To conform to it will maintain our rank among the naval powers; to stop short will speedily relegate us to the rear. Advance or retreat—which shall be the policy pursued by Congress?

Within recent months the pride of every American has been humiliated, his resentment aroused, and his patriotism stirred by the indignities and insults heaped upon us by the de facto government of Mexico. However much we deprecate war and hope for peace, let us maintain a Navy that will render the dictum of Congress and the ultimatum of the President the supreme law of the Western Hemisphere. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH].

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, willing as I am to concede the good intentions and honesty of purpose of the President in connection with the Mexican situation and the many opportunities he has for knowing the same much better than I do, yet I frankly state that from the beginning of his administration I have felt and thought that he ought to recognize Huerta.

I believe if this had been done we would be relieved of our present difficulties in Mexico. When the embargo was raised it was of great aid and comfort to Carranza and Villa. From a moral or any other standpoint, what better are they than Huerta?

I want to bring to your attention an able, clear, and convincing statement upon this subject by one who for many years has been a close friend of the President, and who is credited with doing as much, if not more, than any one person in making Mr. Wilson governor of New Jersey and President. In addition, he is one of the ablest of thinkers and writers. Such being the case, what he has to say is of added significance and weight. I refer to the article in the April number of the North American Review, by George Harvey:

"WE APPEAL TO THE PRESIDENT TO SAVE MEXICO; TO SAVE HIS PARTY; TO SAVE HIMSELF.

"[By the Editor.]

"'The large thing to do is the only thing we can afford to do—a voluntary withdrawal from a position everywhere questioned and misunderstood. We ought to reverse our action without raising the question whether we were right or wrong, and so once more deserve our reputation for generosity and the redemption of every obligation without quibble or hesitation.'

"Those words, Mr. President, spoken by you as the head of the Nation to the Congress of the United States upon the first day of your second year in office were more than worthy, more than courageous; they were noble. They breathed the sense of national honor; they were shot through with patriotic feeling; they evinced the power of personal greatness to acknowledge and repair a fault. And they will serve the purpose for which they were uttered—never fear!

"Pending the accomplishment of that great triumph which is to be yours, may we not ask you to perform the more pressing duty of turning your eyes upon the stricken people of bleeding Mexico, and consider—consider in candor and with the deep solicitude which we know you feel—whether you may not apply those words to them. Is not our attitude toward them also 'everywhere questioned and misunderstood'? We think and presently shall try to convince your mind that it is. If we shall succeed in that endeavor, is not 'the large thing to do the only thing we can afford to do' a reversal of our action 'without raising the question whether we were right or wrong, and so once more deserve our reputation for generosity and the redemption of every obligation without quibble or hesitation'?

"Four months have elapsed since we raised the questions—

"What legal or moral right has a President of the United States to say who shall or shall not be President of Mexico? and

"Did not President Wilson embed himself in a practically inextricable position when he demanded the retirement of Huerta?

and the only answers forthcoming are to be found in a consensus of the world's opinion and in a hopelessly tangled diplomatic situation surcharged with peril. But no! That is not strictly accurate. You answered the first question, Mr. President, when you recognized the Huerta of Peru, and you answered the second when you urged so impressively upon the Congress, as a primary reason for repudiating a pledge of your own party platform, the necessity of mollifying foreign powers.

"The partisan attacks to which you are now being increasingly subjected constitute, we suspect, the least of your anxieties. Senators and Representatives who demand 'action' which would lead to armed intervention may reflect the opinion of their own restricted constituencies, but they wholly misinterpret the wish of the country. Never was a war so unpopular, so hateful in the eyes of the people, as would be a war now with distracted Mexico. Whether avoidance thus far is fairly attributable to your sagacity and forbearance, or to mere good fortune, or to both, matters not at all; the country is grateful, sir, deeply grateful, to you for sparing them the calamity which, unhappily, so many are coming to regard as inevitable.

"Nor does one whit of justice lie in the strident criticisms of your course as 'inert' and 'lifeless.' You have done all that lay within your power to do in furtherance of the success of your program. Never before to our knowledge, while their countries were at peace and resolved to continue in amicable relationship, has one President declared war upon another President. Yet that is what you did without a quiver of hesitation. And you did not stop there. You certainly struck deep and hard in those days early in November when the following declaration was served upon Huerta, as coming from the President of the United States:

"Primero: Que el primero magistrado considera que el reciente golpe de estado fue una contravencion directa de la seguridades que el, Huerta, había dado á su gobierno.

"Segundo: Que á menos de que el, Huerta, voluntariamente y obrando como por propio inspiracion se retire luego del poder y abandone todo idea de controlar la organizacion del gobierno y el curso de los negocios, el primer magistrado se verá en la necessidad de entrevenir en los terminos de un ultimatum que al ser rechazada le obligará á proponer al congreso de su pais que se tomen medidas practicas de la mas seria naturaleza.

"Tercero: Que el gobierno del primero magistrado desea sinceramente de evitar las medidas extremas tanto por el bien de Mexico como por el bien de la paz de America, y esta por el mismo dispuesto á hacer algo rasonable á fin de no herir los sentimientos de dignidad de Huerta y para darle la proteccion personal que necessitaré.

"Cuarto: Que por tal motivo, propone el siguiente curso que se escoja alguno persona ó pequeño groupo de personas que en lo menos possible hayan estado ligados con los recientos perturbaciones politicos (por ejemplo, personas de edad maduro retirados de la politica que goza de le confianza general del publico), al fin de que constituye un gobierno constitucional y hagan los arreglos necessarios para elecciones generales en las que se elijan un nuevo congreso y un nuevo jefe del ejecutivo, para que asi el queda establicido sobre una base constitucional.

"Quinto: Que hace absolutamente necessario una acción semejante al fin de que merezca la aprobacion del primero magistrado, pues su gobierno esta firme y irevocablemente resuelto, por un medio ú otro, á cortar de rais toda ayuda el, Huerta, crea encontrar en el estranjero, si es que insiste en su proposito de permanecer en el poder, siendo ademas un hecho que solamente por algunas dias mas podra el, Huerta, tener la libertad de escojer el camino que desea seguir. Su retiro y una libertad absoluto de accion de reabilitar el poder constitucional será el unico que el primero magistrado acepte. Este gobierno no podra urgir con demasiado vehemencia el que haga su eleccion, ya que es inevitable, con todo sabiduria ye en plena consideracion de las teribles consequencias que traeran su vacilacion ó rehuso.

"Sexto: Que el, proposito de substituir á Blanquet ó cualquiero otro representante del gobierno de Huerta y de su golpe de estado conduceria á una irritacion mayor de parte del primero magistrado y la inevitable ruptura definitiva, asi como tambien daría el mismo resultado el pretender llevar al poder á los supuestos escogidos en las ultimas elecciones, sea para presidente ó miembro del congreso.

"Or, as retranslated:

"First. That the first magistrate is of the opinion that the recent coup d'état was a direct violation of the assurances which Huerta gave his Government.

"Second. That unless Huerta, voluntarily and on his own initiative, retires at once from power and abandons every idea of controlling the organization of the government and the conduct of negotiations, the first magistrate will find himself under the necessity of intervening by means of an ultimatum, and if this is not accepted he will be obliged to propose to the Congress of his country the adoption of practical measures of a most serious nature.

"Third. That the Government of the first magistrate sincerely desires to avoid extreme measures, as much for the sake of Mexico as for the sake of peace in America, and is of itself disposed to act reasonably in order not to wound Huerta's sense of dignity, and at the same time to give Huerta the personal protection he might need.

"Fourth. That with this purpose in view it proposes the following: That there be selected some person or small group of persons which to the least possible extent shall have been connected with the recent political disturbances—for example, men of mature age who have retired from the field of politics and who enjoy the confidence of the people—who shall form a constitutional government and make whatever arrangements may be necessary for a general election. In these election there shall be selected a new congress and a new chief executive, to the end that the government be established on a constitutional basis.

"Fifth. That such a course is absolutely necessary to the end that he—the chief executive—merit the approval of the first magistrate, for the reason that the government of the chief magistrate has firmly and irrevocably decided, by one method or another, to eliminate completely all assistance that Huerta believes he may receive from foreign sources if he persists in his proposal to remain in power, it being a further fact that only for a few days longer will he—Huerta—be free to select the course he chooses to follow. His withdrawal and consequent absolute liberty of action in the reestablishment of constitutional power alone will be accepted by the chief magistrate. This Government can not urge with too much insistence, now that the outcome is inevitable, that Huerta reach his decision wisely and at the same time give full consideration to the terrible consequences which will follow his vacillation or refusal.

"Sixth. That the proposal to substitute Blanquet or any other representative of the government of Huerta or anyone connected with his coup d'état will conduce to further irritation on the part of the first magistrate and inevitable and definite rupture. The same result will follow any effort to place in power the candidates chosen at the last election, be it for president or members of congress.

"And when the old Indian coolly ignored this demand you did not shrink from inviting the criticism of your own countrymen by lifting the embargo upon guns which, like those in the Philippines, may at no distant day be turned upon our own soldiers. No, Mr. President, it is not from lack of energy or resolution that your attempt to apply political eugenics to Mexico in a schoolmasterful way has failed. It is from the fatal defect within the policy itself—the futile threat which, as we declared in November, 'instead of eliminating Huerta from power, riveted him in his place, there to remain, in all probability until he shall be expelled by force of arms.' This judgment, based upon certain logic, has now found general acceptance, and it is to that most important fact, Mr. President, that we would direct your attention.

"No writer has made it so clear as you that 'the only force' that can control a President in shaping his course with respect to large matters of public policy is 'the force of public opinion.' But public opinion is no less subject to change than individual judgment, and, if it is to be accepted as a true guide, it must be examined and interpreted at frequent intervals. When, in November, we urged upon you manful reversal of a policy which we then believed to be and which has since proved to have been untenable, we did not assume to reflect the common view. We could not but feel that much of the seeming approval was no more than natural and praiseworthy restraint; but there were few evidences to that effect, and you were quite justified in assuming that your attitude had won general commendation. The newspaper press in particular was notably insistent and steadfast in support of your determination to drive Huerta from his position of authority. But is it so now? Let us mark the indications afforded by our leading journals. We quote:

"From the Washington Post:

"The people of the United States have, during the past 10 months, given to the President and his Secretary of State a most remarkable proof of their confidence in their sincerity of purpose. The more remarkable inasmuch as many of them have failed to see that the rights of our citizens were as fully protected as desired, or that 'the watching and waiting' policy was either beneficial to Mexico, to the United States, or fair to the citizens or subjects of foreign nations.

"That it has not brought peace or happiness to the people of Mexico must be admitted.

"That it has been productive of immense losses to American, British, German, French, and Spanish investors is apparent to all.

"That it has advanced the peace interests of the world is exceedingly doubtful.

"That it was and is producing friction in our foreign relations would seem to be as clear as diplomatic secrecy will permit the public to judge.

"From the New Orleans Picayune:

"Strong as has been President Wilson's policy with respect to matters of domestic concern, it must be admitted with regret that his attitude toward Mexico has been extremely weak and vacillating. Americans have been told to leave the country, as their Government either could not or would not protect them. Foreigners, both American and Europeans, have been maltreated and their property seized or pillaged, yet nothing has been done other than the presentation of feeble protests.

"As a result of this course foreign governments have lost all confidence in our ability to control the Mexican situation, and as they have no reason to expect anything from the revolutionists, they are quietly financing Huerta in the belief that he is the only man in Mexico capable of maintaining at least a show of order.

"Whether or not it be a fact that foreign governments are 'quietly financing' Huerta, there can be no question that he is well supplied with means.

"From the San Francisco Argonaut:

"That President Wilson still hopes for the establishment of peace and order in Mexico in the spirit of her parchment constitution is simply evidence of the failure of a man of academic mind to distinguish between fact and theory. So long as Mr. Wilson shall maintain his present views and his present course of action Mexico must suffer under that combination of cruelties and terrors so forcibly described in a letter from the City of Mexico printed in last week's Argonaut. One well-intentioned but unfortunately misinformed and curiously stubborn man is practically holding Mexico prostrate, to be scorched and flayed. It is truly a terrible responsibility.

"These are strong words from a journal accustomed to weigh its utterances; we dislike to print them, but how else can public opinion be revealed?

"From the Boston Transcript:

"We have tried 'watchful waiting,' only to abandon it in favor of the even more mischievous policy of pouring oil on the flames of civil war. Some of the bullets that pierced Benton's body may have been supplied to Villa from this country in consequence of the raising of the embargo on arms. To 'watchful waiting' bloody blundering has succeeded.

"From the Boston Herald:

"One way out of this calamitous course remains—with honor. There is still a chance to avert war. It is to recognize Huerta, and further than that to strengthen his hand. We should renew the embargo on arms to the bandits.

"It may be that this step would come too late; that our policy has so weakened Huerta that he can no longer restore order. But he deserves the chance. He has clearly established his claim as the de facto ruler of Mexico. And until we have given him the opportunity we are not justified in making the sacrifice that armed intervention would entail.

"From the Manchester Union:

"Conditions south of the Rio Grande are certainly no better, and probably much worse to-day than they were at the beginning of the Wilson administration—and Heaven knows they were bad enough then. The policy of 'watchful waiting' has been, to put it brutally, a policy of idleness.

"Huerta, in an interview, declares that the present situation in Mexico is due to the United States, and, in a sense, he is right.

"From the Burlington Free Press:

"Having failed to recognize the established Government in the capital of Mexico and thus waived the right to hold Huerta's administration responsible for the protection of Americans in all Mexican territory, the Wilson administration seems to have made the further mistake of recognizing in effect and aiding a rebel leader, in the person of Villa, even more bloodthirsty than Huerta was in connection with the overthrow of Madero.

"Here, too, the precedents are strongly against the Wilson administration, and in view of Mr. Wilson's recent utterances in defense or palliation of Villa, who has killed Americans as well as British, it is not strange that Dr. Moore declined to allow his prestige as an international authority to suffer further from the smashing of precedents.

"If President Wilson should undertake to follow the intervention of which he has already been guilty and which was in reality an act of war, by sending a military force into Mexican territory and thus instituting armed intervention, he will find it difficult to vindicate his course in the eyes of the nations as well as of the American people.

"From the Brooklyn Eagle:

"The policy of the administration, so far as it is generally understood, contemplates the scheme of Mexico working out her own destiny as a result of her present internal warfare, so that constitutional government will be restored, at least so far as it ever existed in the republic south of the Rio Grande. Those who adhere to this policy, however, say frankly they see no hope whatever that Mexico, through the agency of Villa, Carranza, Zapata, or any of the other revolutionary and bandit leaders, can restore constitutional government. Many of them admit that Huerta might have done so with the aid of the United States, or at least might have succeeded in pacifying Mexico, even if he only brought about a restoration of the practical despotism that existed under Porfirio Diaz.

"From the St. Johnsbury Caledonian, the leading weekly newspaper of Vermont:

"Defeated in his whole program to date, President Wilson should adopt another and recognize the Huerta government in Mexico the same as he recognized the new revolutionary government in Peru. Such a change in tactics may prevent a war with Mexico, and President Wilson, if he desires to save the country from one of its most serious blunders, will make it. The question now is not, is Huerta big enough to control Mexico, but is President Wilson big enough to acknowledge his mistake and save his country from the terrible misfortune it is now facing?

"From the New York Mail:

"While the Wilson Government has recognized the brutal dictatorship of Yuan Shi-Kai in the pretended Chinese Republic, it has refused to recognize the Huerta Government in Mexico, accepted by all other important nations, and has plainly encouraged the murderous and looting forces of the rebels, led by notorious and savage bandits, in a hopeless and shameful chaos of destruction that means the complete devastation of a rich and neighboring country or American armed intervention.

"The dignity and authority of the United States as the protagonist of the American republics has been openly insulted and mocked in Mexico by the grafters of the south and the cutthroats of the north, and our national prestige in Latin America has been seriously damaged.

"Meantime the Wilson administration has made the United States responsible for Mexican conditions that must go from bad to worse until, apparently, the horrors and losses must end in bloody intervention.

"From the Sioux City Journal:

"The weak point of the administration has been found in its foreign policy. The Mexican situation has proved an unworkable puzzle. There is a prevailing impression that President Wilson and Secretary Bryan have not made the most of their opportunities diplomatically.

"The great European powers, following precedent which represents demonstrated expediency, promptly recognized the Huerta Government as the de facto Government. Mr. Bryan at once took the rôle of a diplomatic white blackbird when he refused to recognize that Government or even to deal in regular form with it. The worst of his demand that Gen. Huerta abdicate was not its grotesqueness. It virtually invited all disaffected rebel and bandit elements in the north and elsewhere to assert themselves. It crippled the central Government by injuring its credit, which was otherwise sufficient to raise ample funds in Europe. When bandit forces, thus encouraged and energized, had coalesced, the removal of the embargo furnished them with arms, ammunition, and supplies of all kinds, for which they were able to raise money by wholesale confiscation and robbery.

"But right at this point startling outrages force upon the world's attention the fact that the rebel government, both in its personnel and in its methods of gaining and of using power, is incomparably worse than the worst that has been imputed to the central Government, of which Gen. Huerta is still de facto head after a year of rule. Disavowing intervention, we have thus in effect intervened against the actually existent central Government. Thereby we have paralyzed its power and responsibility in northern Mexico, and yet no tolerable governmental power or responsibility has been substituted for it there with which we ourselves and other civilized nations can deal. At the same time neither we ourselves step in nor permit other nations to step in to vindicate foreign rights. Mr. Bryan simply started wrong and has been going wrong.

"From the Louisville Courier-Journal:

"War is what we shall get, sooner or later, for the folly of clinging to the Monroe doctrine and assuming police supervision of Latin America in behalf of Christendom. President Wilson may succeed in avoiding it this time, but war we shall have sooner or later, in Mexico or elsewhere in Latin America, and the harvest of blood and tears will have been earned by the sowing of folly.

"Surely Don Quixote, astride of Rozinante, with the barber's bowl on his head for a helmet, was never a more ridiculous figure than this country cuts at the present juncture.

"From the Hartford Courant:

"By the simple recognition of the Huerta government, which, under all the rules and practices of intelligent diplomacy, is fully entitled to recognition, there would be no need of sending any American Army into Mexico. President Wilson is not so stupid as not to see this. President Wilson is a man of acute and most alert intelligence, and he is not above learning by his own blunders, as is shown by his promptness in giving official recognition to the revolutionary governments just set up in Peru and Haiti.

"But he is morally obstinate—obstinate by nature and obstinate by years of autocratic rule in the schoolroom; and in addition to this he fears that his prestige, which has been carefully built up all through the country by his unlimited newspaper admirers, would be impaired by the frank confession that his much-vaunted Mexican policy has been one continuous blunder from the outset.

"The election of a new Congress in November of this year, a piece of work in which he has already taken the directing hand, also makes it especially inopportune, from his party point of view, to admit a change of mind in regard to our relations with Mexico; yet it is only by such a change of mind and of policy, to which his own nature, habits, and special political interests of the moment are strongly opposed, that he can really and truly do the thing that is required in order to keep our troops out of Mexico.

"This is why we say that President Wilson needs to begin all over again in the treatment of Mexico. It has taken him a long time to find out the kind of men with whom he has been sympathizing and upon whom he has been depending for the political regeneration of that country. He violated all the rules and usages governing such matters by undertaking to say for Mexico what kind of a government Mexico should have, and his undertaking has broken down. He can send American troops into Mexico or he can give due recognition to the existing Huerta government. There are the alternatives. But President Wilson can not truly be said to be 'trying' to avert armed intervention in Mexico unless he first tries the old and reputable and peaceful method of recognizing and giving the moral support of the United States to the de facto government of that country.

"From the Chicago Inter-Ocean:

"There is no disguising the fact that Mr. Wilson's 'watchful waiting' policy has proved a dismal failure. Good intentions remain the only excuse for this refusal to accept accomplished facts when Madero fell.

"Mr. Moore wanted Huerta accepted as de facto ruler of Mexico not because he approved Huerta, but as the strongest man in sight, and on the ground that the manner in which Mexicans see fit to change their rulers is none of our business. It is perhaps still possible to take that course. It is plain that Carranza and Villa will not do. Huerta may be a poor stick from idealistic viewpoints, but what more capable Mexican is in sight?

"Mr. Wilson has demanded and has been given a free hand. His dealings with Mexico have brought the country to the point where it may be compelled, against its will, to armed intervention, that it may preserve its self-respect. Has President Wilson the moral courage to change his policy and bring the Nation out of the difficult and dangerous position into which he has led it?

"From the Detroit Free Press:

"The Nation stands on the brink of an imbroglio with the whole or a part of Mexico. It is not the doing of the American people. It is the result of a wholly unfeasible policy, persisted in against all logic—a policy which breaks every canon of tried diplomacy and common sense. The Nation has not desired war; it does not want it now. If forced into a conflict it will make the fight because it finds itself in a position where no other course is compatible with honor and self-respect and duty to citizens abroad.

"Columns of like editorial comment are before our eyes—all of the same tenor. The excerpts presented have been selected from representative journals of various sections, of whose intelligence, patriotism, and sincerity there can be no question. Even the New York World, whose faithfulness you surely must appreciate, finds room upon its editorial page for the following communication:

"Notwithstanding our strong official opposition to Huerta, that has prevented him from obtaining funds or augmenting his army, and your repeated assertions that he was on his last legs, he seems to have proved that he is the strongest leader in Mexico to-day, and that, had he been granted recognition in April last, his country would have been peaceful long since, at least would have been free from the armed bands of such assassins and robbers as Villa, Castillo, Zapata, and others. I do not mention Carranza, as he is apparently only a figurehead, with sufficient sense to keep him from coming in contact with Villa.

"It seems to me plain that those who have advocated recognition for Huerta are not clamorous for war, as you intimate, but firmly believe that such a step would have prevented any cause for intervention by having brought peace to Mexico and saved thousands of lives and millions of dollars' worth of property. Although our official treatment of Huerta has been such as to perfectly warrant him in ignoring completely any demands or requests made to him, he has invariably given courteous attention to all representatives from our unofficial chargé d'affaires and acted promptly on all our complaints.

"Kindly note this: If we do not recognize Huerta and assist him in bringing his country out of anarchy—though very late for such a step and now attended with much greater difficulties than at an earlier date—intervention must surely take place, for even should we willingly continue our 'watchful waiting' and look on quietly at a terrible state of affairs, other nations will not agree to hold aloof for a much longer period.

"And the New York Times, speaking from its sense of fairness, says of Huerta that he 'has treated foreign residents, including Americans, well; has submitted to peculiar and unprecedented relations with the United States with remarkable self-control; has treated the American President's personal representative, Mr. Lind, with courtesy, while he has listened with good grace to suggestions made by Mr. O'Shaughnessy, our chargé at the capital, and frequently acted upon them.' And adds frankly:

"There is no doubt that he has gained a large measure of respect from many persons in this country who profess to believe that he is the only man in sight who can be looked to to restore order.

"So, too, the New York Evening Post is driven grudgingly to the conclusion that your Mexican policy, 'as a whole, and up to the present, can not be called a success in the sense that it has achieved the result desired'; and the conservative Philadelphia Public Ledger says with striking emphasis:

"We ought to reverse our action. We ought to redeem our obligation without hesitation or quibble, an obligation which we have assumed, and rightly assumed, but in the fulfillment of which we have been strangely lacking. It makes no difference whether the administration was right or wrong when its Mexican policy was adopted. The large thing to do is the only thing we can afford to do, and largeness in the circumstances consists in the capacity to adopt a program de novo, to sweep out of the way regard for petty consistency, to acknowledge whatever errors there may have been in former policy, to break the shackles of accepted precedent and move untrammeled toward a complete solution of the problem.

"That is the largeness which the Nation expects of the President. Public opinion senses the imminent peril of intervention and the necessity for action. It does not presume to dictate what policy the administration should adopt, although the recommendatory attitude of the press is almost unanimously in favor of a Pan American concert, but it does insist that the pilot put his hands to the wheel and give positive direction to a forward movement, that the fine skill which has guided the process of the repeal of the canal-tolls exemption be exercised now in extricating the Nation from the lamentable shallowness of purpose into which it has been permitted to drift.

"And what says the man in the street? We, better, perhaps, than those who convey only pleasing information, could tell you, but let him speak for himself through the newspapers. We find as a result of the most cursory examination:

"In letters to the New York Herald:

"When an individual * * * realizes he has made a mistake he will, if he is big, acknowledge and correct it. Should not a nation be as big as an individual?

"President Wilson has withheld recognition from the only government that exists in Mexico, believing the forces in opposition would be able to accomplish Huerta's early overthrow, and that in these forces lay Mexico's best hope for peace.

"Events have proved the policy of the United States to be wrong. Huerta, whose government is just as constitutional as that of Peru, which the President hastened to recognize, has lasted for more than a year. The 'constitutionalist' cause has produced nothing better than a Villa.

"Hasn't the time come for the President to realize and rectify his mistake, not in the interest of Huerta, but as a right due to the American people? * * *

"Recognition of the Huerta government seems to me the only possible way for us to escape the armed intervention that neither the President nor anybody else in this country wants.

* * * * * * *

"There is very much to commend in President Wilson's address to Congress yesterday. Who can question the wisdom of this:

"'The large thing to do is the only thing we can afford to do, a voluntary withdrawal from a position everywhere questioned.'

"President Wilson may well ponder these words from his own mouth. They apply directly and forcefully to his own Mexican policy.

"If he is able to do the 'large thing' and voluntarily withdraws from his mistaken attitude, which is responsible for all our troubles, this Nation may yet see a 'way out' from its unfortunate Mexican entanglements. I fear there is no such 'way out' unless the President does follow the excellent advice he yesterday gave to Congress.

"In a letter to the New York Tribune:

"There seem to be but two alternatives—immediate intervention or immediate recognition of Huerta, far preferably the latter. The world has always recognized that moral courage is far greater than physical courage. Is President Wilson great enough and strong enough to say to Huerta: 'I have opposed you from the beginning because I thought I was right and that you were wrong. I now realize that I have been wrong, and I am going to give you a chance to prove that you are right and can bring peace to Mexico. I am therefore willing to recognize your government with the understanding that you will bring peace to your country within the next three months. If you fail to accomplish this, I shall recommend immediate intervention to Congress. The present conditions can not continue; they are intolerable.' If Woodrow Wilson is a big enough man to do this, our people and the nations of the world will acclaim him the greatest man in the world. I can see no alternative.

"In a letter to the Philadelphia Public Ledger:

"The writer during his vacation in the past summer met some intelligent American people who had large property interests in Mexico, and for his own enlightenment inquired as to their opinion relative to conditions in that country.

"They advised him that they thought the only salvation of Mexico could come from within, and that Huerta, backed up by his government, was the only person qualified to thoroughly police the place.

"That the only bar to such action on the part of Huerta was the opposition stand taken by the Government of the United States.

"That this Government stood alone among the nations in its Mexican policy.

"That recognition by this country of the Federal government of Mexico would enable the latter to borrow, probably in London, possibly in the United States, all the funds required to maintain order, and to call a halt to the acts of outrageous brutality now being committed, and to the great loss of property belonging to American and British subjects residing in Mexico.

"In letters to the New York Sun:

"If our President, who has proved himself in some ways in this first year of his incumbency a very great President, could persuade himself that the whole world is not in the wrong—that he is like the Irishman who informed his drill sergeant, who told him that he was out of step, not at all, that he was in step and that all the rest of the company were out of step; if he could be made to believe that he and his friends may possibly be wrong, since the whole world of Europe and America thinks concerning the advisability of Huerta's recognition exactly the reverse of his thinking; if he would come out frankly and answer that upon misinformation furnished him at the outset concerning Gen. Huerta's resources and personality he declined to recognize him, but that now he perceives his mistake and will recognize him—then the President at one bound would become the most popular man in the United States, war would be averted, and the whole problem solved.

"It is the belief of those who have studied the situation and are on the ground that Huerta, if as well backed by this country as the so-called Constitutionalists have been, would make good in short order and restore peace and prosperity to distracted Mexico.

* * * * * * *

"It has been said that most of Mexico is against Huerta. This is erroneous. If this were true, when the rebels attack a town they should be able to take it without much trouble, since the inhabitants of same would attack the Federals from the rear. Whenever the rebels, or bandits, assault a town the inhabitants join in the defense of the town. This is the most eloquent proof that Mexico as a country is in favor of President Huerta.

"From the foregoing it can be seen that Huerta, far from being a traitor, is a great patriot, that he is the de facto and the de jure President of Mexico, and that the Mexican people at large support him heartily. The foreign powers, with the exception of this country and maybe one or two of minor importance, recognizing these incontrovertible facts, have recognized Huerta as the de facto and the de jure provisional President of Mexico. The United States ought to follow suit and vindicate herself by acknowledging her misconception of the facts. This acknowledgment would have no savor of humiliation, for 'to err is human,' and to make amends is manly and holy. This nonrecognition policy on the part of the Wilson administration on the reported ground that it would be immoral to grant recognition is tantamount to saying that all the other Governments that have recognized Huerta are immoral, which would be a reflection on all the civilized world.

"In view of the above, it is to be hoped that the American Government will come to the conclusion which I stated above, namely, that it has misconceived the facts, and that it must vindicate itself by recognizing the Huerta administration forthwith.

"The extraordinary characteristic of this galaxy of editorial and individual pronouncements is its unanimity. There may have appeared somewhere a word of approval of 'watchful waiting' since the embargo was lifted, but if so, despite our painstaking reading of many American newspapers, we have not seen it—not one word. Taking into further consideration the rapidly increasing disposition of Senators and Representatives, who are most sensitive to the views of their constituents upon the eve of an election, what are we to infer? In your truly eloquent message to the Congress, delivered in person on August 27, you attributed the Mexican Government's rejection of your proposals to your belief that 'the authorities had been grossly misinformed and misled upon two points.' First, they did not 'realize the spirit' of 'friendship' and 'determination' of the American people; and, secondly, 'they did not believe that the present administration spoke, through Mr. Lind, for the people of the United States.' Consequently you added in perfectly good faith, and we believe with full warrant as of the moment, 'so long as the misunderstanding continues we can only await the time of their awakening to a realization of the actual facts.' You concluded, if our memory is not at fault, with the comforting assurance that 'the steady pressure of moral force will before many days (after August 27, 1913) break the barriers of pride and prejudice down and we shall triumph as Mexico's friends sooner than we could triumph as her enemies,' etc.

"But that is beside the point. The question is, Does the present administration now speak, through Mr. Lind or anybody else, for the people of the United States? In view of the indications of the certain trend, if not, indeed, the definite formulation of public opinion, is there not room for doubt and occasion for very grave reflection?

"You spoke, Mr. President, in your latest message of the difficulties which you are now experiencing in dealing with foreign Governments, especially with respect to 'matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequence' than the canal-tolls dispute, and you pleaded with the Congress to empower you to adopt conciliatory measures. It is clear, therefore, that you attach particular importance to foreign public opinion at this crucial time. What, then, is the consensus of that judgment upon your Mexican policy?

"The most consistent friends of America among the public journals of England are the London Times and the Spectator. Both have deplored from the beginning your refusal to recognize the de facto Government. While hoping for the best, the Times still can not escape the conclusion that you have 'assumed responsibilities that may well lead to armed intervention'; and the Spectator says:

"We can foresee nothing but bitter and cruel mortification as the result of Mr. Wilson's policy of 'watchful waiting,' while that policy means watching and waiting on such fiendish villainies. So far the effects of Mr. Wilson's policy have been the very nemesis of pacifism. Gen. Huerta, as the de facto ruler of Mexico, at least had a better chance than anyone else of producing order. But that was not enough for Mr. Wilson. With admirable yet fatal motives he looked for personal perfection in a land where it does not exist, at all events in public life. By gradual stages he has been driven into a corner, and has at last come to the point of recognizing anarchy in preference to recognizing Gen. Huerta. By a very different route from that of a professed man of iron and blood he has arrived for all practical purposes at a purely cynical policy. He has removed the prohibition on the traffic in arms across the United States frontier, and now looks on 'watchfully' while American citizens and British subjects are killed and trains are sent full tilt into burning tunnels. This terrible state of affairs is the result of the primary error of supposing that you can dictate to a proud and independent country and at the same time really respect its independence. 'Things are what they are, and the consequences will be what they will be. Why, then, should we desire to be deceived?' The alternatives are to recognize whatever president has at the moment climbed to power, and to act as though Mexico were no longer an independent country. One or the other it must be. The latter policy has always meant a great campaign and a military occupation, although Mr. Wilson has steadily refused to see what he did not wish to believe.

"The conservative Morning Post pronounces your position 'absolutely unintelligible' and possessing 'all the appearance of encouragement to anarchy, civil war, and murder of foreign residents in Mexico.' We quote briefly from the leading journals of other countries:

"From the Economiste Française, of Paris:

"The United States have as President to-day a doctrinaire, very eager for the people's good. Mr. Woodrow Wilson is a university professor and the author of some interesting books. He consequently has the advantages and disadvantages pertaining to a life long devoted to learning and teaching. His mentality is elevated, but rigidly unadaptive; his honesty is above suspicion. He is, however, deficient in experience. He considers himself called upon to regenerate the public morals not only of the United States but also of other countries. He says he will not permit Mexico to initiate such and such a governmental solution of the deadlock or put forward such and such a candidate for the presidency. But neither Mexico nor the nations of Europe can possibly submit to these North American injunctions. Mexico is an independent State, and it is desirable she should remain so.

"From the Novoye Vremya, of St. Petersburg:

"The fact that all European, South American, and Asiatic countries have long recognized the government of Huerta can be considered as the best proof that Huerta has ably conducted the governmental affairs of Mexico. Only the United States has assumed a peculiar position. While refusing to recognize Huerta, it has until now confined itself to the energetic support of the rebels concentrated in the north with money, men, and ammunition. The message of President Wilson reveals the game of the United States. It not only demands that an armistice should be concluded with the revolutionists, but even insists categorically that Huerta should not be a candidate for president in the coming election. It is not in vain that the western European press permitted themselves to express the supposition that the United States openly take the side of Mexican anarchy.

"From the Berliner Tageblatt:

"Every Mexican knows very well that the policy of the United States in regard to Mexican affairs aims at establishing a protectorate, more or less disguised, over their Republic, because it separates the United States from the partially subjugated Republics situated north of Panama. Huerta is not a particularly attractive individual, but it is nevertheless true that this 'immoral' man against whom the ex-professor of Princeton contemplates the mobilization of an army is exactly the man that Mexico at this juncture needs. He would have established the order which has so long been disturbed, if he had been permitted to do so. The dictator is fully aware of the peril to which he and his country are exposed from the United States. He has merely persistently faced this peril without paying any attention to the clamor that rises on the other side of the Rio Grande. That he has so far succeeded in his plans to a certain point is proved by the check administered to the tragicomic mission of Lind. * * * At present the submission of Huerta is a thing inconceivable. It appears more probable that he will let Uncle Sam bite the sour fruit of failure.

"From the Boersen Courier, of Berlin:

"The sly and undecided policy of the United States has made American diplomacy the laughingstock of the world. The Government at Washington is aiming in an underhand way at stripping Mexico of her political independence, but above all at establishing in that country the economic supremacy of the United States. If that Government had desired nothing more than the reestablishment of peace, it would have recognized Huerta long ago.

"From the Imparcial, of Madrid:

"We have every reason for deeply distrusting the United States. We have already frequently pointed out how the northern Republic is attempting to take Mexico in her net.

"Is it not now quite clear, Mr. President, that your attitude toward Mexico is 'a position questioned and misunderstood' in Europe?

"In your speech at Mobile you emphasized our friendliness for the South American Republics. 'We must prove ourselves,' you declared, 'their friends and champions upon terms of equality and honor. We must show ourselves their friends by comprehending their interest, whether it squares with our interest or not.' What has been the effect upon these Republics of your Mexican policy? What signified the 'Vivas Huerta!' with which Mr. Roosevelt was greeted in Chile? What says the press of South America? We quote:

"From the powerful Prensa, of Buenos Ayres:

"All that Wilson has said in his address to the Congress at Washington has merely served to fortify the position taken by Huerta. The policy of Mr. Wilson has only one tendency, and that is to unite the Latin-American States in spite of Uncle Sam and make such a hostile federation a reality instead of the political dream which it has hitherto been:

"From the Voz de Oriente, of Lima:

"Far from mending, the situation in Mexico is growing more complicated and dangerous. This condition of things results in a large measure from the attitude of the Government at Washington in refusing to recognize Huerta, while Wilson sympathizes with the rebels and even gives them his support. This is the cause of the movement among the students in Mexico City. These youngsters have made a grand manifestation against the Yankees before the palace of the governor when they carried flags bearing the inscription 'Death to the Yankees!' The irritation exhibited by the Mexicans is amply justified.

"From the Prensa, of Lima:

"The President's declaration that he could not recognize Huerta's government because it was founded upon treason is extremely interesting. But nothing can justify the intervention of one State in the affairs of another. At least there ought to be some explanation of the motive which urges North America to favor, by opposing Huerta, the interests of Carranza's insurgents who have raised the ensign of an independent Mexico.

"From the Revista de Yucatan, of Merida:

"President Wilson and his Secretary of State appear each to be one of three things—either they are the romanticists of diplomacy, or the ignoramuses of diplomacy, or the hypocrites of diplomacy. In whichever of these characters we regard them they are hurtful to the country they govern and to the nations with which they deal, for nothing can be more pernicious in political life than romanticism which engenders your dreamers, your fanatics, extravagant theorists, and your Utopians, who do not see the reality of things, who do not perceive the world in which they live and attempt to go beyond the law of nature. The ignoramus is one destitute of science or letters. * * * The hypocrite is just what the word imports—he is a man who blazons abroad as his own the virtues he does not possess.

"From El Imparcial (anti-Huerta), of Mexico:

"It is difficult to believe that the Yankee Government is authorizing the sale of arms to the bandits of Villa, who pillage, burn, and murder throughout the country. How can the rulers of a cultivated people under guidance of a willful and obstinate leader suffer themselves to be guilty of complicity with such a band of plunderers? It once appeared impossible that President Wilson should be a man destitute alike of conscience and a sense of shame. If the American people approve of this astounding measure taken by their President, they will deserve the contempt of all honorable nations.

"From the Pais (pro-Huerta), of Mexico:

"The only thing which President Wilson will have done is to bring into greater prominence the personality of Huerta, who, thanks to the intrigues of the North Americans, represents to-day upon our new continent the soul of the Latin race.

"Can there be any doubt, Mr. President, that your course has served only to intensify the distrust and dislike of the very peoples whose good will you courted and whose 'friend and champion' you sincerely wish to become? Is not here again, where least of all we desire it, questioning and misunderstanding?

"It is not necessary to point the direction of the sympathies of Japan, with whom we would maintain amicable relations; it is not necessary to record the unanimous judgment of all foreign residents of Mexico nor to recount the prayers of our own countrymen who feel that they have been abandoned; these are only too unhappily familiar.

"What to do? Why, Mr. President, there is but one thing to do. There never has been but one thing to do. That is to put under your feet the solid precedent that was established by this Nation at the beginning of its career and that has been heeded by all other powers in this particular instance—extend to the de facto government of Mexico official recognition. We pass no criticism upon your refusal to take this logical and sensible action originally. You erred, of course, as all the world now concludes, and as you yourself confessed when you acknowledged the validity of the 'usurping' Governments of Peru and Hayti; but it was an excusable, possibly even a justifiable, error, because it sprang from the best of intentions. What we do ask is that you do not persist in a course which leads straightway to the undoing of all your good works, through the certain defeat of your party and the execration that just as surely will be visited upon yourself if, as a consequence of sheer obduracy, this country shall be dragged into a hateful war. It may or may not be a correct assumption that Huerta, unhampered, could have pacified his country, but there is and can be absolutely no question that you deprived him of the means of effective striving.

"Grant that Huerta is a bad man. Is he not, nevertheless, the best? Has he not proved himself, in contrast with Villa, Carranza, and Zapata? Surely in recent years no ruler's ability has been put so severely to test. Consider what he has done single handed and alone. Confronted at the outset by a hostile Congress, such as he well knew had achieved the downfall of Madero, surrounded by a Cabinet of intriguers, refused recognition by the United States, branded rightfully or wrongfully, but without adduced evidence, as an accessory to assassination, deprived of the opportunity to borrow moneys through the desire of foreign Governments to curry favor with the nation which is now more commonly than before referred to throughout Latin America as 'the big bully,' cajoled, threatened, cut off from aid wherever possible, while simultaneously the hordes of opposing bandits and desperadoes were being supplied, furtively at first and then openly, with arms and ammunition, and now, at the end of 13 months, he is conceded to be more strongly intrenched than ever. It is an amazing personal record, Mr. President, worthy surely of admiration, and remarkable especially for the consistent dignity, courtesy, and consideration exhibited by the old Indian himself in his dealings with an administration which has been—shall we frankly admit—not invariably tactful, and perhaps upon occasion slightly dictatorial.

"It is not too late. It is never too late to do the right thing. Moreover, the change in conditions affords you full warrant for reversing your position. While you had faith in the sincerity and high purpose of the rebel leaders, there appeared at least a semblance of reason for taking their part, but now that they have dropped the mask and stand revealed in their true light as murdering marauders, their last claim upon your consideration has disappeared. You gave them their chance, at great risk to your own reputation, when you opened the doors for the delivery of arms, and they have shown their appreciation by ignoring your wishes, flouting your authority, and making you appear before the world as a virtual ally of a dastardly bandit. While Huerta has been earning your respect, Villa has been abusing your confidence. Clearly, the withdrawal of aid from the rebels now would be regarded everywhere not only as fully justified, but as a fitting response to the demands of humanity and civilization.

"But what, you may ask, is to be gained by recognizing Huerta at this late day? And we answer, everything. He may not be able under any circumstances to pacify Mexico, but all there, whose lives and properties are at stake, agree that he is, rightfully or wrongfully, Mexico's only hope. He is ours, too, and yours, because he has come to be the only force capable of maintaining order, and so possibly of averting the dreaded intervention, which continuance of the existing chaos is certain in time to produce. Practicability, no less than theory and tradition, calls for upholding of the de facto government.

"There are other reasons, Mr. President, more personal to yourself. You have no base now from which to act; no avenue through which to communicate; no way of meeting the just demands of foreign powers, except, as in the case of England, by proffering special favors. And you are under suspicion. The mere fact that your policy is 'unintelligible' has given rise to a growing conviction, especially in South America, as evidenced above, that it is insincere and is deliberately designed to engender war and conquest. You no longer have at your back the mighty force of public opinion, as we have shown. Abroad, as you must realize, the common attitude toward your watchful waiting is quite frankly contemptuous; at home it is one of grave doubt and grave anxiety. To speak plainly, Mr. President, the feeling is growing stronger daily that your persistence in a course which in common with everybody else you must know to be wrong is attributable to no kind of reasoning whatsoever, but to your own stubborn pride. For your own sake, then, if for no other cause, it is of the utmost importance that, if there must be war, it shall come as an inevitable consequence, as demonstrably unpreventable by any conceivable means, and in strict conformity with the customs and precedents fixed by international usage.

"Is it not clear, Mr. President, that this condition can never be realized until the only government, however discreditable, that does exist, and the only really strong man, however disreputable, who has appeared, shall have been accorded the full opportunity which so many believe they could utilize even now with ultimate effectiveness? It is the only way, sir, the only way out; the only way to save Mexico, to save your party, and to save yourself. It is, too, 'the large thing to do,' the 'only thing' you 'can afford to do' to escape from a position 'everywhere questioned and misunderstood.'

"We implore you, Mr. President, to take to heart your own splendid words: 'We ought to reverse our action without raising the question whether we were right or wrong,' and then do it 'without quibble or hesitation,' and win for your country just honor and for yourself the fine renown which the world invariably accords a noble act nobly done."

Mr. Chairman, the President appeared before a joint session of Congress yesterday, and as a result of the message he delivered the House passed the following:

House joint resolution (No. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in the employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal amends to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

I voted for the same, not because it is entirely to my liking but because I felt it was my duty in this trying hour of the Nation to stand by the President.

I believe I express the feelings of many of my colleagues when I say that he never yet has appeared before a joint session of Congress but what we have wanted to ask him some question or questions, and yesterday was no exception. I for one, and I know that many others felt the same way, wished that the President had given the Congress and the country further information respecting the Mexican situation. A few days ago the President issued an ultimatum to Huerta that he must fire 21 guns by 6 o'clock Sunday evening. What was Huerta's reply? And what harm could come if the President had set forth this reply, if any was made, in his message? I say in a spirit of the utmost kindness that I think the President would be all the stronger if he would take Congress more into his confidence upon these questions of such vital importance, especially the Members of his own party, but as we were appealed to upon the ground, and very truly, that this ought not to be a partisan question, I can not understand why Republicans also should not enjoy the confidence of the President in matters of this kind.

Let us fervently hope that Huerta will salute the flag by the firing of 21 guns, that war, with all its awful consequences, may be averted. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER].

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if there was ever a time when the American people should realize the serious errors they made in the fall of 1912, and repent in sackcloth and ashes, now is that time. They are certainly paying the penalty of their mistake.

When Woodrow Wilson was inaugurated President of the United States on the 4th of March, 1913, he enjoyed the confidence and well wishes of the American people to an extent that no other President ever enjoyed when inaugurated. At that time the country was enjoying an era of prosperity such as this or no other country had enjoyed before, and by many it was supposed that this prosperity could not be arrested, no matter what legislation was passed at Washington. We were then at peace with all the world, and no one had the remotest idea that in this era of advanced civilization this condition could or would be changed; but these conditions are changed to-day. We have had the President of the United States appear before us on a number of occasions, and in the last personally delivered message he informs us of the unhappy position of this Government in its relation to Mexico, and we must conclude that his policy of "watchful waiting" referred to in a previous message has been a failure. He informed us of the insults heaped upon our citizens, our sailors, our officials, and our flag, and of his efforts and demands that the dignity and respect for our citizens and our country may be maintained. The President comes to Congress and asks that the course he now purposes to pursue may have the approval and support of the Congress. In his address he said:

The Government can, I earnestly hope, in no circumstance be forced into war with the people of Mexico.

Let us hope that this may be so. The approval and support the President asked for were given by the House in the form of this resolution:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is justified in employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands made upon Victoriano Huerta for unequivocal demands to the Government of the United States for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

This resolution was supported by both Democrats and Republicans from a patriotic motive. Many of us voted for this resolution not because we approved the "watchful-waiting" policy, but because it seemed the only thing to do. Certain demands were made by Admiral Mayo, which were not complied with. The President had made those demands his own. The finest vessels of our Navy had been ordered to Mexican waters to enforce this demand and the defeat of this resolution would have meant the return in humiliation of those vessels, and the President would have been humiliated and discredited and his power and influence would have been impaired.

To many of us, it was not now a question of whether the President of the United States exercised the greatest wisdom in making the demand his own, but we were confronted with the fact that he had done so and felt it our duty to sustain him, and let us all hope that by doing so it will not bring war, but may be the means of avoiding war. Many of us feel that the conditions were brought about by our "watchful-waiting" policy and our moral support of the so-called constitutionalists, who have conducted a campaign of plunder, rapine, and murder, and who have not had—if the reports can be believed—the same regard for American citizenship as they had for the citizenship of other countries. I am one of those who believe that American citizens should stand for something, and I am glad the Government has at least concluded to defend and protect the citizens of the United States and the flag, and let us hope that the same protection may be afforded to all citizens wherever they may be, those who may be in northern and southern Mexico, as well as those in Central Mexico. Had our Government seen fit to demand of the revolutionists that those in authority would be held personally accountable, many of the murders of American citizens could have been prevented, but I desire to call your attention to other legislation of the Democratic Party.

Mr. Chairman, we have now had a little over one year of Democratic rule. On the 7th day of April, 1913, Congress was called into extra session by the President. It will be recalled that during the campaign of 1912 the issues most discussed by our Democratic friends was that of tariff reform and the high cost of living. The charge being made over and over again and again that the tariff was the cause of the high cost of living, and the Republican Party was severely censured and not only accused of robbing the public, but of every other crime that the Democratic orators thought would make votes for them.

PARTY PLEDGES VIOLATED.

The Democratic Party in its platform at Baltimore pledged its unqualified support of the civil service as well as the exemption from tolls of our coastwise ships passing through the Panama Canal and a number of other measures, all of which it is impossible for me to even touch upon. The measure which our Democratic friends laid most stress upon and considered of the most vital importance was that of tariff reform, and primarily for this purpose the President called the extra session of Congress. Immediately after the assembling of Congress President Wilson assumed control of both the Senate and the House of Representatives and, in due course of time, there was written upon the statute books the Underwood tariff bill. This bill, as we all know, was passed by the use of the party lash, public patronage, and the Democratic caucus. While I am thoroughly opposed to this method of legislation and can not condemn it in terms too severe, yet, after all, the effect of the legislation is the all-important proposition to consider; and let me here incidentally call your attention to the fact that in this very first bill the Democratic Party pledge to uphold and support the civil service was violated in that it does not provide that the appointments for carrying into effect the provisions of the bill shall be made from the civil-service lists, which consist of experienced persons, all of whom have passed satisfactory examinations, but in the bill they provided that the appointments may be given to political followers whose only recommendation and qualification is party loyalty, who may or may not have the necessary ability to perform the duties imposed upon them, and are certainly without experience. The Democratic Party not only violated this pledge in this law, but in a number of laws that were passed later was this pledge repeatedly violated.

CURRENCY BILL.

The next important legislation enacted was the currency law, and this bill we hope will be workable and an improvement over our present system, but if so it is a question how much credit should be given our Democratic friends. The bill as it passed the House was positively unworkable and would not and could not be put in force in that shape. The Senate after prolonged debate amended it by striking out all after the enacting clause and presented an entirely new bill, which was largely copied from the Aldrich bill. Its foundation, its framework, and in almost all of its vital parts it is a transposition from the Aldrich bill and an adaptation from the report of the Monetary Commission. At the instance of Mr. Bryan and the fiat money men many unsound provisions were first in the bill, but most of them were taken out before it became a law, largely due to Senator ROOT'S criticism and enlightened public opinion. Some of its most valuable features were finally taken from the report of the Monetary Commission, which the Baltimore convention had thoroughly condemned. Let us hope that this law will prove an improvement over our present system when it is finally put into effect.

I have not time to refer to all the unfortunate and absurd legislation enacted. I shall not even dwell upon the appropriation of $35,000,000 for the building of a railroad in the frozen and frigid North on the glaciers of Alaska, except to say that this appropriation is over $1,000 for every white man, woman, and child of the mixed population of all nationalities, many, if not a majority, of whom are not even citizens of the United States, and to say that this is only the beginning and will require not less than three times this amount before the work contemplated is completed, if it ever will be.

PANAMA TOLLS.

I shall not now refer to the reasons why President Wilson has reversed himself as well as the Baltimore platform on the proposition of the Panama Canal tolls. You will remember, before the election in all of his public utterances, the President insisted we must have free passage through the Panama Canal for American merchant vessels, giving a number of reasons and thoroughly approving without reserve this enacted legislation. Now he comes to Congress and asks us to repeal that law, and says:

Reverse your action without raising a question whether we are right or wrong. For—

He says—

I shall not know how to deal with other measures of even greater delicacy and nearer consequences if you do not grant it to me in ungrudging measure.

I shall refrain to dwell on this subject at this time.

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Let us take up the subject that is perhaps of "nearer consequence" to most of us. Let us see whether the Underwood tariff bill has been the cure-all it was promised it would be. Let us see what the effect of this legislation has been. Has it resulted in increased opportunity for the wage earners? Has it reduced the high cost of living? Oh, I know when I touch on this subject that I shall be classed as a "calamity howler." We are told that to refer to these conditions will injure business, yet it is a fact that the Democratic Party, through its platform, through its press, and through its orators, has for 16 years in continuous unbroken chorus howled "calamity." Their tales of woe make the lamentations of Job sound like words of praise. They condemned the tariff laws enacted by the Republican Party as the most iniquitous and obnoxious pieces of legislation ever written upon the statute books. Yet, during all the years they were in force we enjoyed the greatest prosperity of any country on the face of the earth and in the history of the world. Their calamity howling did no harm, because everyone was prospering; but finally, through persistent yet inconsistent effort, they raised a doubt in the minds of some whether after all they should not be given an opportunity to put their theory into practice, and to-day, amid the gloom of the family circle of the unemployed and silence of closing mills and dying fires for the first time in 20 years, they preach prosperity. They tell us there is no business depression and then with true Democratic consistency say times are getting better.

The mills and factories, they say, will soon start and again employ at least some of the men that were laid off. I need not call your attention to the number of men out of employment and the many crippled industries. You know these things only too well, but I do want to call your attention to the fact that in the fall of 1912 we tried to explain to our people the fallacy of the Democratic "tariff-for-revenue-only" policy, and we predicted what would happen if such a policy were enacted into law. We stated then that under such a policy industrial prosperity would be wrecked and that the balance of trade with foreign countries which has been in our favor for these many years of prosperity would be reversed; that we would not only lose the revenue with which to support the Government, but that when the time was here to settle the bill immense quantities of gold would have to be sent abroad to square the account. But our Democratic friends denied this and told us that under their policy they would open to us the markets of the world and that the balance of trade would continue to be in our favor. I ask where is the market that was opened to us in return for our market which we have surrendered? Where is the country that has reduced their tariff so that we could exploit their countries and possess their markets? I know and have heard of none. Canada, Germany, France, all of Continental Europe, South American countries, and all other countries have maintained their tariff. None have made concessions. What is the result? I shall quote from the statistics of December, 1913, which are the last that seem to be available. During the month of December, 1913, when the new tariff law was in effect for about two months, we lost in revenue to the Government about $6,000,000 as compared with December, 1912. During the same corresponding months our sales abroad decreased $17,000,000; our purchases abroad increased $29,000,000. So that this changed the balance of trade to the extent of $46,000,000, and if this single month be an index it would seem that for 1914 the balance of trade will be against us. For many years, under the Republican administration, the balance has been $500,000,000 in our favor. This seems to be the Democratic way of capturing the foreign markets. The President very kindly told us that what the American producer needed was to have his "wits sharpened" by competition with the rest of the world. We are now trying it, and I find that some of us are not only having our "wits sharpened," but our "appetites" as well. If there ever existed in any civilized country an aggregation of learned scholarly dreamers and theorists, then those responsible for the enactment of the Underwood tariff bill can certainly claim that distinction.

What else did the tariff bill do? The Daily Iron Trade, of Cleveland, Ohio, under date of February 12, 1914, in a telegram sent to Hon. W. E. HUMPHREYS, among other things, says:

> We feel that it is no exaggeration to definitely state that fully 50 per cent of men employed one year ago in the iron, steel, and machinery trade of the United States are now idle.

This means that over 1,000,000 men are now idle in these industries alone. Over $2,000,000 in wages are wiped out every day. An annual pay roll of over $700,000,000 is gone in these industries alone. If my source of information is correct, and I think it is, 270,000 miners are now idle that were earning $12,000,000 per month a year ago; 75,000 men are idle in the automobile industry. The wage earners of the Nation for the month of January, 1914, have earned $4,000,000 per day less than they did in January, 1912, all the result of one year of Democracy and the "New Freedom." Is it any surprise to you that the railroads have been obliged to take off trains? Do you know that for every day the present tariff law has been on the statute books the Nation has gone in debt? Do you know that for every day the law has been in force the business of the Nation has decreased more than $10,000,000, and that for every day the law has been on the statute books over 10,000 men have been forced into idleness? Our Democratic friends, however, deny that these conditions are due to the tariff. They say they are due to natural causes. If this be so, then how unfortunate it is that these conditions always follow the enactment of the Democratic "tariff for revenue only" laws. Does the sun refuse to shine, does the rain cease to fall, do the seasons refuse to come and go, do we fail to have seedtime and harvest, does the earth lose its fertility, all because the Democratic Party is in power? If all this is simply "just happening," without any cause, it is indeed very unfortunate for our Democratic friends.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

But how about the reduction of the high cost of living? We were promised that if the Democratic Party was put in power they would reduce the cost of living. They have reduced the tariff, which, according to their theories, was the cause of the high cost of living. They made the tariff to conform to the doctrine of the "New Freedom." They placed shoes on the free list. What is the result? Do you buy your shoes for less money? Wool went on the free list on December 1, 1913. Are you buying your clothes for less? They greatly reduced the duty on oats. How much less do you pay for your breakfast foods made from this cereal? They placed wheat and flour on the free list. How much less do you pay for your bread? They placed cattle and meats on the free list. How much has it reduced the cost of your beefsteak? So I might go on and name almost innumerable articles. They reduced the duty on barley 15 cents per bushel, and if it be true that the tariff is a tax and this reduction is reflected in the price of the product, then they have taken 15 cents per bushel from the price of barley that the honest tillers of the soil have been heretofore receiving on 90,000,000 bushels of barley raised in the United States, amounting to $13,500,000, and have given the largest portion of it to the millionaire brewers of the country. They have taken from the revenues of the Government over $400,000 on the almost 3,000,000 bushels of barley we have imported and have also given this to the millionaire brewers. Oh, yes; they say, "Give us time." Well, they have had time enough to produce the results I have called your attention to.

The truth is, when they promised to reduce the cost of living and at the same time increase the wages they were either dishonest or insane, perhaps both. If you will remember that 90 per cent of the value, if traced to its very foundation, of all things you eat and wear is labor cost, you will readily understand that the price of the product can not be greatly reduced without reducing the price of labor. I believe that the Democratic Party will succeed in reducing the high cost of living. We have now taken the first step, and when a sufficient number of men are idle and the wage earners are so impoverished that they do not have the price with which to buy the necessaries of life, then the market will be glutted and the prices will be reduced correspondingly.

BUYING ABROAD.

Again, one of the strong points of our Democratic friends during the last campaign and during the debate on the floor of the House, which they persistently emphasized, was that they were the friends of the people, and that the people are entitled to buy what they need in the entire markets of the world at the lowest possible price. They claim that the tariff is a tax, and that we have no right to burden the people and levy this tax. Yet, in the next breath, they claim to be the friends of the wage earners and insist that wages must be maintained. If you will bear in mind, as I have stated before, that 90 per cent of the value of these articles is labor, you will recognize at once that it is an impossible proposition, when we buy our manufactured products in foreign countries cheaper than we do here. It is because the price of labor is cheaper, and if we buy in foreign countries it is a self-evident fact that the labor to manufacture these articles is not needed in this country until the price of labor reaches such a level which makes the production of the article possible here so it can be sold at the same price. In other words, we are importing foreign labor based on its market value in foreign countries, and for all practical purposes we might as well import the laborers themselves. Just as soon as anyone can convince me that I can buy a foreign-made article without robbing the American workman of the amount of labor and wages contained in the article I will advocate free trade.

Therefore, I don't agree that it should be our privilege to buy foreign-made goods just because they are a little cheaper. Of course it is a self-evident fact that the majority of the people in the United States do not believe in the principles of the Democratic Party, and the party in power is not a majority party. They have come into power because of the split in the ranks of the Republican Party, and I believe that at no distant day we shall see the Republican Party reunited.

THE PROGRESSIVES.

The Progressives are protectionists. Their candidate for President in the last campaign declared if Wilson should be elected and a Democratic tariff law placed upon the statute books it would bring upon the country the greatest industrial disaster in the history of this Nation. The experience of the last few months has largely demonstrated the correctness of his prophecy. The Progressives believe in the great principles of the Republican Party. They are as proud as we are of its traditions, its memories, and its mighty achievements. We are all proud of its glorious history. They are proud of our great leaders, Lincoln, Grant, Harrison, Garfield, Blaine, and McKinley. They believe in the teachings of these great men as we believe in them. They believe in the principles for which these men fought. The rank and file of the Progressive Party are now and always have been Republicans, and their difference with the Republican Party has been one of method and procedure rather than that of principle and policy. With the great issue of protection I feel sure that the Progressives will again proudly take their places under the banner of the grand old party. Most of them are under that banner now and had left the Republican Party only because of personal admiration for Col. Roosevelt and because they did not honestly believe that he received a square deal in Chicago.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and had come to resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10138. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

PORTO RICO (H. DOC. NO. 915).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President, which, with the accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 32 of the act of Congress approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith certified copies of franchises granted by the Executive Council of Porto Rico, which are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War transmitting them to me. Such of these as relate to railroad, street railway, telegraph, and telephone franchises, privileges, or concessions have been approved by me, as required by the joint resolution of May 1, 1900 (31 Stat., 715).

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 21, 1914.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the order heretofore made, the House stands in recess until 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until Wednesday, April 22, 1914, at 10 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the board of officers of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, appointed April 12, 1913, upon the most practicable and effective measures for prevention of damage by flood to works constructed for the improvement of navigation; of interference with interstate commerce, and other disastrous results thereof (H. Doc. No. 914), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. McGILLICUDDY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15222) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries or occupational diseases in the course of their employment, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 561), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2156) to authorize the payment of certain claims for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 562), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 232) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer from stock on hand for use of the Army to the State of Texas for the use of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of said State 95 wall tents, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 563), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 15874) amending section 2 of an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ADAMSON: A bill (H. R. 15875) to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army and Navy, late members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to extend to them the thanks of Congress, to authorize their promotion, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Resolution (H. Res. 485) directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to the House of Representatives copies of all regulations and orders pertaining to the inspection of food supplies for the Navy in time of war; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 486) directing the Secretary of War to furnish to the House of Representatives copies of all regulations and orders pertaining to the inspection of food supplies for the Army in time of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MURDOCK: Resolution (H. Res. 487) authorizing the printing of 2,000 copies of soil survey of Lehigh County, Pa.; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BRYAN: Resolution (H. Res. 488) requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to submit to the House of Representatives facts in his possession as to the rule applied by the Auditor for the Post Office Department in the Treasury Department as to leaves of absence and sick leaves granted to employees in his department, etc.; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

By Mr. HENRY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 252) for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the methods and practices in the transaction of business on cotton exchanges and grain exchanges, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GARDNER: Memorial from the Massachusetts Legislature opposing the illiteracy test in the Burnett-Dillingham immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MITCHELL: Memorial from the Massachusetts Legislature opposing the illiteracy test in the Burnett-Dillingham immigration bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 15876) granting an increase of pension to Catharine Twehus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 15877) granting an increase of pension to David Lewis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 15878) granting a pension to Harry M. Batty; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DECKER: A bill (H. R. 15879) granting a pension to Winny F. Collier; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15880) granting a pension to William Lloyd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15881) granting an increase of pension to John Oyler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15882) granting an increase of pension to William E. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15883) for the relief of Peter V. Shell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15884) for the relief of Albert Sparlin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DERSHEM: A bill (H. R. 15885) granting a pension to Sarah J. Harbeson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRISCOLL: A bill (H. R. 15886) granting an increase of pension to Caroline Oaks; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 15887) granting an increase of pension to George W. Bransford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOWLER: A bill (H. R. 15888) granting a pension to Randolph Howerton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOEKE: A bill (H. R. 15889) granting an increase of pension to George F. Fellers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIEST: A bill (H. R. 15890) granting a pension to Walter Haldeman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HART: A bill (H. R. 15891) for the relief of Arthur Charles Tipton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15892) granting an increase of pension to Joseph E. Layton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAY: A bill (H. R. 15893) for the relief of George P. Chandler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KETTNER: A bill (H. R. 15894) granting an increase of pension to William Ragan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 15895) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Meek; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOSS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 15896) granting an increase of pension to William Satow; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 15897) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Wall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 15898) granting an increase of pension to Alletha Stewart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL: A bill (H. R. 15899) granting an increase of pension to James A. Wise; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERLEY: A bill (H. R. 15900) granting a pension to William Miles; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 15901) granting an increase of pension to Sylvanis Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of D. G. Saad and Saleem Risk, of Birmingham, Ala., relative to naturalization of Syrians; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also (by request), petition of the First Baptist Church of Perry, Mich., against polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Petition of sundry citizens of Hamilton, Mo., against Sabbath-observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Hamilton, Mo., favoring House bill 12928, relative to Sunday hours for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petitions of 14 churches representing 3,427 members, and petitions of 834 citizens, all of the third congressional district of Missouri, in favor of the Sheppard-Hobson resolution for national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BAKER: Petition of sundry citizens of Ocean City and Smithfield, and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Delanco, all in the State of New Jersey, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BALTZ: Petitions of sundry citizens of the twenty-second Illinois district, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARCHFELD: Petition of sundry citizens of Carnegie, Pa., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: Petition of 1,686 mothers and daughters of citizens of New York City and vicinity, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, Petitions of the Bauer Bros. Brokerage Co., the Handlan-Buck Manufacturing Co., the William Bollwerk Painting Co., the Greeley Printery, the Capen Belting & Rubber Co., the Union Rubber & Supply Co., the G. Hartmann Contracting Co., the Reliance Machine & Tool Works, the Heine Safety Boiler Co., the Wagner Electric Manufacturing Co., the Toorlicht-Duncker Carpet Co., the Hargadine-McKittrick Carpet Co., the Woodward & Tiernan Printing Co., Messrs. Klipstein & Rathmann, and Otto Eick, all of St. Louis, Mo., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the St. Louis Epworth League Union, the Maple Avenue Church Mission Society, the Third United Presbyterian Church, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Chauteau Place Methodist Episcopal Church, the Victor Mission Church, the Zion Methodist Episcopal Church, the Gibson Heights United Presbyterian Church, and other citizens, all of St. Louis, Mo., in favor of national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BRUCKNER: Petition of the New York Child Labor Committee, favoring appropriation for the Children's Bureau; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Charles B. Towns, of New York City, relative to House bill 6282, to regulate sale of drugs, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Miss Mabel Boardman, of Washington, D. C., favoring House joint resolution 244, to authorize the President to grant leave of absence to an officer of the Corps of Engineers for purpose of accepting an appointment under the Government of China on works of conservation and public improvement; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Paul Stopps, of New York City, relative to widows and orphans' pension bill; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of Smith & Holden, the American Cranberry Exchange, the New York Branch of National League of Commission Merchants, and C. H. & C. W. Kimball, all of New York City, N. Y., relative to a standard barrel; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petition of the A. Huppel's Sons, the De La Vergne Machine Co., the Piel Bros., and sundry citizens, all of New York City, N. Y.; also the Northeastern Saengerbund of America, of Philadelphia, Pa., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania: Petitions of various banks of the State of Pennsylvania, relative to amending the income-tax law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of the Pennsylvania Bottlers' Protective Association and various voters of the thirty-first congressional district of Pennsylvania, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Swedish-American Benevolent Association of McKeesport, Pa., favoring bill for erection of a memorial to John Ericsson; to the Committee on the Library.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of North Manchester, Ind., favoring passage of House bill 13131, relative to ex-prisoners of war; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: Petition of Hope Chapel, Local No. 3, Federal Employees and Clerks Union of America, of Ethan, S. Dak., against the Moss-Fletcher bill, relative to rural credits; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of the State of South Dakota, favoring amendment abolishing polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petitions of sundry citizens and the Christian Endeavor Society of Garrettford Baptist Church, 300 citizens of Avondale, 125 citizens of Ridley Park, 100 citizens of Mount Holly Springs, 275 citizens of Honey Brook, 66 citizens of Oxford, 44 citizens of Malvern, 52 citizens of Crum Lynne, 50 citizens of Chester, 100 citizens of Thorndale, 198 citizens of Moore, 20 citizens of New London, 50 citizens of Russellville, 3,283 citizens of Coatesville, 150 citizens of Lansdowne, 173 citizens of Nottingham, 75 citizens of Morton, 46 citizens of Cochranville, 41 citizens of Pomeroy, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Petitions of the South Carolina International Sunday School Association, 50 citizens of Edgefield, 98 citizens of Allendale, 300 citizens of Aiken, 635 citizens of Johnston, and 150 citizens of Beaufort, all in the State of South Carolina, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDER: Petition of sundry citizens of Kings County, N. Y., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 108 citizens of the sixth congressional district of New York, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of T. W. Mason and Robert Kruecke, of Milwaukee, Wis., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: Petition of E. P. Eddy and 14 other socialists, of Clay County, Fla., favoring Government ownership of the mines in Colorado; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. CRAMTON: Petitions of A. F. Kowalski and 171 other voters of Huron County, Jacob Vossen and 143 other voters of St. Clair County, and J. J. Middlestadt and 90 other voters of Macomb County, all in the State of Michigan, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALE: Petition of John Bender, of Brooklyn, N. Y., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 715 voters of the fourth New York congressional district, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DANFORTH: Petition of 1,500 voters of the thirty-ninth New York congressional district, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of H. A. Beardsley and 11 others, of Portageville, N. Y., favoring proposed advance of 5 per cent in railroad freight rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of Dansville, Rush, Hilton, Hamlin, Brockport, Lima, Cuylerville, Medina, Rochester, and Clarkson, all in the State of New York, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Petitions of sundry citizens of Chelsea, Muskogee, and Tulsa, all in the State of Oklahoma, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of the St. Paul (Minn.) Association of Credit Men, favoring House bill 4322, relative to 1-cent postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Duluth (Minn.) Typographical Union, No. 136, favoring Bartlett-Bacon anti-injunction bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DONOHOE: Petition of 845 citizens of Philadelphia, protesting against nation-wide prohibtiion; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DONOVAN: Petition of Danbury Typographical Union, No. 143, favoring passage of Bartlett-Bacon bill (H. R. 1873); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of 30 citizens of Brookfield Center, Conn., and 308 citizens of Danbury, Conn., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DUNN: Petition or 1,232 citizens of Monroe County, N. Y., against constitutional prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 45 citizens of Rochester, N. Y., and 1 citizen of Irondequoit, N. Y., against the passage of the resolution providing for national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Rochester (N. Y.) Temperance Federation, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce, Rochester, N. Y., against a further extension of the parcel-post system at this time; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. DYER: Petition of the F. W. Brockman Commission Co., of St. Louis, Mo., relative to a standard cranberry barrel; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. EAGLE: Petitions of sundry citizens of the eighth congressional district of Texas, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas: Petition of Mount Paran Church and 14 citizens of Keese, 35 citizens of Berryville, 200 citizens of Harrison, and 250 citizens of Springdale, all in the State of Arkansas, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FOWLER: Petition of Antoch (Ill.) Baptist Church and 16 citizens of Mill Shoals, Ill., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GARDNER: Petition of 22 citizens of Haverhill, Mass., protesting against the passage of the Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, memorial of D. B. Cook, of Danvers, Mass., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GARNER: Petition of sundry citizens of Port Aransas, Tex., protesting against passage of the Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Port Aransas, Tex., favoring passage of House bill 12028, retaining section 6, relative to Sunday work in post offices; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of 75 citizens of Alice, Jim Wells County, Tex., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOOD: Petition of 114 citizens of Coggon, Iowa, and 43 citizens of Walker, Iowa, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRIEST: Petition of sundry citizens of Lancaster, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAMMOND: Petition of 5 citizens of Wabasha, Minn., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 8 citizens of Amboy, Minn., protesting against the enactment of a bill to close barber shops in the District of Columbia on Sunday; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of 8 citizens of Amboy, Minn., favoring the passage of a bill to amend the postal and civil-service laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, resolutions of the First Baptist Church of Pipestone, the Seventh-day Adventist Church of Pipestone, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Madelia, all in the State of Minnesota, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HELVERING: Petition of 600 citizens of Washington, Kans., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HELGESEN: Petition of 130 citizens of Amenia, 613 citizens of Grand Forks, 100 citizens of Gilby, 45 citizens of Portland, 155 citizens of Hope, 100 citizens of Walhalla, 50 citizens of Cogswell, 100 citizens of St. Thomas, 50 citizens of Loma, 30 citizens of Manfred, 50 citizens of Hensel, 90 citizens of Hamilton, 150 citizens of Wyndmere, 11 citizens of Napoleon, 100 citizens of Starkweather, 30 citizens of Mayville, 45 citizens of Sheldon, 630 citizens of Devils Lake, 50 citizens of Galesburg, 120 citizens of Clifford, 45 citizens of Grafton, 30 citizens of Hillsboro, 250 citizens of Fargo, 100 citizens of Emerado, 50 citizens of Wheatland, 25 citizens of Forman, 24 citizens of Grandin, 35 citizens of Addison, 30 citizens of Johnstown, 200 citizens of Hunter, 100 citizens of Lisbon, sundry citizens of Oriska, and the Presbytery of Pembina, all in the State of North Dakota, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HULINGS: Petition of C. A. Gilliland, of Oil City, Pa., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Mrs. Myrtle Frye, representing the Sharpsville Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Brethren Churches, representing 457 people; F. F. Phillips, representing the Sheffield Methodist Episcopal congregation, representing 425 people; Mrs. H. L. Ford, representing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Barnes, representing 40 people; Rev. H. J. Stewart representing the First Baptist Church of Warren, representing 285 people; Mrs. John Prather, representing the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Rocky Grove, representing 50 people; Charles A. Randall, representing the Farmers' Institute held at Tionesta, February 21, 1914; C. E. Mathews, representing the Presbyterian Sunday School of Clarington, representing 100 people; Oscar W. Nordstrom, representing the Young People's Society of the Swedish Congregational Church, of Ridgway, representing 48 people; Fremont Kerrick, representing the Church of Christ of Ridgway, representing 76 people; C. R. Slade, representing the Free Methodist Church of Ridgway; and William S. Wenck, representing the Baptist Sunday School of Ridgway, representing 70 people, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 651 citizens of Warren County, Pa., in favor of the national prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KAHN: Petition of the Merchants' Exchange, of San Francisco, Cal., favoring House bill 12743, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be erected a suitable building or buildings for marine-hospital purposes on the present marine-hospital site at San Francisco, Cal., and to remove all or any of the present structures on said site; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KEISTER: Petition of 401 citizens of West Newton, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Petition of 674 citizens of McKeesport, Pa., and 438 citizens of Wilkinsburg, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: Petition of sundry citizens of the first district of Iowa, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of the first congressional district of Iowa, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Petition of Dr. B. U. Richards, of Pawtucket, R. I., against the Nelson amendment to Harrison antinarcotic bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Crouse-Hinds Co., of Syracuse, N. Y., favoring House bill 14328, relative to false statements in the mails; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of the Roger Williams Baptist Church, of Providence, R. I., and 692 voters of Woonsocket, R. I., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 30 citizens of Woonsocket, R. I., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorials of E. R. Bullock, of Pawtucket; Rev. Matthias S. Kaufman, of Central Falls; Emmanuel Bible Class of Woodlawn Baptist Sunday School, of Pawtucket; Central Falls Congregational Sunday School; Men's Forum of Central Falls Congregational Church; Chepachet Baptist Sunday School; Rev. Myron E. Genter, of Providence, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring passage of national constitutional prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Thomas H. Handy, of Manville, R. I., and 20 citizens of Smithfield and Greenville, R. I., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorials of Rev. W. B. Barr, of Central Falls; Edmands Prohibition Alliance, of Providence; Woodlawn Baptist Church; B. D. Sweet, of Providence; Limerock Baptist Church; First Baptist Church of Woonsocket; Robert Cushman, of Pawtucket; Park Place Congregational Church, of Pawtucket; Harlan L. Bromley, of Providence, all in the State of Rhode Island, favoring nation-wide prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KINDEL: Petition of 40 citizens of New Haven, 600 citizens of Fort Collins, 38 citizens of Loveland, 253 citizens of Denver, 256 citizens of Boulder County, 20 citizens of Mead, and 200 citizens of Longmont, all in the State of Colorado, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LANGHAM: Petition of 542 citizens of Punxsutawney, 200 citizens of Miola, 220 citizens of Apollo, 500 citizens of Armstrong County, the Second United Presbyterian Church of Indiana, and sundry citizens of Indiana County, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring passage of national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LESHER: Petition of 506 citizens of Watsontown, 300 citizens of Northumberland, and 160 citizens of Montandon, all in the State of Pennsylvania, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LIEB: Petitions of Edward Elmendorf, Emil Weber, Joseph Schentrup, George Herscher, Dick Johnson, Daniel E. Stahl, Claude Tulley, William Mobys, Milton Henry, Rubie Bickel, Fred Tessler, Henry Andreae, Christ Campbell, Henry Reese, Henry Baer, T. F. Petterson, William Puth, Henry Egli, Conrad Werner, jr., and Conrad Werner, sr., all of Evansville, Ind., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOFT: Petition of 1,287 voters of the thirteenth congressional district of New York, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Petition of 76 citizens of Warehouse Point, Conn., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MAPES: Petition of 20 citizens of Grand Rapids, Mich., favoring House bill 12740, the machinsts' wage bill; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of 256 citizens of Kent City, Mich., and 80 citizens of Byron Center, Mich., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Ottawa and Kent Counties, Mich., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MERRITT: Petition of sundry citizens of the thirty-first congressional district, New York, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MITCHELL: Petitions of sundry citizens of Boston, Thomas Street Swedish Methodist Episcopal Church, of Worcester; the Loyal Temperance Legion of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Worcester; and sundry citizens of Worcester, all in the State of Massachusetts, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of sundry citizens of Norfolk, Mass., and Harlan F. Woodbury, of Natick, Mass., protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOORE: Petition of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma: Resolutions of the Presbyterian Christian Endeavor, of Alva; the United Brethren Church of Dacoma; the Alva Friends Sunday School, of Alva; the Britton Methodist Episcopal Church, of Britton; the First Presbyterian Church of Woodward; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Shattuck; the Olivet Baptist Church, of Oklahoma City, all in the State of Oklahoma, and representing 1,050 people, favoring the adoption of a constitutional prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Michael Young and 84 other citizens of Ellis and Beaver Counties; J. H. Dufriend and 26 other citizens of the city of Thomas; Mack Heatt and 28 other citizens of the city of Alva; L. L. Combs and 69 other citizens of Roger Mills County; Fred J. Fash and 25 other citizens of the city of Alva; and J. B. Morgan and 24 other citizens of the city of Garber, all in the State of Oklahoma, favoring the adoption of constitutional prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MORIN (by request): Petitions of the J. B. Shannon Hardware Co. and 50 other business firms of Philadelphia, favoring passage of volunteer officers' retired list bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOSS of Indiana: Petition of Rev. T. F. Chilton and 80 members of the Presbyterian Church of Eugene and Cayuga, Vermilion County, Ind., in favor of House joint resolution 168, for nation-wide prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NELSON: Petitions of 3,168 citizens of the third congressional district of Wisconsin, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 166 citizens of Dodgeville, Wis., and 90 citizens of Black Earth, Wis., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'LEARY: Petitions of various voters of the fourth congressional district of New York, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the board of managers of the associated charities of Washington, D. C., relative to loan-shark law; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of New York State, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of H. M. Drew, George H. Gueldaud, and 41 citizens of Providence, R. I., and 400 citizens of Central Falls, R. I., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PADGETT: Papers to accompany a bill (H. R. 15898) granting increase of pension to Alletha Stewart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts: Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, protesting against passage of the Sabbath-observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Leominster, Mass., favoring passage of House bill 12928 retaining section 6, relative to Sunday work in post offices; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. PATTEN of New York: Petition of 1,430 citizens of the eighteenth New York congressional district, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PETERSON: Petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Indiana, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. POST: Petition of 83 citizens of Piqua, Ohio, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of 136 citizens of Catawba, 275 of Bradford, and 768 of Miami County, all in the State of Florida, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition from sundry citizens of Placerville, Cal., favoring House bill 12928, a bill to amend the postal laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition by sundry citizens of Placerville, Cal., protesting against the passage of House bill 7826, being the Sabbath observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. REED: Petitions of Frank R. Fister, C. E. Johnson, John J. Herney, Henri Provost, Frank F. Reed, and N. J. Pichette, all from Manchester, N. H., opposing national prohibition of liquor traffic; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of Eugene Quirin, John P. Teehan, Frank McMan, Benj. McLaughlin, Fred Basset, and James Clifford, all from Manchester N. H., opposing national prohibition of liquor traffic; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REILLY of Connecticut: Petition of the Socialist Party of New Haven, Conn., protesting against war with Mexico; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts: Petition of 102 citizens of Massachusetts, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Petition of 33 citizens of Cape Girardeau, Mo., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 50 citizens of Naylor, 200 citizens of Jamesport, 100 citizens of Poplar Bluff, 400 citizens of Dexter, 851 citizens of Willow Springs, 145 citizens of Charleston, 70 citizens of Parma, 200 citizens of Jackson, 300 citizens of Cape Girardeau County, and churches of Rock Hill, Blodgett, McClurg, Pontiac, Fisk, Aid, Sabella, and Wayne County, all in the State of Missouri, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCULLY: Petition of sundry citizens of Monmouth County and Long Branch, N. J., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Newark Photo-Engravers' Union, of Newark, N. J., favoring the Bartlett-Bacon bill (H. R. 1873); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Northeastern Saengerbund of America, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SELDOMRIDGE: Petition of sundry citizens of Colorado Springs, Colo., favoring House bill 12928, relative to Sunday laws for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Colorado Springs, Colo., against Sabbath-observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the Socialist Party of Morgan County, Colo., against 1-cent postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. J. M. C. SMITH: Petitions of 574 citizens of Battle Creek, 500 citizens of Marshall, and 1,425 citizens of Kalamazoo (city and county), all in the State of Michigan, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STAFFORD: Petition of 9,807 citizens of the fifth congressional district of Wisconsin, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STONE: Petition of 252 citizens of Peoria, 150 citizens of Manlius, 75 citizens of Tiskilwa, 150 citizens of Wyanet, 70 citizens of Lamoille, and 16 citizens of Hanna City, all in the State of Illinois, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: Papers to accompany a bill (H. R. 15901) granting an increase in pension to Sylvanus Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNER: Petition of 3 churches of Tingley, Iowa, representing 600 people, and the Christian Church of Clio, Iowa, representing 130 people, favoring the enactment of national constitutional prohibition amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 15 citizens of Afton and Gravity, Iowa, favoring the enactment of House bill 12928, to amend the postal and civil-service laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of 15 citizens of Afton and Gravity, Iowa, protesting against the passage of House bill 7826, being the Sunday-observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TUTTLE: Petition of 95 citizens of Plainfield, N. J., and 56 citizens; the Village Improvement Society, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Epworth League, and the Presbyterian Church of Succasunna, N. J., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the board of trade of cities of Newark and Elizabeth, N. J., protesting against assignment to any banking district other than New York; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, petition of various voters of the fifth congressional district of New Jersey, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. UNDERHILL: Petition of 770 citizens of the thirty-seventh New York congressional district, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VOLLMER: Petition of James Paulista and 2,500 other citizens of the second congressional district of Iowa, protesting against national prohibition (H. J. Res. 168); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Shelby Norman Post, No. 231, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muscatine, Iowa, protesting against any change in the flag; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of William Northrup and other citizens of Iowa, protesting against any change in the flag; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: Petition of 1,650 citizens of the third New York congressional district, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Central Labor Union of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring House bill 13769, relative to administration of savings by the postal-bank service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. WOODRUFF: Petition of sundry citizens of Presque Isle and Bay Counties, Mich., against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WOODS: Petitions signed by sundry citizens of the tenth congressional district of Iowa, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions signed by officers of various churches and young people's associations of the tenth congressional district of Iowa, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition signed by sundry voters of the tenth congressional district of Iowa, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of the tenth congressional district of Iowa, against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 22, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee with sad and anxious hearts. We present ourselves in Thy presence imploring the Divine favor and blessing. We bow before Thee in humble confession of our sins. Our personal sins and our national sins are before Thee. We have come short of Thy glory. O Lord our God, our chief need is Thy forgiveness and Thy favor. We pray Thee to stay the hand of cruel war. Thou hast taught us in Thy Word, Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall inherit the earth; and in the changeless order of Thy providence nothing can be more sure than that righteousness exalteth a nation. Breathe upon us of the spirit of Thy Son. For His name's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore (Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas) took the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) justifying the employment by the President of armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands made upon Victoriano Huerta.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 657. An act to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes; and

S. 3403. An act to abolish the office of receiver of public moneys at Springfield, Mo., and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 656. An act granting to the trustees of the diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for the benefit of "Christ Church On-the-Hill," at Poplar, Mont., lots 5, 6, and 7, in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana; and

S. 4980. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1914.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1657. An act providing for second homestead and desert-land entries;

H. R. 9829. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain unused remnant lands to the Board of County Commissioners of Caddo County, Okla., for fairground and park purposes;

H. R. 10845. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of surplus agricultural lands and timber on surplus timberlands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash.;

H. R. 12463. An act to authorize the withdrawal of lands on the Queniult Reservation, in the State of Washington, for lighthouse purposes; and

H. R. 14242. An act to increase the limit of cost for the erection and completion of the United States Federal building at Harrisburg, Pa.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

H. R. 10138. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. J. Res. 251. Joint resolution justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a petition of Major John C. Durst Camp, No. 40, United Spanish War Veterans, of Lansing, Mich, praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to widows and minor children of soldiers and sailors who served in the Spanish-American War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of Local Lodge No. 63, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of Muskegon, Mich., and of 1,736 citizens of the State of Michigan, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRADLEY presented a petition of 61 citizens of Henry County, Ky., and a petition of 95 citizens of Camden, N. J., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented a petition of Rumford Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Rumford, Me., and a petition of sundry citizens of Augusta, Me., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a petition of the boards of directors of sundry banks of Salt Lake City, Utah, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the income-tax law to provide a method of information at the source, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bridgeport, Conn., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Meriden, Conn., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Typographical Union No. 143, of Danbury, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to make lawful certain agreements between employees and laborers and persons engaged in agriculture or horticulture, and to limit the issuing of injunctions in certain cases, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present memorials signed by 12,247 citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors. I ask that the memorials may be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of the congregation of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Eskridge, Kans., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OLIVER presented a memorial of the Socialist Party of Reading, Pa., remonstrating against intervention in Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Woodstock, Vt., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Indianapolis, Ind., and a petition of the Woman's Alliance of All Souls Unitarian Church, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for an appropriation of $165,000 for the maintenance of the Children's Bureau, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Madison, Velperi, North Vernon, and Hayden, all in the State of Indiana, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the city council of Fort Wayne, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. CLAPP presented a petition of Merwin M. Carlton Post, No. 5, Army of the Philippines, Cuba, and Porto Rico, of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cloquet, Minn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of South Manchester, Conn., praying for an appropriation for the celebration of the so-called "One hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples," which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of Abraham Lincoln Camp, No. 2, Sons of Veterans, of Stamford, Conn., remonstrating against any change being made in the American flag, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of South Manchester, Conn., praying for the repeal of the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

He also presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union, of Meriden, Conn., remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying for national prohibiton, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's Association, of Wiscasset, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the publicity of prices of drugs, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of North Platte, Nebr., remonstrating against submitting the controversy of irrigation claims in Colorado to legislative construction, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming presented a petition of Local Union No. 2671, United Mine Workers of America, of Gebo, Wyo., praying for an investigation of the mines where Government fuel supply is purchased, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Elgin and Houston, in the State of Texas, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide a compensatory time privilege to employees of the Post Office Department, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Elgin and Houston, in the State of Texas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Gainesville, Tex., praying for national censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I send to the desk a telegram which I ask may be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

OMAHA, NEBR., April 20, 1914.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Following copy of telegram from Dallas, Tex., just received, which explains itself: "Capt. Stewart and I have the Woodmen of the World regiment we advised with you about thoroughly organized. Complement of officers complete. Selected company commanders. Have complete list of their prospective enlisted men and the entire regiment at war strength could be mobilized and ready for service in one week should eventualities require same. You may proffer our services to President Wilson, through Senator SHEPPARD immediately, should war emanate. Senator CULBERSON is here and will cooperate. Letter follows, signed by Capt. James E. Brown, as commander in chief of the Uniform Rank, Woodmen of the World." I hereby tender to the United States Government, through you, as many regiments as can be mobilized. While hoping war with Mexico may be averted, in the event war is declared would like for Texas regiment to be first to cross the Rio Grande to wipe out insult to our flag.

W. A. FRASER,
Sovereign Commander Woodmen of the World and General Commanding Uniform Rank, Woodmen of the World.

Mr. PENROSE presented memorials of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Shickshinny, Pa., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Malvern, the congregation of the Seventh-day Adventist Church of Reading, and of sundry citizens of Reading and Birdsboro, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the general committee of District Grand Lodge, No. 1, Independent Order Free Sons of Israel, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide an educational test for immigrants to this country, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Bourse of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further regulate trusts, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented memorials of Anthony Wayne Branch, John Adams Branch, and Thomas Jefferson Branch, American Continental League, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the repeal of the exemption clause of the Panama Canal act, which were referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide pensions for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a Civil War volunteer officers' retired list, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Maritime Exchange, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to upbuild the Revenue-Cutter Service, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of General Lafayette Branch, American Continental League, of Philadelphia, Pa., and a memorial of Liberty Bell Branch, American Continental League, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against an appropriation for the celebration of the so-called "One hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples," which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of Local Unions Nos. 526 and 1428, United Mine Workers of America, of Scranton; of Local Union No. 49, Feeders and Assistants' Union, of Scranton; of Local Union No. 218, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers, of Scranton; of Local Union No. 161, Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, of Scranton; and of Local Union No. 380, International Association of Machinists, of Scranton, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to make lawful certain agreements between employees and laborers and persons engaged in agriculture or horticulture, and to limit the issuing of injunctions in certain cases, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against Government ownership of telegraph and telephone lines, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Morocco Manufacturers' National Association, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the granting by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the increase in rates asked for by the eastern railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on Monday last I read a letter from Mr. W. S. McCarthy, manager of the Salt Lake Traffic Bureau, referring to a contemplated payment of a dividend previously declared by the Union Pacific Railroad to its common-stock holders. I am in receipt of a letter from Judge R. S. Lovett, the chairman of the executive board of the Union Pacific Railroad Co., referring to that subject, and I think it is due to Judge Lovett that this letter should be read into the RECORD, after which I shall make a brief comment upon one or two of its statements.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not be read at the desk. That is not the order of business under which the Senate is working at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I will present it later, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, it can be read now. The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will read it.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the President pro tempore.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the document? I did not hear it.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a letter from Judge Robert S. Lovett, chairman of the executive board of the Union Pacific Railway, referring to a letter of Mr. McCarthy, of Salt Lake City, which I read last Monday morning, and I think it is only fair——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the nature of it? What is it about?

Mr. THOMAS. It has reference to the dividend which has been declared but not yet paid to Union Pacific holders of Union Pacific common stock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think such long papers ought to be read into the RECORD unless Senators themselves are willing to read them.

Mr. THOMAS. I will read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has been given that the Secretary shall read the letter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given before the Senator rose.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Chair holds that the objection is too late, of course I am helpless.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course the Chair would not take advantage of the Senator if he intended to object. The Chair will entertain the objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rose to find out what the paper was, and as soon as I found what it was I objected.

Mr. THOMAS. I will read the letter.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The Chair asked if there was objection, and there being no objection to reading the letter the Secretary has to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question of reading the paper must be submitted to the Senate. A majority vote will decide it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand there is no objection to the paper going into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Connecticut to object to its going into the RECORD. That was a part of his objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I objected to the Secretary reading it. If the Senate want it printed in the RECORD, that is their business. I object.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator objects to the paper going into the RECORD at all?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I can not object to the Senator reading it or to any Senator reading any article he thinks of importance enough to stand up and read himself.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to say to the Senator from Connecticut that I should have read it immediately without sending it to the Secretary's desk except that I am suffering from a severe headache, and I thought I might be relieved to that extent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I do not want to ask the Senator to read it if he does not feel well, but I am going to object to making the RECORD an omnium gatherum for all sorts of general miscellaneous information.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator permit me to read only that part which I deem pertinent to what I wish to say, and then incorporate it into the RECORD?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly. I want to relieve the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator very much in view of my physical condition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All right.

Mr. THOMAS. The part of the letter which I will read is as follows:

It is true that in 1901 the Union Pacific Railroad Co. issued $100,000,000, face value, of bonds, known as its first-lien 4 per cent convertible gold bonds, convertible at the option of the holders into common stock at par until May 1, 1906, and that part of this issue, namely, about $42,000,000, was used for the acquisition of $75,000,000, par value, of Southern Pacific Co. stock. The fundamental error upon which Mr. McCarthy's entire criticism is constructed is that these bonds are still outstanding. The fact is that they were all retired in 1906; $99,450,000 of the bonds were converted into an equal amount of common stock and the remaining $550,000 were called for redemption and paid. The cause of this misunderstanding is probably that the company has now outstanding part of an entirely different issue of convertible bonds made in 1907, known as its "20-year 4 per cent convertible gold bonds," of which some $73,000,000, face value, were originally issued and all but $26,835,000 of which have been converted into common stock.

Another part of the letter is as follows:

It would be manifestly unfair to the stockholders and disadvantageous to the company to redeem any of the outstanding funded indebtedness at a premium. Many of the outstanding bond issues, including all those bearing a high rate of interest, are not subject to redemption, and these can be retired, if at all, only by the payment of an unreasonably high premium. Those issues which are subject to redemption are redeemable only at specified prices in excess of par. The bonds which are expressly subject to redemption are all bonds bearing rates of interest lower than the rate at which railroad bonds can now be sold. The retirement of bonds under such circumstances would involve an unjustifiable waste of surplus and great injustice to stockholders.

Mr. President, I have but very little familiarity with railroad finance and methods of stock and bond issues and their exchange for each other, but, as far as I am capable of judging, the situation of affairs as outlined by the chairman of the executive committee seems graver from the public viewpoint than it was represented to be by Mr. McCarthy. A bond issue of $100,000,000 authorized by the Legislature of Utah to be used for the purchase for a control of the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. was so used. By subsequent judicial decree the purchase by the Union Pacific Co. of the Southern Pacific interest was formally set aside as unlawful, and the interest of the Union Pacific in the Southern Pacific Co. was required to be sold. This interest was disposed of partly by sale and partly by exchange for the stock of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Now, it appears, Mr. President, that this bond issue, the proceeds of which are represented by this subsequent sale of the Southern Pacific interest, has been converted into common stock, and thereby made a perpetual capital liability against the Union Pacific Railroad Co. Mr. McCarthy's criticism was that the proceeds of the sale of this Southern Pacific stock should go to liquidating the bond issue the proceeds of which had been used for the purpose originally of acquiring that interest, but it seems——

Mr. KENYON. I would like to hear the Senator very much. I ask for order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. THOMAS. It now appears that at some time this bond issue was exchanged for common stock. Hence the position of the company is that in utilizing this fund for the payment of a dividend it is acting upon absolutely legitimate lines, and no doubt it is, but the criticism which Mr. McCarthy makes is more than emphasized by the situation of affairs as revealed by this letter. It is worse than the charge made by Mr. McCarthy, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests to me, because here is a perpetual, continual liability represented by $100,000,000 of capital stock which has but one excuse for its existence, and that is their exchange for $100,000,000 bond issue, the purpose of which by the court has been declared to be unlawful. So it seems to me that the criticism made by Mr. McCarthy is more than justified.

Now, a single word with reference to the extract I read from the latter part of this letter. It has reference to what Judge Lovett declares to be an unfairness to the stockholders and a disadvantage to the company to redeem any of the outstanding bonds with this money at a premium. Instead of being an injustice to the stockholders and a disadvantage to the company, I assert, Mr. President, that it would be a distinct advantage to the stockholders and a distinct benefit to the company by thus retiring $100,000,000 of its capital liability instead of dividing the fund among the stockholders, to say nothing of its resulting benefit to the communities served by the company. Suppose the premium is paid. When that is contrasted with the annual interest charge of these bonds the ultimate benefit is distinctly to the advantage of the company, to the benefit of the stockholders, and, what is of far greater importance, to the benefit and advantage of the patrons of the road, upon whose custom and business the road is dependent for its prosperity and its dividends.

Mr. President, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in further criticism of this matter. I want to add that my criticism is entirely impersonal. I have the highest respect for Judge Lovett, whom I never met, but who has won his present prominent position as head of one of the greatest railroad systems in the world by the sheer force of merit and ability. I have no doubt that the Union Pacific's method of finance has been along the line recognized as proper and legitimate, but these methods are the basis of much just public complaint and which make the people look askance at railroad requests for permission to increase their charges for the transportation of freight, the withholding of which is said to be working so much injustice to them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. Mr. President, I think that Mr. McCarthy is entitled to the thanks of the American public for calling our attention to this matter and giving us an opportunity to bring the attention of the country to it through the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can the Senator from Colorado tell us what the outstanding bonds of the Union Pacific Railway Co. amount to?

Mr. THOMAS. I think that this letter contains in part the information. I have the information, but not with me. I will try to give it to the Senator from Utah in full later.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator asks to print the letter in full, does he not?

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the Senator from Connecticut was willing that the letter should be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I said I did not want to compel the Senator, who was not feeling well, to read the letter.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to express my thanks to the Senator from Connecticut for his courtesy.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But I mean to reassert my objection whenever these long documents are attempted to be printed in the RECORD. Anything that is not worth being read here is not worth being printed.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.,
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
165 Broadway, New York, April 18, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your remarks in the Senate on Monday, based upon letters of Mr. W. S. McCarthy to you, dated April 1 and April 4, 1914, concerning the extra dividend recently declared by this company upon its common stock.

Mr. McCarthy's denunciation of the action of this company is based primarily upon an absolutely erroneous understanding of the facts, and, secondarily, upon an entire ignorance or disregard of the principles of law and accounting affecting the declaration of dividends. Such uninformed criticism I should ordinarily ignore, but when made in the United States Senate I do not feel at liberty to permit the grave injustice involved therein to be suffered by the company without protest.

It is true that in 1901 the Union Pacific Railroad Co. issued $100,000,000, face value, of bonds known as its first lien 4 per cent convertible gold bonds, convertible at the option of the holders into common stock at par until May 1, 1906, and that part of this issue, namely, about $42,000,000 was used for the acquisition of $75,000,000, par value, of Southern Pacific Co. stock. The fundamental error upon which Mr. McCarthy's entire criticism is constructed is that these bonds are still outstanding. The fact is that they were all retired in 1906. Ninety-nine million four hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the bonds were converted into an equal amount of common stock and the remaining $550,000 were called for redemption and paid. The cause of this misunderstanding is probably that the company has now outstanding part of an entirely different issue of convertible bonds made in 1907, known as its "20-year 4 per cent convertible gold bonds," of which some $73,000,000, face value, were originally issued, and all but $26,835,000 of which have been converted into common stock.

The extra dividend declaration was not a consequence of the decree in the Government suit requiring the company to dispose of its holding of Southern Pacific Co. stock. The dividend consists of $3 in cash, $12, par value, in Baltimore & Ohio preferred stock, and $22.50, par value, in Baltimore & Ohio common stock upon each share of Union Pacific common stock outstanding at the close of the books on March 2. It was determined at the same time to reduce the regular common-stock dividend rate to 8 per cent after the payment of the extra dividend. This extra dividend is merely a partial distribution of accumulated surplus profits. The board of directors ordered that the amount of cash and Baltimore & Ohio stock distributed pursuant to the dividend should be charged to profit and loss account. The Union Pacific System on June 30, 1913, had unappropriated accumulated surplus profits, appearing as a credit balance to its profit and loss account, of $151,153,386. This balance of accumulated profits is derived in part from net operating revenues, in part from income from investments and miscellaneous income, in part from a profit of some $58,000,000 realized on the sale of Northern Securities, Northern Pacific, and Great Northern stocks in 1905 and subsequent years in excess of cost, and from other profits of a miscellaneous character. The existence of so large an accumulated surplus is, of course, the result of the practice which the company has followed of not distributing each year in regular dividends the entire surplus income or other profit realized during the year. The aggregate equivalent of this extra dividend might have been paid out in regular dividends during past years by an increase of the rate of the regular common-stock dividend.

Upon the common stock outstanding on March 2, 1914, the dividend involves about $74,000,000 in cash and Baltimore & Ohio stock, taking the Baltimore & Ohio stock at $80 per share for the preferred and $92 for the common, its prevailing market value at the time of the dividend declaration. As this dividend does not result in the appropriation of one-half the accumulated surplus profits, it is obvious that a dividend of this amount might have been declared at any time during several years past. There has been more or less agitation for years, as is well known, for a distribution of the company's accumulated profits.

Having accumulated surplus profits sufficient for the payment of this dividend, it was immaterial from a legal or accounting standpoint whether the dividend should be paid in cash or in property. The company had ample cash resources to have enabled it to pay the dividend entirely in cash. But for various reasons of policy it was thought preferable to retain the cash resources and disburse the greater part of the dividend in Baltimore & Ohio stock.

Under the law as long settled any excess of assets over capital stock and liabilities constitutes profit available for dividends. It is quite immaterial what funds or other assets are distributed as a dividend if the amount does not exceed the amount of profit available for dividends. In selecting Baltimore & Ohio stock for this dividend the board of directors thought their action, in view of the very considerable proportion of the entire stock of the Baltimore & Ohio held by this company, would be entirely consistent with the policy of the Government and receive general commendation.

The company held $28,480,000 of Baltimore & Ohio preferred and $53,607,800 of Baltimore & Ohio common. About one-half of this stock, namely, $21,273,600 of the preferred and $21,273,600 of the common stock, was acquired in July, 1913, under the decree in the Government suit in exchange for $38,202,400 of Southern Pacific stock. The remainder of the Baltimore & Ohio stock had been owned since 1906, when it was purchased as a part of the reinvestment of funds realized from the sale of a large amount of Northern Securities, Northern Pacific, and Great Northern stocks theretofore owned. The balance of the Southern Pacific stock remaining after the exchange of a part of the holding for Baltimore & Ohio stock, as above stated, was disposed of under the decree of the court for cash, realizing some $80,000,000. Neither the Baltimore & Ohio stock nor the cash realized upon the disposition of the Southern Pacific stock has affected the profit and loss account up to the present time, for the exact amount of profit realized from the Southern Pacific stock transaction has not yet been ascertained, and therefore has not been credited to profit and loss. The balance to the credit of profit and loss at the time of the declaration of the dividend is therefore precisely what it was on June 30, 1913, before any of the Southern Pacific stock was sold or exchanged, subject only to some additional credits to profit and loss representing current surplus income between June 30, 1913, and the date of the dividend.

Mr. McCarthy overlooks the fact that every dividend payment must, under the law and under correct principles of corporate accounting, leave assets sufficient to represent the entire outstanding capital stock and to pay off all liabilities of whatever character. It is fundamental that dividends which impair the capital stock are unlawful and render the directors personally liable. The result of this principle is that even if Mr. McCarthy were correct in his belief that the $100,000,000 of bonds issued in 1901 were still outstanding, it would be absolutely immaterial upon the question of the right to pay this or any other dividend whether the $100,000,000 of bonds continued outstanding or were redeemed before the dividend was paid. The balance sheet of the Union Pacific system as of June 30, 1913, showed total assets of $902,713,934, and total liabilities (including capital stock and $50,344,886 of reserve funds) of $751,560,547. The surplus assets were therefore over $151,000,000, corresponding, of course, with accumulated surplus appearing as the credit balance of the profit and loss account.

It seems to be implied in Mr McCarthy's letters that the regular dividend payments of 10 per cent per annum made in recent years on the Union Pacific common stock are from the operation of the railroads it owns. The Union Pacific has not paid and could not pay a regular dividend upon its common stock at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from its railroad-operating revenue alone. That rate has been made possible only by reason of the large amount of income received by way of dividends and interest on stocks and bonds held as investments. The income realized exclusively from interest and dividends upon investments and sources other than from operation of its railroads has amounted since, and including the fiscal year 1907, to the following sums:

1907. Income other than from its railroads (equivalent to 5.87 per cent on common stock)	$11,587,018
1908. Income other than from its railroads (equivalent to 8.19 per cent on common stock)	16,782,457
1909. Income other than from its railroads (equivalent to 8.9 per cent on common stock)	18,110,481
1910. Income other than from its railroads (equivalent to 9.01 per cent on common stock)	19,890,469
1911. Income other than from its railroads (equivalent to 8.49 per cent on common stock)	18,658,168
1912. Income other than from its railroads (equivalent to 8.63 per cent on common stock)	18,949,098
1913. Income other than from its railroads (equivalent to 8.23 per cent on common stock)	19,207,971

Thus, since the fiscal year 1907, during which the 10 per cent dividend rate was established, the company could have paid more than 8 per cent without using a dollar from its railroad operations.

Furthermore, a large part of the additional common and preferred stock of this company issued since the reorganization was issued, dollar for dollar, in exchange for securities of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co. and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Co., then outstanding in the hands of the public, and resulted in bringing the properties of those companies into the exclusive ownership of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. The balance of the additional stock issues by this company does not equal the actual expenditures made since the reorganization for construction of new lines, double-tracking, and other additions and betterments. The aggregate interest paid on funded debt of the system in the hands of the public is now about $14,200,000 per annum, and there has been no year since 1907 when the dividends and interest realized from investment securities have not exceeded the entire annual interest payment on the funded debt.

It would be manifestly unfair to the stockholders and disadvantageous to the company to redeem any of the outstanding funded indebtedness at a premium. Many of the outstanding bond issues, including all those bearing a high rate of interest, are not subject to redemption, and these can be retired, if at all, only by the payment of an unreasonably high premium. Those issues which are subject to redemption are redeemable only at specified prices in excess of par. The bonds which are expressly subject to redemption are all bonds bearing rates of interest lower than the rate at which railroad bonds can now be sold. The retirement of bonds under such circumstances would involve an unjustifiable waste of surplus and great injustice to stockholders.

The suggestion might be made that the capital stock should be reduced. Such action could not be effected under the statutes governing this corporation except by vote of the requisite majority of the stockholders, and would involve the pro rata surrender of stock by every stockholder, over 23,000 in number. Obviously no stockholder would give the necessary assent unless he were to receive his proportionate share of the entire present surplus in addition to the par amount of the stock surrendered by him for reduction. Even these terms would probably be thought by most stockholders unjust to them and an unwise weakening of the company.

The litigation pending in the courts of this State with reference to the extra dividend does not attack the legality of the dividend from any standpoint, but is litigation brought in behalf of preferred stockholders seeking an adjudication which will relieve them from the 4 per cent dividend limitation in the charter and enable them to share with the common stockholders in any distribution of accumulated surplus profits. I believe that all the figures and statements mentioned herein relating to matters up to June 30, 1913, can be verified from the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Union Pacific has been at all times honestly and conservatively financed. Such an attack as that of Mr. McCarthy, especially when given sanction and authority by quotation in the United States Senate, is not merely an abstract injustice but operates to the actual injury of the company's reputation for honest financing and its credit among the security holders and financial public here and abroad, upon whose confidence the company's ability to improve its properties and build new lines is dependent. I earnestly hope, therefore, that you will to the extent of your ability correct the injustice to which you have unintentionally contributed.

Respectfully, yours, R. S. LOVETT.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado another question. As I understand—I want to see whether or not my understanding is correct—the Union Pacific Railroad Co. owns a considerable number of shares of the Southern Pacific Railway Co. stock, which it was ordered to dispose of?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It disposed of that stock in the Southern Pacific by an exchange for Baltimore & Ohio Railroad stock?

Mr. THOMAS. In part.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In part; and I understand that the distribution to its stockholders consisted of this Baltimore & Ohio stock——

Mr. THOMAS. In part.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And some cash?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The cash, as I am informed, amounting to about six or seven million dollars, and the remainder of the $79,000,000 distributed consisted of Baltimore & Ohio stock?

Mr. THOMAS. The cash is $3 a share, as Mr. Lovett says in his letter. The total amount of it is probably stated with correctness by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Approximately it is six or seven million dollars in cash and seventy-odd million dollars in Baltimore & Ohio stock.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. I supposed the Senator from Colorado was through.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought the Senator from Minnesota wished to ask me a question. I yield the floor to him.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I want to be recognized and to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to the suggestion—I am heartily in accord with his purpose—that it is utterly useless to undertake the task he is undertaking, because every single time objection is made it has to yield to the personal equation. There is but one thing that will stop the filling up of our RECORD, and that is for each Senator, acting for himself, to refrain from making these requests.

Mr. WEST. I think that is right.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am very glad that the Senator suggests that degree of self-control and moderation. I have tried not to lay myself liable to making a garbage heap of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I think should be an official report of what is said and done on this floor and not a receptacle for the surplus material that can be scissored out of all the mess of printed publications that are doing so much damage in this country.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. At the request of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], I move to take up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I did not understand the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ruled that the conference report to which the Senator from Tennessee referred could not be taken up at this time.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I understand this is a matter of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a matter of privilege only as to presentation.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. The conference report has been presented heretofore, and I supposed it would be in order to move its consideration at this time.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5036) authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians, residing on the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, to submit claims to the Court of Claims, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 439) thereon.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 586) providing for homestead and desert land entries for such persons as shall have lost, forfeited, or abandoned their former entries, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 441) thereon.

IMPORTATION OF CONVICT-MADE GOODS.

Mr. REED. On March 2 I reported from the Committee on Manufactures the bill (S. 4161) to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in whole or in part by convict, pauper, or detained labor, or made in whole or in part from materials which have been made in whole or in part or in any manner manipulated by convict or prison labor, and at that time I submitted a report (No. 306) thereon. I now ask leave to submit a supplemental report to accompany the bill, and ask that it may be printed as part 2 of the original report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and printed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 13985) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La., and I submit a report (No. 440) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

REVISION OF THE PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred the bill (S. 825) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, having had the same under consideration, I am directed by that committee to submit a report (No. 438) accompanied by a bill (S. 5340) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications in lieu of the bill heretofore referred to that committee.

The bill provides for a complete revision of the printing laws and reforms in the methods of printing and distribution of Government publications, and proposes economies in the Government printing estimated at $860,000 per annum. The committee has been at work on the bill for a number of months and considers it means important legislation calling for early action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely desire to make a brief statement in relation to the bill just reported from the Committee on Printing by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I have not had the time to look up the precedents to see whether such a thing has ever been done before in the Senate of the United States. The bill, in my opinion, should have been reported as a substitute for Senate bill 825 instead of in lieu thereof. The chairman of the committee reports from the committee a bill without a number in lieu of a bill heretofore referred to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. A bill with a number.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; a bill with a number. I am not going to object to-day to the consideration of the bill, and perhaps will not do so at any time. I have been very deeply interested in this question, and from the work I have done upon the subject matter I know as well as any man can know that the printing laws ought to be codified and revised. We have had the subject matter up for nearly six years, and this bill, in substance—of course amendments have been made to it—passed this body a year or two ago, but it failed in the other House because of the fact that they had no time in which to discuss it before adjournment. This procedure may be regular; it may be allowed under the rule, but a new question is presented, which has just come to my attention, and I have not yet had time to look into it. The first clause of Rule XXV provides:

> The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

I do not know whether the words "or otherwise" have ever been ruled upon in this body as to what is their real meaning. I suppose they cover action taken by committees other than in reporting bills. In this case there was a bill referred to the Committee on Printing, and the Senator from Florida now reports from that committee an original bill in lieu of the bill previously referred to it. So that it appears that the bill now reported by the Senator from Florida has never been to the committee. Of course if the Senator desires to introduce a new bill word for word and eliminate the bill that was introduced by me, being Senate bill No. 825, so that my name will not be connected with it at all, the proper procedure, it seems to me, would have been to introduce this bill to-day, have it referred to the committee, and on to-morrow report it out regularly and have it take a regular number.

But I am not going to ask for a ruling on the question. I do not care how we get the legislation if we can only get it, and I know that the legislation is necessary in order to save a great deal of waste that is going on through our present printing laws.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am surprised the Senator from Utah has never known of a procedure of this kind; I am surprised that any question is suggested even as to the regularity of this procedure. A bill was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Utah known as Senate bill 825. That bill, like the bill reported by the committee, follows the general lines of a bill which passed the Senate a year or more ago, as the Senator has said. That bill was referred to the Committee on Printing, and the Committee on Printing, instead of reporting it back with numerous amendments, or instead of reporting a substitute, having been already at work on the bill itself and having the right to pursue its work in framing the bill, takes the bill introduced by the Senator from Utah into consideration, uses it, gets the benefit of it, and then recommend the reporting back of a bill in lieu of the one introduced by the Senator from Utah.

That effectively disposes of that bill and brings before the Senate a new bill in the form of a substitute, the committee bill, in lieu of the bill which was referred to the committee in due course. That procedure is perfectly proper. The committee reports "not otherwise," but reports a bill; it reports by bill; it reports its own bill in lieu of the bill which had been referred to it. That is proper under Rule XXV, to which the Senator has referred, which reads:

> The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The committee in this instance reports by bill; it reports on Senate bill 825 by bill, by reporting its own bill.

The precedents on the subject are perfectly plain and complete. If the Senator will take the trouble to look at the "Style Book for Bills and Resolutions," revised in November, 1910, page 11, he will see:

> SUBSTITUTE BILL OR JOINT RESOLUTION REPORTED FROM A COMMITTEE.
>
> NOTE.—Use the words "in lieu of" in preference to the words "as a substitute for."

We are told here by the authority on the subject that we are to use the words "in lieu of" instead of the words "as a substitute for."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. In a moment. For instance, reading further from the style book it is stated:

> Mr. Kean, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported, in lieu of S. 35, 36, and 37—
>
> In lieu of three bills—
>
> the following bill, which was read twice and placed on the calendar.

That is the procedure under the authority adopted by the Senate.

Then, in Gilfry's Precedents of the United States Senate, page 483, I find this:

> 5. Reporting a new bill in lieu of an original.
>
> (Standing and select committees, to whom have been committed bills or certain subject matters, frequently report new bills in lieu of original bills, or, in compliance with an order of the Senate, an entirely original bill.)

Then it recites the following example:

> A SENATOR. Mr. President——
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from——
>
> The SENATOR. I am directed by the committee to whom was referred (cite number and title)—
>
> Precisely as has been done in this instance—> to report a new bill and ask that the same be read the first and second times and placed on the calendar.
>
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from ———, from the Committee on ———, reports the following bill, which will be read by the clerk.
>
> (The Secretary reads the title of the new bill.)
>
> The PRESIDING OFFICER. First reading of the bill. This bill will be considered as having been read the second time and will be placed on the calendar.

That is the precedent; there is nothing irregular about this report at all. The bill which the Senator introduced has been considered by the committee, and instead of reporting it with amendments or reporting a substitute for it the committee reports an original bill in lieu of it. It is perfectly regular and in accordance with the precedents of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my only purpose in calling the attention of the Senate to this matter is that this is a committee report. It has no number. It never has been given a number, and I do not know whether under the rules a committee report of a bill receives the number following that of the last bill introduced by an individual Senator or not.

Mr. FLETCHER. It takes a number now.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator what number it will take.

Mr. FLETCHER. It takes a number in the regular order, precisely as if it were introduced this morning. Senate bill No. 825 should be indefinitely postponed. I desire to have it acted upon in that way. This bill is reported in lieu of Senate bill 825.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair is wholly unable to draw any distinction in parliamentary meaning between a bill introduced in lieu of another and a bill introduced as a substitute for another. The Chair assumes that there is some technical distinction between the two terms, but it does not occur to the Chair at this time. As the discussion is purely academic at this point, the Chair will announce that its being continued further will depend upon unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Just one word and then I shall have finished.

I think myself the Chair is right in the statement just made. If this bill had been reported to the Senate from the committee as a substitute, it would have been Senate bill 825, and it would go to the calendar as Senate bill 825. When it was reported to the Senate it would have been considered as Senate bill 825, and considered as a substitute, and would have carried that number. That is the only difference between the Senator and myself.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is largely a question of style. The authority is that the way we have followed is the preferable one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was diverted by the discussion and enlightened as well and omitted to cause the bill reported from the Committee on Printing to be considered, read the first and second times, and placed on the calendar. That will be done, unless there is objection.

COLORADO VOLUNTARY CAVALRY REGIMENT.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to have read the dispatch which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that a telegram sent up by him may be read. Unless there is objection, that will be done. The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

DENVER, COLO., April 21, 1914.

United States Senator JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Washington, D. C.:

The United Spanish War Veteran Voluntary Cavalry Regiment of Colorado is fully organized and ready for the field on short notice. If you will use your influence to help us get out as one of the first voluntary cavalry regiments, all men in the regiment will appreciate it.

Lieut. Col. JAMES BULGER,
Savoy Hotel.

Mr. SMOOT. I think telegrams of that kind ought to go to the Secretary of War. There is no use in sending them to the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would suggest that the telegram be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE. Anyone of us could introduce a dozen or a hundred such telegrams——

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be.

Mr. PENROSE. If we desired to exploit the gallantry of regiments and volunteer companies and fire companies in our different States. I have communications from a number of fire companies that want to enlist which I could present to the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator has taken more time than was taken in the reading of the dispatch.

Mr. PENROSE. It is beneath the dignity of the Senate, and an infliction upon the business and the patience of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not impeach the dignity of the Senate to have volunteer service tendered by men who have already fought in the service of the United States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in view of the telegram from Colorado just read, I should like to have placed in the RECORD the telegram which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ALBIA, IOWA, April 21, 1914.

WILLIAM S. KENYON,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Striking miners, their wives and children, murdered by coal company guards at Ludlow, Colo. Miners tent colony burned to ground. Five men, four women, and at least five children killed. In name of humanity and for preservation of our American liberties we urge and demand as American citizens that the Federal Government protect our fellow mine workers and their families in Colorado. This butchery instigated by the moneyed power operating in Colorado is a disgrace to our American civilization.

W. H. RODGERS,
President Iowa Miners.
JOHN GAY,
Secretary-Treasurer Iowa Miners.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question in regard to this particular matter, if the Senator will yield.

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to say to the Senator that within the last 24 hours I have received from the local unions in my own State a number of telegrams in regard to this very subject matter. I have been somewhat at a loss as to what course to pursue or what to do with the telegrams. I should like to ask the Senator if he has any particular course in view in dealing with this particular matter? If so, I should be very glad to join the Senator in it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have been in the same troubled condition of mind that the Senator from Wyoming is in relation to this matter. I do not see what we can do; but I felt that inasmuch as these telegrams were presented as to the patriotism of Colorado, I ought to call attention to the fact that there were some matters in their own State needing attention. I also call the attention of the Senator to the article in the New York Times of this morning in reference to this very matter. The condition seems to be perfectly horrible, but I am at a loss to know what we can do.

I wish there were something we could do. The House has made an investigation. There is no need for the Senate to duplicate the investigation. Another significant fact is that one of these concerns, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., or the company controlling it, has certain of its bonds on deposit with the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, with which the Department of Agriculture of our Government seems to have been in partnership for some little time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I think I have said all I care to say.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say, inasmuch as it concerns the State which I in part represent here, that for the last two or three days and again this morning I have been in receipt of telegrams of similar import. I have also read the article in the New York Times this morning to which the Senator from Iowa now has reference. If half the things therein narrated are true—and I am not disposed to doubt them—the conditions are horrible, and they seem to parallel some of the atrocities that are reported from Mexico.

Since the receipt of these telegrams both my colleague and myself have been deeply stirred and very much concerned; and we have consulted with a view of ascertaining whether it were possible, through Federal agencies, to do anything in that direction. But we perceive no avenue for Federal activity or interference.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that I, too, have received a great many telegrams of the same nature, from Wyoming and from Colorado. While I am speaking on the subject, before I ask a question of the Senator from Colorado, I will say that I have also received several telegrams from those who wish to volunteer and go to war if we are to have war, among them prominent men of the States of Wyoming and Colorado.

Respecting the telegrams from mining men, I wish to ask if the executive of the State of Colorado is not in the city at the present time?

Mr. THOMAS. The chief executive of the State is here. My colleague and I have been in consultation with him this morning. After he fulfills his duties here this afternoon, he is to take the first train back to his home, and I sincerely pray that by his presence something may be done through State agencies for the amelioration, if it be possible, of this unfortunate situation.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I am holding all of those dispatches with the hope that I may get into communication with the executive of Colorado, with the House committee now engaged in investigating the Colorado situation, and with representatives of the miners.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall endeavor to bring the governor in contact with the Senator some time this afternoon.

Mr. WARREN. The situation ought to be relieved, of course; and it must have prayerful and the earliest possible attention and relief.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have not called this matter to the attention of the Senate, because I have feared that because of my somewhat meager information as to details I might possibly say something that would reflect grave injustice upon some man, some official, or some interest; and that I want to refrain from doing. The situation seems to be a horrible one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado, since I presume he has perhaps made more investigation than any of the rest of us in regard to that particular subject, whether the committee recently appointed by the House to investigate this matter reached any conclusions as to what the power of Congress was, and, if so, as to what ought to be done?

Mr. THOMAS. I have not been advised that they have reached a conclusion as to that point. I understand they have reached some conclusions of fact, but whether they have made an official report or not I do not know definitely. I think, however, they have not.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will say that they have not, or had not a couple of days ago.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator for the information, because it corresponds with my own impression.

Mr. NORRIS. It occurs to me that since the House committee have made what I presume is a full and complete investigation of the subject, it would be well in some way to call the attention of that committee to the subsequent events that have been transpiring, with a view of having them take the whole matter into consideration.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, one Member of the Colorado delegation is a member of the committee which has charge of this investigation, and he also has been the recipient of a number of telegrams concerning the subject, so I am sure that he is giving it personal attention.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to know if these two telegrams, the one referred to by the Senator from Colorado and the other referred to by the Senator from Iowa, can not be used in some way to supplement each other. There seems to be a desire on the part of some of the young men there to satiate their thirst in Mexican gore; and there is also a demand for protection from certain citizens of Colorado, calling upon the strong arm of the Government. Is it not possible that the contingent that appeal here for some such work to do might satiate their thirst within the confines of Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am too deeply impressed with the sober realities of existing conditions, both in Mexico and in my State, to make definite reply to the suggestion. Moreover, Mr. President, my heart is too full this morning of the human side of things. I fear, however, that the keen desire of so many young men to serve their country in the war now upon us will find full satisfaction before many more months have rolled around; and I also greatly fear that unless society can in some manner reconcile these terrible conflicts between capital and labor, Mexico is not the only country that will be torn by internecine strife. The conditions in my State are such as to fill me with apprehension for the immediate future.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if my recollection is at fault that these striking miners in Colorado in the first instance shot down a marshal and some other citizens of the State.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, last February when I was in Colorado I was told that the number of homicides up to that time totaled 138. I have no doubt, Mr. President, the history of this unhappy strife is replete with many murders and many crimes. I do not know. I think when this committee investigation shall have been given to the public we will then be able to speak fairly and do injustice to no man, at least I hope so.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I think we ought to remain calm until the investigation in another body is completed. It was only a little while ago that the same class of telegrams were coming here concerning the strike in Michigan, and an investigation was made. The miners have gone back to work and everything is at peace there, as I understand.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the reason why I have introduced no telegrams, but no man having possession of his faculties and actuated by the common instincts of humanity can read without emotion the incineration of women and children in their little cots and tents out upon the plains.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course we all sympathize with the Senator in that feeling, yet, as I suggested——

Mr. THOMAS. We ought at least to have some human feeling concerning it.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I suggested, an investigation is in progress, and I really think we ought, so far as the Senate is concerned, to patiently await the conclusions the committee will reach. The debate this morning will be helpful, for the reason——

Mr. THOMAS. I think we should remain as calm as possible at all times, but war is war and suffering is suffering, whether it be within the limits of the United States or out of the limits of the United States, and when we consider that the suffering falls so frequently upon the innocent, what wonder, Mr. President, that we look upon the future with more or less foreboding. I am no pessimist; I am inclined to take an optimistic view of things; but I feel that many of the conditions which are prevalent in this country demand summary rectification. There should be less of feeling, less of passion, less of recrimination; there should be an earnest recognition of grave social maladjustments and a patriotic desire to meet upon some plane where one side shall not say, "I demand everything," and the other side shall not say, "I demand everything," but in the interests of society, for the future of our children and of our children's children, try to reach some broad plane of human activity where the poor man and the rich man may each enjoy the opportunities which we proclaim as the heritage of American institutions, whether all shall take advantage of them or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I sympathize, as we all do, with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Colorado. Yet the fact is that telegrams are coming here from the State of Iowa depicting a condition in the State of Colorado which is alarming. If those allegations are true, a distinguished committee of another body, I apprehend, largely in sympathy with the working people, is investigating this matter, and I do feel that we ought to possess ourselves patiently until that investigation is completed. I have no doubt that committee will report a remedy, if the conditions that are pictured here to-day actually exist.

Mr. THOMAS. I should not have mentioned the subject at all, had it not been intruded on the attention of the Senate. I want to add the further fact that these are new conditions, new tragedies which have occurred since the committee left the field of its examination and returned to Washington.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WEST. How can we act here without coming in conflict with State authority in Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know, Mr. President. There are many difficulties which confront us here. I have no remedy to suggest from a Federal standpoint now.

Mr. McCUMBER. I perhaps did not put my proposition aptly so as to be understood by the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I fully understood it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Here are two telegrams, one of them coming ostensibly from a company of State militia seeking employment for service under the Government in foreign lands. Immediately follows a demand from citizens of that State for Federal aid to prevent crimes being committed in that State. I can not understand why the State company of militia that are seeking to be called into service, or any other company of the State, could not find employment in that State.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are no State militia referred to here. It is a company that is not organized, but ready to be organized, and they simply tender their services. It seems to me that it is a proper matter for the United States Senate to consider.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask for the regular order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood that they were State troops.

Mr. THOMAS. My colleague has not fully answered the question of the Senator from North Dakota. The militia was mobilized several months ago. They had been, I understand, in control down there until recently, but they were withdrawn a couple of weeks ago, and this perhaps is one of the consequences.

Mr. GALLINGER. The regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. If there are no further reports of committees, the introduction of bills is in order.

FOREST-PRODUCTS EXPOSITIONS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, there has been pending on the calendar for some days a joint resolution reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to appropriate $10,000 for the purpose of having the Secretary of Agriculture make an exhibit of forestry at a big exposition of forest products to be held at Chicago, Ill., April 30 to May 9, and in New York from May 21 to May 30. I am exceedingly anxious to call it up. It is a matter of very great importance to all the people of the United States who are interested in forest products, and unless we can act on it now it will be entirely too late.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Louisiana if he would not let the routine morning business be completed?

Mr. RANSDELL. I thought the routine morning business had been completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I certainly will not object if the Senator will wait until after the routine morning business has been completed.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what has become of the special order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. LODGE. If the Chair will allow me, in the absence of the President pro tempore, the Senate has been making some new parliamentary law in regard to special orders. It has been held by the Senate on an appeal from a ruling of the Chair that a special order has not only privilege for the day fixed in the order but a continuing privilege for every day at the time fixed in the order. Under that ruling the special order, the radium bill, should appear before the Senate automatically at 1 o'clock. It got out of sight somehow yesterday. What I want to inquire, as a matter of order, is whether it is not only clothed with a continuing privilege to come up every day at 1 o'clock, but clothed with the privilege to come up some days at 5 minutes past 1, to come up every other day, and to come up when it feels like it, according to what its condition is.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know exactly what power it has to come up of itself, but under the rule which has been established by the Senate we have a right to call it up.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary condition as he is now advised about it. That particular bill was made a special order, and the ruling indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts was properly made. Since that time the Chair is advised that a motion was made to proceed to the consideration of some other bill, which had the effect of displacing it, and the Vice President, then presiding, sent the bill to the calendar under Rule VIII. That is an answer to the question of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I do not understand that the Vice President ruled that it lost its place, but that it could recur to-day again like Banquo's ghost.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho is correct as to the original ruling of the Chair, but the Chair did decide afterwards that the ruling was an error, and therefore he changed the ruling by sending the bill to the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. BORAH. Then I am in error, and withdraw my request for its consideration.

Mr. WALSH. That disposition of the bill is quite objectionable to me, and I seize this opportunity to give notice that immediately upon the conclusion of the unfinished business I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4405.

Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. Are there further bills and joint resolutions? If not, concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5335) granting an increase of pension to Peter Smith; and

A bill (S. 5336) granting an increase of pension to Theodore D. Swain; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 5337) for the relief of the legal representatives of James M. Brabston and Roche H. Brabston; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 5338) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Curd (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 5339) granting a pension to Charles E. Mann (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 5341) to provide for publication by national banking associations and savings banks and trust companies of the reports of resources and liabilities and dividends required to be made by them to the Comptroller of the Currency; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 5342) to correct the military record of John L. McGregor;

A bill (S. 5343) to correct the military record of Samuel Snyder;

A bill (S. 5344) to correct the military record of Adolph F. Hitchler;

A bill (S. 5345) authorizing the appointment of George R. Snowden on the retired list of the United States Army; and

A bill (S. 5346) to grant an honorable discharge to S. A. Moser; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5347) to correct the naval record of Charles R. Snyder; and

A bill (S. 5348) to remove from the record of John M. Reber, late second lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps, the charge of dismissal and grant him an honorable discharge; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 5349) for the relief of S. H. Evans; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A bill (S. 5350) to amend section 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," enacted on the 29th day of June, 1906; to the Committee on Immigration.

A bill (S. 5351) for the relief of William A. Hutson; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 5352) granting a pension to Theodore S. Fenn;

A bill (S. 5353) granting an increase of pension to A. Y. Whitmoyer;

A bill (S. 5354) granting a pension to Moses P. Osborn;

A bill (S. 5355) granting an increase of pension to Hartman K. Wismer;

A bill (S. 5356) granting an increase of pension to John H. Seagrist;

A bill (S. 5357) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Kerr;

A bill (S. 5358) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Wolfe;

A bill (S. 5359) granting an increase of pension to Charles Breyer;

A bill (S. 5360) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Cramer;

A bill (S. 5361) granting an increase of pension to Charles Stackhouse;

A bill (S. 5362) granting a pension to Mrs. E. L. D. Palmer;

A bill (S. 5363) granting a pension to Mary E. Burg;

A bill (S. 5364) granting an increase of pension to James P. Hayman;

A bill (S. 5365) granting a pension to Joseph Frick;

A bill (S. 5366) to restore the name of Lewis H. Lee to the pension rolls (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5367) granting an increase of pension to John H. Condon (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5368) granting an increase of pension to Percy H. White (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5369) granting an increase of pension to George D. Hamm (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5370) granting an increase of pension to Samuel S. Feehrer (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5371) granting an increase of pension to David Spealman (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5372) granting an increase of pension to Julia Sitz (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5373) granting an increase of pension to John M. Mishler (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5374) granting a pension to Mary C. Weirick (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 5375) granting an increase of pension to Ella P. Hines (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 5376) granting an increase of pension to James G. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the executive assistant in seed distribution, Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture, from $2,500 to $2,750 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the Agriculture appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the secretary, Civil Service Commission, from $2,500 per annum to $3,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. JONES. I have an article here prepared by former United States District Judge George Donworth, of Seattle, Wash., discussing the legal proposition as to whether or not the exemption of coastwise shipping from the payment of tolls is a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. This is a very carefully prepared article and from a purely legal standpoint by a man whom I know to be a very able lawyer. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think I must object to printed arguments being published in the RECORD. I have no objection to its being printed as a public document.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say to the Senator that this article will be put in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection whatever to the Senator reading it into the RECORD, but I shall insist that all editorials and magazine articles and literature of that character shall not be stuffed into the RECORD, no matter which side they are on.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that this is not that kind of an article. It is not from a magazine or anything of the sort.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand it is a perfectly legitimate legal opinion. There will be thousands of them, and they will be accessible to those who want them if printed as public documents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can treat it as a petition or memorial and have it filed and take it up and read it if he sees fit at a future time. At this time it is out of order.

Mr. JONES. I shall take an opportune time in which to read it.

TREATY-MAKING POWER UNDER THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. WORKS. I have here a very interesting and instructive article on the treaty-making power under the Constitution of the United States by Henry St. George Tucker, of Lexington, Va. I ask to have it printed as a public document, and for that purpose ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

THE PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that some days ago I offered a resolution which went over. I desire to ask that it may go over until to-morrow without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and Senate resolution 342 will go over without prejudice. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN MEXICO (H. DOC. NO. 916).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In view of the exigency created by the existing situation in the Republic of Mexico I recommend the immediate passage by the Congress of an act appropriating $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be placed at the disposal of the President for the purpose of providing means to bring to their homes in the United States American citizens now in Mexico.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 22, 1914.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 1657. An act providing for second homestead and desert-land entries; and

H. R. 9829. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain unused remnant lands to the board of county commissioners of Caddo County, Okla., for fairground and park purposes.

H. R. 10845. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of surplus agricultural lands and timber on surplus timberlands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash., was read twice by its title and, on motion of Mr. JONES, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 12463. An act to authorize the withdrawal of lands on the Quinaielt Reservation, in the State of Washington, for lighthouse purposes, was read twice by its title and, on motion of Mr. NELSON, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 14242. An act to increase the limit of cost for the erection and completion of the United States Federal building at Harrisburg, Pa., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

COLORADO VOLUNTARY CAVALRY REGIMENT.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this morning the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] sent to the desk a telegram which reads:

The United Spanish War Veteran Voluntary Cavalry Regiment of Colorado is fully organized and ready for the field on short notice. If you will use your influence to help us get out as one of the first voluntary cavalry regiments all men in the regiment will appreciate it.

Lieut. Col. JAMES BULGER.

When that telegram was read in the Senate the following colloquy occurred between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]:

Mr. PENROSE. Any of us could introduce a dozen or a hundred such telegrams——

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be.

Mr. PENROSE. If we wanted to exploit the gallantry of regiments and volunteer companies and fire companies in our different States. I have communications from a lot of fire companies that want to enlist which I could present to the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator has taken more time than the reading of the dispatch took.

Mr. PENROSE. It is beneath the dignity of the Senate, and an infliction upon the business of the Senate and the patience of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not impeach the dignity of the Senate to have volunteer service tendered by men who have already fought in the service of the United States.

Mr. President, when the dignity of the Senate of the United States can be impaired, impeached, or insulted by the offer of American citizens to tender their lives in the service of their country, the Senate will have become a very different body than it is at present. "Impeach the dignity of the Senate" for American citizens to offer to leave their homes, to shoulder their guns, to march through torrid climes, to expose themselves to the ravages of disease, to brave death upon the battle field, to enter hospitals of pain, to submit themselves to the surgeon's knife, that the honor of our flag and the integrity of our Republic may be maintained!

That is a strange sentiment, Mr. President, to be uttered upon the floor of the Senate of the United States. I could understand an Army contractor who expects to grow wealthy by trading and trafficking in the human blood about to be poured forth in war, standing with a sneer upon his lips for the men who are going out to do the fighting, but I am unable to understand how a Senator of the United States can declare that the dignity of the Senate of the United States "has been impeached" by this offer of loyal citizens to serve beneath the old battle flag of the Republic.

For my part I hope the telegrams will continue to come. I hope that the loyal hearts and loyal souls of American citizens will still continue to lay before the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives the tender of their services, their fortunes, and their lives; I regret that upon the Senate records there is to be found what can not be regarded as other than an insult and sneer at these men who have offered their services. They are, Mr. President, the same kind of men who in every crisis in American history have given their lives to preserve our country.

I have no doubt when Washington first set up the banner of liberty in this country there were those who sneered at the men in homespun and coonskin caps and buckskin habiliments who were marching out to die that this country might be free. I have no doubt as those men passed along the street it was beneath the dignity of some men to stand and even salute them as they passed. I have no doubt that in the War of 1812 we had then men who regarded it as beneath the dignity of an American gentleman to recognize the valor of an American Volunteer soldier. I have no doubt that in the war of sixty-one and in the war we once had with Mexico there were men who thought that the soldier really offended against their dignity when he marched by and let his shadow fall athwart their greatness. But so far as I am concerned a sentiment of the kind expressed here to-day shall not be uttered in the Senate of the United States unless my protest follows.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have listened with a sense of philosophical complacency to the mock heroics and cheap demagoguery which we have just heard in this body. I make due allowances for the nervous tension which gentlemen have been under through the night session until 4 o'clock this morning, and therefore I do not look for the clearest intellectual processes to-day. I can understand the extraordinary bravery which suddenly exhibits itself after a year and a half of patient "watchful waiting," during which women have been assaulted, American citizens have been murdered, and American property despoiled, without the slightest evidence of sympathy from our Secretary of State or from the national administration or, so far as I know, from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], or from any other Senator on the Democratic side of the Chamber. Now that some 15 battleships have been concentrated upon a defenseless port and their enormous artillery has been trained upon a naked and distressed people it is fitting that the kind of bravery that seems to fill the breast of the Senator from Missouri should suddenly find voice.

When the cheap effort was made to exploit not even a militia company, but a volunteer cavalry troop, from the State of Colorado, I detected, Mr. President, at once an effort of the Democracy to make paltry political capital out of a wicked and unnecessary war, and I thought that at the very first evidence of such intention I would scotch it and call the attention of the country to it. I said it was against the dignity of the Senate; and so it was, because anything that is impertinent or not pertinent to our duties and jurisdiction is against the dignity of the Senate, and communications such as this should have been referred to the War Department for such examination as they might deem fit and proper. Perhaps this gallant company might require a physical examination; perhaps their avoirdupois, the extent of their girth, the shortness of their wind, might disqualify many of them from marching over the torrid plains of Mexico and might render them better fitted for those more elevated climatic conditions where they could cope with the anarchy and the homicides which prevail more immediately in their midst and have shocked the whole country.

The Senator from Missouri exhibits remarkable bravery. Fifteen million unprotected Mexicans, torn by strife, with enough troubles to excite our sympathy rather than our bloodthirsty and revengeful passions, have aroused him to a military ardor which tempts me to hope, but not believe, that he may be enlisted and found in the front rank of the combatants.

Mr. President, I believe that there never was a war entered into by any civilized nation which has been the culmination of more incompetent and ignorant management of diplomatic affairs than is the war in which our Government finds itself to-day. We have sunk to a depth which has invited the contempt of every civilized nation in the world, a contempt for the management of our State Department, and for even the management and conduct of the great Executive office of the Presidency. Americans can not go abroad under any foreign flag without a feeling of shame at the depths to which we have permitted our country to sink, and it will require more than the mock heroics, several thousand miles from the scene of trouble, even if it be in the precincts of this Chamber, to restore American self-respect and the respect which once attached to us on the part of every foreign nation.

To-day, in Mexico, the American citizen is hated and despised, and naturally so, because our Government has treated with absolute indifference his murder and his spoliation. I suggest that the Senator from Missouri drop his mock heroic attitude, that he prayerfully consider the condition into which his party has fallen, and endeavor to cooperate with this side of the Chamber in correcting at the earliest possible moment the dreadful errors and mistakes which ignorance, incompetence, and lack of patriotism have brought the country.

Mr. REED and Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it may be, as the Senator from Pennsylvania insinuates, that the volunteers of Colorado need a physical examination, but I apprehend that their patriotism would stand a better test in any examination than would that of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Senator from Pennsylvania is tracking history. Once before we had a war with Mexico, and at that time we had "tories" in Congress. There was one who said that if he "were a Mexican, as he was an American," he would "welcome the American troops with bloody hands to hospitable graves." The electorate of his State buried the author of that statement in a political grave that was disgraced by even his political corpse.

The Senator from Pennsylvania upbraids the President and the Secretary of State and he upbraids me—and I feel honored by being placed in that company—because, he says, that "for some months violence and murder have gone unchecked in Mexico." Now that a step has been taken, we find the Senator is the first to raise his voice and protest against the very thing he said should have occurred months ago.

We will upon this side of the Chamber join the Republican side in defense of our flag; we will, upon this side of the Chamber, join the Republican side in emulation and generous rivalry in all patriotic enterprises, but there is no man on this side who will join the Senator from Pennsylvania in insulting men who offer their services to their country.

Mr. President, of course, in the opinion of the Senator, it is "cheap demagoguery" to stand and protest that a tender of body and limb and life to the country "should not be met with a sneer or turned aside with an insult." Of course that is "cheap demagoguery"; but to utter the insult when safe within the confines of the Senate Chamber, when protected by senatorial privilege, is the highest type of courage and the supremest manifestation of patriotism! That is not demagoguery. Ah, no, Mr. President, demagoguery at least yields some recognition to the decencies of life. It is only when a man has lost all sense of the decencies of life that he can insult the brave who offer their services in defense of their country.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to make an announcement at this time. There is nothing before the Senate to which the debate that is now going on is relevant, and the Chair feels that he has been at fault in allowing the debate thus far to proceed without unanimous consent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to say a few words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will forbear for a moment, the Chair will recognize him. The Chair feels that after having recognized the Senator from Colorado, and that Senator shall have concluded his remarks, the debate should not proceed further without unanimous consent. The Chair feels that he is responsible for the situation that has been brought about, in view of the fact that he is not enforcing the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state, Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is only speaking by unanimous consent, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true, although formal unanimous consent has not been given as yet.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to ask unanimous consent to say a few words myself after the Senator from Colorado concludes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will proceed, and the Chair will be governed by conditions as they appear after the Senator from Colorado shall have concluded.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the situation is that I presented a telegram, which came from members of an organization in the State of Colorado that has seen service in the Spanish-American War. It was a manifestation of patriotism which I felt would be of service if it were read to the Senate of the United States. It was then that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] rose and made his sarcastic remarks with respect to the matter. I answered him in simply a word, and expected the matter to be no longer before the Senate; but since he has made the statement which he did make a few moments ago, it seems to me that there ought to be some response to his observations.

The Senator from Pennsylvania referred to the fact that this was "a wicked and an unnecessary war." Those were the words that he used with relation to the resolution which passed during last night's session; and yet, Mr. President, we find upon examining the RECORD of the proceedings of the Senate on yesterday, that the Senator from Pennsylvania not only voted for the passage of that resolution which backs the President of the United States in the action that he had taken at that time and which he is taking now, but the Senator voted for still more radical action upon the part of the President of the United States in advocating the Lodge amendment offered to the joint resolution. Thus the attitude which the Senator places himself in is that while he is talking about "a wicked and an unnecessary war" we find that his very record of less than 10 hours ago was to the effect of approving that very action upon the part of the President, and not only that, but of approving the still more radical action which was proposed by another Senator in the form of a substitute.

Mr. President, it seems to me when a Senator rises here and refers to the incident of the presentation of a simple telegram—which I supposed would meet with no opposition whatever and would not be criticized in the slightest degree—and goes into the question and talks about the United States Government training the guns of 15 battleships upon a defenseless city, that in view of the record which was made by him not more than 10 hours ago, he has developed an inconsistency and has taken a position of which he himself should be ashamed.

We are in a condition, Mr. President, that calls for patriotism, and when these men, knowing the sacrifice that they might have to make, volunteered their services to the Union, it seems to me that everyone in this body should respect them and should commend them. Making slurring remarks about the "watchful waiting" policy of the United States in this matter, the object of which was to avoid war and to avoid bloodshed, and referring to those matters in connection with a little telegram, it seems to me, is unworthy of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think my position is entirely logical, and far more logical than that of the majority in this Chamber. On August 21, 1913, I offered a resolution, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate recognizes that it has been the policy of the United States to maintain the Monroe doctrine throughout the Western Hemisphere, and that the United States acknowledges its responsibility under he Monroe doctrine; that there exists in the Republic of Mexico a condition of internal warfare and lawlessness, and that a continuation of these present conditions, accompanied by the destruction of property, may involve international complications and intervention by European nations.

Resolved, That it is believed by the Senate that it is the first duty of the Government of the United States to protect the lives and property of its citizens at home and abroad, and that such protection in the Republic of Mexico will lessen the prevailing lawlessness and destruction of lives and property, and the danger and complications that might arise from European intervention in the Republic of Mexico.

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate it is not the policy of the Government of the United States to recognize, aid, or assist any faction or factions in the Republic of Mexico.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to take such steps as are necessary to place a sufficient number of troops, as a constabulary, in the Republic of Mexico wherever and at such points as in his opinion they may be needed properly to police and to protect American citizens and their property; and it is hereby declared that such employment of troops for the protection of the lives and property of American citizens is not made with any intent that such policing and protection shall be construed as an act of hostility or unfriendliness toward the Mexican nation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PENROSE. For what purpose?

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask a question as to the parliamentary situation.

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I understand, Mr. President, that this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The Chair permitted the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to proceed without knowing just exactly what was the particular matter to which he wished to address himself——

Mr. PENROSE. I am raising a question of personal privilege now.

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] said things that more or less involved the attitude of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and the Chair thought that it was nothing more than fair that the Senator from Pennsylvania should be permitted an opportunity to make a reply. The Chair was the offender, and in order to correct that mistake he made or the error into which he had fallen, the Chair announced that after the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], who had some relation to the question, had been heard he would not recognize other Senators unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to object at this time, but I give notice that when the Senator from Pennsylvania concludes I shall object to any further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take the sense of the Senate about it at the proper time. The Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will be very brief. I hesitated yesterday to take the time of the Senate in debating the resolution justifying the President in his course, because I did not want to take up the time of the Senate and was willing to have the resolution passed as promptly as possible; but the uncalled-for provocation which I have had has given me the opportunity to say a few words, and I am very glad to take advantage of that opportunity.

I offered that resolution which I have had read, Mr. President, on August 21, 1913. I never could get action on it, never could get the committee to consider it, and never could get any intimation from the chairman of the committee as to whether anything would be done for the relief of the situation, either through this resolution or through some other resolution. Later on I submitted an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill, then pending in the House of Representatives, appropriating $25,000,000 for the purpose of protecting American lives and property and the lives and property of foreigners in the Republic of Mexico. No action was taken upon that resolution by the majority in this body. In the meanwhile the son-in-law of the lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania was being held up by the Villa forces and threatened with execution unless he submitted to blackmail, and a large number of other Pennsylvanians were despoiled in their property and jeopardized in their lives. For a long time I was utterly unable to get even a sympathetic audience at the Department of State. Finally, after consultation with the then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and some of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, I was able to get the State Department to send a telegram to Carranza or to any other person claiming civil or military authority, advising them that they would be held personally responsible for any injury visited upon the Pennsylvanians in whom I was interested; but this was obtained only after the most urgent solicitation and the greatest effort.

From that time on it has been well known that there has been a contemptuous indifference exhibited toward Americans who have been assaulted or despoiled. The subject has not seemed in any way to interest the officials at present in charge of the American Government. Millions of dollars have been lost and, as the Senate knows, scores of lives have been sacrificed in this policy of "watchful waiting." It is almost incredible. I doubt whether in the history of civilization there has been exhibited such a callous indifference to a country's own citizens as has been shown by the American Government during the last year.

These facts are gradually becoming known to the American people. What more brutal exhibition ever was witnessed than the order calmly given by the Department of State to Americans in the Republic of Mexico that they should leave there on the first steamer, abandoning all their property, their relatives, their business ties and connections, and the environments of a lifetime, they being there with as much right as they had to be anywhere else, and properly looking to the United States for protection? The utmost callous indifference was exhibited, as thousands of business men in the United States know who have visited Washington and called at the White House and at the State Department and have gone away, many of them who were earnest supporters of the Democratic Party in the last election, vowing that never again would they by vote or influence support a party which exhibited such indifference to the fate of Americans in an adjoining Republic. They have been to see me and have talked to me and explained matters; but it has not been until recently that the newspapers of the country have seemed to awake to the situation or take the proper view of it. Now they have; and it remains to be seen whether this difficulty into which we have gotten shall be managed with sober common sense and without a display of blatant fervor and an effort to secure a meretricious glory which the experience of the past does not justify. I hope, with the cooperation of the Republicans, good sense in dealing with these complications will ultimately prevail.

Could there have been a worse record exhibited on the page of history than was made by the majority in the Senate yesterday in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when we saw the majority in this Chamber deliberately vote down an amendment which declared that the intervention of the President was to be justified to protect American citizens? The majority deliberately voted down that amendment to the resolution. The punctilio over the flag apparently was the paramount issue involved. The destruction and spoliation of all that the flag represented and waved over and symbolized and was meant to protect apparently did not appeal to the gentlemen of the majority. As one Senator said in the debate, the questions of life and property were insignificant and unworthy of consideration.

I do not agree with this view, Mr. President. No one has a higher respect or a more fervent loyalty than I have for the flag of our country. No one has been more loyal in helping the veterans and soldiers of our wars. No one admires and respects more highly the devoted chivalry which would lead the young men of the land to enlist in any war in which the country might be engaged. On this occasion, however, we are not supposed to be in war. The intention to be in war has been disavowed. It is supposed to be a continuation of the policy of "watchful waiting" with a little ammunition thrown in. If we are not in a state of war and not even in a state of effective blockade, whence the need of exploiting this extraordinary gallantry on the part of the cavalry of Denver, Colo.?

FOREST-PRODUCTS EXPOSITIONS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I renew the request I made a while ago and ask that we immediately consider House joint resolution 204, to appropriate $10,000 to enable the Agricultural Department to make exhibits at the forestry expositions to be held in Chicago and New York. The matter is of immense importance to every portion of the United States which has any forests, and I hope there will be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that there are two Senators who desire to be in the Chamber at the time the joint resolution is considered. Again I want to say that if we ever intend to get bills acted upon that are on the calendar, of just as much importance as the joint resolution for which the Senator has asked immediate consideration, we shall have to take them up in regular order. For that reason I object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I renew my request that the conference report on the Army appropriation bill may be taken from the table and considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to Rule XXVII, in explanation of the suggestion he made to the Senator from Tennessee when the matter was originally presented:

> The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing—

Then the rule proceeds—> and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

The presentation of the report of a committee of conference is a privileged matter. Whether or not the Senate will proceed to its consideration is not a privileged matter except as it may be made so by vote.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I understood that was the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. House bill 13453, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, the report has been printed, and I do not think it is necessary to have it read. I will make a brief statement in regard to it on behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

The amount of the Army bill as passed by the House was $94,190,577.16. The Senate has receded from certain amendments and the House has receded from some others, but there are several items which are now in disagreement, which are as follows:

Amendment No. 24. Pay of enlisted men	$1,221,758
Amendment No. 113. Subsistence of the Army	662,475
Amendment No. 121. Regular supplies	455,000
Amendment No. 123. Horses for Cavalry, etc	65,285
Amendment No. 137. Clothing, camp and garrison equipage	800,000
Amendment No. 161. Field artillery for Organized Militia	1,350,000
Amendment No. 164. Ammunition for field artillery for Organized Militia	2,000,000
Total	6,554,518

This makes a total increase by the Senate of $6,554,518, which is now in disagreement between the two Houses. The agreement on different items would increase the amount of the appropriation by $985,023.34. It is now my purpose to ask that the Senate adopt the conference report on the items in agreement, and I will then ask that the Senate insist upon its amendments in the case of the items still in disagreement, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. I venture to ask the Senator from Tennessee how many items there are in disagreement. Are they the items the Senator has enumerated?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. There are seven that are in disagreement, making a total increase in the appropriation of six and a half million dollars in round figures.

I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the partial report made by the committee of conference. Of course the whole report of the committee, as made up at the present time, will be involved in the motion.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement and ask for a further conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. DU PONT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 23, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 22, 1914.

(Continuation of the legislative day of April 21, 1914.)

The recess having expired at 10 o'clock a. m., the House was called to order by the Speaker.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Dow H. DRUKKER, the newly elected Member from the seventh district of New Jersey, is present, and I ask unanimous consent that he may be sworn in at once. There is no question in respect to his election and there is no contest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DRUKKER appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to wait for a message from the Senate. I do not think it is advisable to take up any intervening business. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection; accordingly (10 o'clock and 3 minutes a. m.) the House stood in recess for 10 minutes.

AFTER RECESS.

At 10.13 o'clock a. m., the recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing certain demands against Victoriano Huerta, requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the said joint resolution and amendments, and had appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MEXICO.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House joint resolution 251, justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States in enforcing demands against Victoriano Huerta, and ask that it be laid before the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House House joint resolution 251 with Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Strike out lines 1 to 8, inclusive, and insert:

"In view of the facts presented by the President of the United States in his address delivered to the Congress in joint session on the 20th day of April, 1914, with regard to certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States in Mexico: Be it

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demand for unequivocal amends for certain affronts and indignities committed against the United States.

"Be it further resolved, That the United States disclaims any hostility to the Mexican people or any purpose to make war upon Mexico."

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if he cares to discuss this motion?

Mr. MANN. I would like to have a minute or two.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a little time on this, say, five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that it is my purpose to move the previous question in a very few minutes?

Mr. MURDOCK. Why not do it now?

Mr. MANN. Our friend from Kansas wants to cut off debate, as usual.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield as much time as will be consumed on this side to the gentleman from Illinois, but I can not consent to yield any more time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean to say that he does not want to yield any time to anybody except to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will control the time on that side.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, is it in order for me to move the previous question?

Mr. MANN. It would not be in order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Kansas has not the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is apparent that now is not the time when we ought to engage in any discussion of this matter. I suggest to both sides of the House that we are in a situation in Mexico where it is not wise for us to discuss the matter further; but if agreeable to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] I will ask unanimous consent that there be 20 minutes of debate on this resolution—10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Oh, we want more time than that.

Mr. McKENZIE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] rise?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope that the gentleman who has control of this resolution will move the previous question at the earliest practical moment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why not do it now?

Mr. McKENZIE. The time for talking has gone by.

Mr. MANN. Then why is the gentleman talking?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, when I introduced the original resolution on last Monday I believed it was in the proper form to carry out the purposes outlined in the address of the President, which had just been delivered to the Congress, and I believe so now. The resolution in that form had the approval of the President. It subsequently received the approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and of this House by a vote of 337 to 37. [Applause.]

The Senate changed the form but not the substance of that resolution.

The House resolution justified the President in the employment of armed forces of the United States to enforce the demands for amends made upon Victoriano Huerta for affronts and indignities committed against this Government by Gen. Huerta and his representatives.

The Senate amendments contain a preamble referring to the facts presented by the President in his address, and resolves that he is justified in the employment of the armed forces of the United States to enforce his demands for amends for affronts and indignities committed against the United States, the affronts and indignities being those referred to in the President's address and which were committed by Victoriano Huerta and his representatives.

The original resolution made it clear that this country was not hostile to the Mexican people, and did not desire to make war with Mexico; the Senate amendment states this in so many words.

The substance of this resolution is therefore unchanged.

In this momentous hour and in the circumstances confronting this country, prompt action justifying and approving the course of the President is of the utmost importance, and it would be childish to quibble over the words of the resolution when the substance is the same. [Applause.] And this is the view of the President. [Applause.]

I fear an attempt has been made by gentlemen on the other side to make partisan capital of the present unfortunate situation between this country and Mexico. I hope gentlemen have exhausted their misguided efforts in that direction and that Democrats, Republicans, and Progressives alike will to-day give their approval to the Chief Executive of the Nation without a single dissent. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention of the gentleman to yield any more time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It is not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman intends to move the previous question at the end of the five minutes?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think I never have indulged in partisanship in this House on any affair touching our relations with foreign countries. This side of the House, in my opinion, has been extremely patient and loyal to the President during the last year and more, while the Mexican difficulties were under attempted solution. We have refrained from criticism of a policy which we did not believe in. Now the gentleman charges us with partisanship because we are opposed, at least some of us, to involving the country in a war out of which there can come no glory to the American people or to the American flag. The partisanship lies on the other side of the House, where, regardless of their beliefs, without regard to the facts, without consideration of the questions involved, they simply act as they are ordered to do by the President. I do not believe that we ought to engage in a war with Mexico at this time for the reasons which have been suggested by the President. I do not believe we are to gain glory for ourselves or glory for our flag. Take the resolution which is pending. It declares that it is not the intention to make war upon Mexico—a falsehood upon its face, which will be construed by the world as another American hypocritical pretension that while we actually engage in war we disclaim the responsibility for war. Mr. Speaker, if we pass the resolution we have entered upon war. Already we have fired upon and killed Mexican citizens. Already we have involved ourselves in a war in a way with Mexico. I believe that we ought to be patient enough to endeavor to secure peace. [Applause on the Republican side.] Gentlemen on the other side have frequently said that there could be no war with Mexico. I have believed that the watchful waiting policy of the President in the end was likely to involve us in war, but I have hoped and prayed and still hope that there may be a chance to prevent war. It is easy for gentlemen here in their seats, safe and secure from personal assault or danger, to talk about the glory of the flag and about war, but war is a reality. We, a great, powerful Nation, knowing the result of a war with Mexico, knowing that in the end we will succeed in the war, therefore should be more cautious about producing war, and I have been surprised that gentlemen in the House talk peace and vote for war. We only passed the Hensley resolution recently in the interest of peace, and before the ink is fairly dry upon the paper, without just reason, without sufficient negotiations, we propose to enter upon a bloody war, and the blood will rest upon your heads, not upon mine. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, for weeks Members on that side of the House have made speeches the effect of which would be to bring on war. The gentleman from Illinois never chided those gentlemen. As to who has appealed to partisanship on this question and has undertaken to make party capital out of it, I will let the country judge. [Applause.]

In the bitterness of the debate the President has been assailed and his motives impugned, but when the air clears these criticisms will be remembered only to the detriment of those who made them, and the President's patriotic action in this matter will add to his fame and to the honor and glory of his country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The President has come to the Congress in a crisis that affects the welfare of our people, the honor of the flag and of our uniform, and the glory of our country, and asks the united support of the legislative branch of the Government. Let him have it, so that the world may know that the American people to a man are standing behind their President. Let party be forgotten when the war banner may have to be unfurled. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendments to the joint resolution were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to adjourn so we may take up Calendar Wednesday at 12 o'clock. I understand the Speaker desires to wait in order to sign——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Can the Speaker sign an enrolled bill before it is messaged to the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Can the Speaker sign an enrolled bill before it has been messaged to the Senate that the House concurred in the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. The Chair never heard any question of that; never thought of it.

Mr. MANN. Nobody ever thought of it before?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I take it there is nothing in the rules that prevents a message to the Senate and an enrolled bill going to the Senate, both at the same time.

Mr. MANN. Well, there is a report of the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills before an enrolled bill can be signed. The Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills, constituted partly of Senators, can not find a bill truly enrolled until the Senate is informed by the House that it has concurred in the Senate amendment. However, I have no objection——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt but that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is technically correct.

Mr. MANN. There will be no trouble in signing the enrolled resolution on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. As to enrolled bills and resolutions, the Chair knows that it is not his business to attend to the enrolling, but when the Clerk sends one up here in proper form the Chair signs it.

Mr. MANN. It has to have a certificate with it.

The SPEAKER. It has to have a certificate with it.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker has the right to sign it on Calendar Wednesday.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he desires to raise any question about the matter, I am willing to move to adjourn, as the Speaker can sign the bill at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 22, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. William Couden, of Indianapolis, Ind., offered the following prayer:

O God, our help in ages past, our hope in years to come, look Thou upon us from Thy sapphire throne, consider our needs and weakness and continue to claim us as Thine forever. Leave us not, neither forsake us, O God of our salvation. Guide our Nation in the new experience that opens before us. Comfort those upon whom the cost of honor and justice falls most heavily. And in whatever we do help us as a people to identify ourselves completely with Thy truth and Thy love as revealed unto us in Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, April 21, 1914, was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 251. Joint resolution justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill and joint resolution:

H. R. 10138. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. J. Res. 251. Joint resolution justifying the employment by the President of the armed forces of the United States.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. FINLEY, for 10 days, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. FINLEY. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINE STRIKE IN COLORADO.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. On what subject?

Mr. FOSTER. On the subject of the mine strike in Colorado.

Mr. MANN. Will there be any other requests to speak on the same subject?

Mr. FOSTER. Not that I know of.

Mr. MADDEN. Has it any connection with the investigation that the gentleman's committee has made?

Mr. FOSTER. Partly so. It is not a report.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the committee made its report?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MURDOCK. There was a very serious affair out there yesterday. Is the gentleman going to address himself to that?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, this House authorized the Committee on Mines and Mining to proceed to Colorado to investigate a strike which had been in existence there since the 23d of last September. After spending four weeks in the State of Colorado investigating the causes of that strike, we came back to Washington and have had the testimony printed and are now waiting for briefs to be filed. After returning to the city of Washington the hearings on that strike have been printed, and the committee is now awaiting, as I said, the time for the attorneys, both for the operators and the miners, to file their briefs, so that we may make a report to the House. Therefore I do not care at this time to express any opinion upon that strike. But I did desire at this time, in view of what took place there on last Monday, to say a word to you on the conditions that exist in the southern Colorado coal fields at this time.

On last Monday there occurred a battle between the strikers and the militia out at a place called Ludlow, where there are several hundred miners located in a tent colony. As you may know, when these strikers left the coal camps they were compelled to go to some place to live with their families. Upon nearly all this property owned by the mining company there is not a single, solitary house within those camps that a miner is permitted to own or permitted to rent, except by the consent of the company, and when the miners quit the employ of the company they were then compelled to move out to some other place. They did so, and organized this colony at Ludlow, which they occupied up until last Monday, when this battle came on, as described in the daily press and in telegrams that have come to me from that section of the State.

I am informed that the battle raged for 14 hours, and during that time the tent colony was fired on. In it were men, women, and children. The women, many of them, escaped to seek refuge in a place not far distant from the camp, in a gully, as we call it, or in an arroyo, as they call it in Colorado. Some of them took refuge in trenches that were dug for their protection in this colony, and when the tents all took fire there were 4 women and 11 children, as reported, who lost their lives through asphyxiation down in those trenches where they had gone for protection from the firing of the guns.

I do not know, nor is it known, now how many women and children other than those that have been discovered lost their lives in that tent colony when the fire took place, nor how many have been killed. But by the press dispatches of this morning, in view of the fact that in Vera Cruz, in a foreign country, there occurred yesterday a battle which has startled our people, where 4 marines were killed and 21 injured, I call your attention to the fact that within our own borders in the United States, where these helpless women and children have been fired upon, there should have occurred the death of at least 4 women and 11 children, so far known. I regret, my friends, that in the State of Colorado—a State which its citizens should be proud of, a State which all the people should be proud of—there should occur these disturbances which produced the death of those innocent women and children of that Commonwealth.

A short time ago, at another station not far from Ludlow, there occurred at what was called the Forbes tent colony a murder, and then to restore order, as was declared, the State Militia of Colorado went there and tore down the tents of these striking miners. Those tents were not as we understand tents to be generally, but they were those people's homes, and the State militia piled them up there and compelled those people to seek other quarters, God only knows where.

Has it come to pass in this country of ours, my friends, that we shall be called upon to read in the daily press of the firing of State militia upon the innocent women and children of that community? I have here many telegrams and a good deal of literature showing this to be the case in the State of Colorado. I regret, my friends, that such should be the case, and I hope that when this report shall have been made we may be able to solve in some way the problem of these industrial disturbances that cause loss of life and loss of money to our people.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has the gentleman from Illinois any suggestion to make as to how we can avert further disasters of the kind to which he has referred?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say in answer to the gentleman that of course I realize that the Federal Government is limited in reference to matters within the States; and yet there might come a time when the constitutional rights of the citizens of a State, which are guaranteed to everyone, should be preserved by the Federal Government.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Is it or is it not a fact that some of these men in those tents, who are now striking miners, went there originally some years ago as strikebreakers?

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to the gentleman's question, I will say that 10 years ago there occurred a strike in the coal fields of Colorado. Large numbers of men were imported from other sections of the country to take the places of the strikers, and many of those men who were strikebreakers 10 years ago are the strikers of to-day. That is true. So I call the attention of the House to the enormity of this condition which exists in a sister State. May we not learn that human rights are above property rights, and that we may be able to settle these troubles that arise between employer and employee in a peaceful way, doing justice to both sides.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Thus far the gentleman has not stated any cause for the battle on Monday. Which side opened the firing?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I am not prepared to tell you who opened fire in this particular battle. The miners claim that the militia of the State of Colorado undertook—that they did try and that it was their intention—to drive the striking miners out of the State, and one of the ways in which they proposed to do that was by firing upon the tent colony, destroying it, and compelling those people to leave that section of the country, as they did in the Forbes tent colony. The militia claim that the strikers fired upon them. I am unprepared to tell you this morning all the facts in the case, as to just the particular way in which this battle was brought on.

Mr. CULLOP. Then, as I understand, the gentleman is not able to state now which side opened fire?

Mr. FOSTER. No; but we do know from other reports coming from that section of the country that those soldiers did fire upon this tent colony, and this tent colony was consumed by fire, and there went out the lives of 4 women and 11 innocent children, besides the number of mine strikers and militia who have been killed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the gentleman desire any more time?

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AVIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. FOSTER. I do.

Mr. AVIS. I want to ask whether this committee, under the authority heretofore given, would have the right to investigate this trouble and make a report to this House and recommend some action?

Mr. FOSTER. I think possibly the committee has that right.

Mr. AVIS. If it has not that right, does not the gentleman think it would be wise to ask the House for it?

Mr. FOSTER. In view of all that has occurred there, I think it wise that this battle should be investigated—that we should know the facts in the case, if it is possible to find out.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman referred to the authority of the Federal Government. The Federal Constitution guarantees to each State a republican form of government. Does the gentleman mean that there is not a republican form of government in Colorado?

Mr. FOSTER. I beg to state to my friend from Ohio that I would not like to give an opinion upon that question at this time. In view of not having made our report, I would not like to express an opinion; but in view of the enormity of the trouble that has occurred out there in the last few days, I felt it my duty to say this to the House of Representatives and to the country in order that it might awaken some feeling somewhere, so that this industrial disturbance might be stopped and the loss of life might cease.

Mr. KINDEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. KINDEL. I will ask the gentleman how he got his information in this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my friend from Colorado that I have information from the head officials of the miners. I have also information through another source—from a bulletin coming from the press in that State; for instance, from the Pueblo Chieftian, which is a leading newspaper of that section of the country.

Mr. KINDEL. The reason I ask is that the reports I saw yesterday in the Washington papers stated that there were 13 killed—11 strikers, 1 militiaman, and 1 noncombatant.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there were more than that. We do not know yet exactly how many men have been killed in the tent colony at Ludlow—how many women and children have been suffocated and burned there. When we think of such occurrences it is enough to awaken in us a pity and shame that in this fair land of ours that such should be the case. Whichever side may be to blame, it should not exist. We boast of our civilization, and yet there seems to be no way to settle these disputes without loss of life and destruction of property. Let us all do what we can to bring about a better feeling and a closer relation of both employer and employee, that when differences do come that they may be settled peacefully.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman submit to another question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think it would be best for the committee to investigate this matter definitely, and after the committee have gotten the facts in some other way than by telegram, and by actual investigation, either by going out there or by some other definite and reliable method, then report to the House on the matter?

Mr. FOSTER. The committee will endeavor to report these disturbances to the House in so far as they are able to secure the facts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for three minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. In view of my connection with this investigation I felt that I ought to come to the House and relate these circumstances, so that my statement may go into the RECORD and the attention of the House be called to it, and, if possible, the attention of the country be brought to view the enormity of this condition.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know that the gentleman wishes to express an opinion at this time, before he makes his report, but I should like to know whether he believes the militia are acting impartially in the enforcement of the law and the protection of life in that country?

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the gentleman this illustration, which is undisputed. I would not mention it except that it has been undisputed. A man who was a mine guard previous to the militia being called into the strike region of Colorado testified on the witness stand in the city of Denver—and he was at the time dressed in the uniform of a State militiaman—that he was a mine guard, belonging to Troop B, of Denver, and being paid at the rate of $3 a day by the mine operators, and was also drawing a salary from the State as a militiaman. You can draw your own conclusions whether that man was an impartial militiaman or not.

Mr. AVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. AVIS. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks there is anything the House can do at this time without investigation or formal report upon that matter?

Mr. FOSTER. I think not, unless Congress should see fit—and I am not saying whether or not the President or whether or not Congress should have the right—to call upon the governor of the State of Colorado to preserve order and protect the lives of innocent people.

Mr. COOPER. Is the gentleman prepared to say about what proportion of the militia—what number of them in that vicinity—were in the employ of the mine operators or receiving pay from the mine operators?

Mr. FOSTER. I can not; it was testified to by men not now in the militia or in the employ of the mine operators that that was the case. I mention this one case because it was undisputed.

Mr. COOPER. He was in uniform when he testified?

Mr. FOSTER. He was in uniform when he testified.

Mr. PLATT. Was the man an officer and responsible, or was it under orders?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure; I can not answer positively.

Mr. PLATT. It makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. FOSTER. He may have been a petty officer, but my recollection is he was a private.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining in a position to give any opinion as to the probable time when a report will be made on the Colorado and Michigan investigations?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know anything about the Michigan investigation. The gentleman from Colorado, the chairman of the subcommittee, might be able to tell the gentleman something about the Michigan investigation. Let me say that it was agreed between the attorneys for the miners and the operators before we left Denver, Colo., that after all the testimony had been printed they should have 20 days in which to file briefs before the report was made. So that we are anxiously waiting and hoping that we may be able to make a report soon to this House. I can not tell what the report is going to be, because I do not know. The committee has not taken up the matter, but we hope to make a report at the earliest possible date after the attorneys file their briefs.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, I asked the question because the gentleman is chairman of the full committee, and if I may be permitted I should like to express the hope that inasmuch as the investigation was by reason of very serious charges affecting the good name of the State, and the investigation has been completed, it seems to me that it is only fair to the State and the people and its officials that the report should be made as promptly as possible.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt it will be made as soon as we are able to do it. We are dealing with attorneys out there who desire time to file briefs, and we gave them the time.

Under leave to extend my remarks I am printing some press notices and telegrams which have been forwarded to me.

[From the Washington Times, April 22, 1914.]

THIRTY-THREE DEAD IN LUDLOW MINE BATTLE.

DENVER, April 22.

Details of the 14-hour battle at Ludlow were revealed in dispatches from Trinidad and official reports to Acting Gov. Fitzgerald from militiamen in the field to-day.

Thirty-three known dead, more than two-thirds of whom are women and children; a score missing; and more than a score wounded—this is the toll of the battle.

With arms ready, both sides to-day awaited a resumption of the blood-letting. Several companies of militia, recruited from mine guards employed by the coal operators, are encamped at Ludlow, and to-day are preparing for a machine-gun sortie from their position along the Colorado and Southern railroad. On the surrounding hills, sheltered by rocks and bowlders, 400 strikers awaited their coming.

John McLennan, district president of the United Miners, to-day telegraphed the Red Cross from Trinidad to be ready to render aid.

[From the Washington Post, April 22, 1914.]

TWENTY-SIX MINE WAR TOLL—FOUR WOMEN AND 13 CHILDREN PERISH IN FIRE—DEATH LIST MAY REACH 50—NEW BATTLE BETWEEN MINERS AND TROOPS IS FEARED—FAMILIES OF STRIKERS, HIDDEN IN TRENCHES DURING 14 HOURS' FIGHTING AT LUDLOW CAMP MONDAY, VICTIMS OF BLAZE AS MACHINE GUNS RAKE COLONY—SPECIAL SESSION OF LEGISLATURE MAY BE CALLED TO DEAL WITH SITUATION.

TRINADAD, COLO., April 21.

With 7 identified dead in Trinidad morgues and a list of 18 missing and reported dead, the toll of yesterday's battle between State troops and strikers at and near Ludlow probably will exceed 25. Among those reported missing are 4 women and 13 children, who are believed to have been suffocated by the fire that destroyed the strikers' tents at the close of yesterday's fight. Earlier in the day they had hidden in trenches in the colony to escape the rifle and machine gun fire that raked the tents. The list of known injured consists of three soldiers, who were brought to Trinidad to-night

TRINIDAD HORROR-STRICKEN.

Trinidad is horror-stricken to-night by reports of the number of women, children, and noncombatants who lost their lives in yesterday's fight and in the fire that followed.

"It is horrible," said John McLennan, president of district 15, United Mine Workers of America, who is in charge at local headquarters.

"They were trapped without a chance of escape."

"The bodies of 2 women and 10 children were seen in one trench," it was announced at the Ludlow military camp to-night. "God only knows how many yet will be found."

BLAMES STRIKERS FOR BATTLE.

Maj. Hamrock to-night reiterated the statement that the fighting was precipitated by a band of Greek strikers under Louis Tikas, who opened fire upon military tents at Ludlow. The soldiers were driven out of their camps by bullets, according to the officer.

The union officials issued no statement.

More than 200 women and children refugees from the burned colony are to-night being cared for in Trinidad.

FEAR NEW ATTACK.

A force of armed strikers estimated at 600 or more is intrenched in the hills north and east of the ruins of the tents. Two hundred militiamen under Maj. Hamrock, Capt. Carson, and Lieuts Linderfelt, Lawrence, and Chase are stationed in and about Ludlow.

Militiamen and strikers to-day professed fear of an attack should they appear to search for bodies among the ruins of the colony. Undertakers with a flag of truce left to-night to search for bodies.

A new supply of ammunition is said to have been received by both militiamen and strikers during the day. Extra sentries have been posted on both sides. The troops are said to be preparing to move on the men in the hills. The troops are in possession of four machine guns. The problem of food and water has become a serious one on both sides.

LIST OF KNOWN DEAD.

Besides those mentioned, others known to be dead are:

A. Martin, private, Company A, Denver; two foreign-born strikers, a brewery worker of Trinidad, Frank Snyder, aged 12, son of a striker, of Ludlow, and James Fyter.

Among those missing and reported dead are Charles Costa, a striker, of Ludlow, Mrs. Charles Costa and two children, Mrs. Frank Pedrino and two children, Mrs. Nick Melasovitch and seven children, and Mrs. Chevez and two children.

[From the Washington Star, April 21, 1914.]

TEN MEN KILLED IN MILITIA CLASH—NUMBER OF WOUNDED IN BATTLE WITH STRIKERS IN COLORADO UNKNOWN—SCENE OF DESOLATION AT THE LUDLOW COLONY—TWO SMALL CHILDREN REPORTED TO HAVE PERISHED IN BLAZE—QUIET NOW PREVAILS.

TRINIDAD, COLO., April 21.

Hundreds of armed strikers who yesterday fought for 14 hours with State troops in the Ludlow district had disappeared this morning and quiet prevailed in and about the strikers' demolished tent colony. The militiamen who opposed the strikers were in possession of the railroad tracks from the steel bridge to a point near the burned colony. Reenforcements from Lamar and Walsenburg swelled the number of soldiers on the grounds to 160.

The list of identified dead was increased to five, and it seemed certain that at least as many more fell in yesterday's fighting. The number of wounded is unknown.

The identified dead:

A. Martin, private, Company A, First Regiment, Denver.
Louis Tikas, leader of the Greek strikers, Ludlow colony.
Edward Fyler, secretary of the Ludlow Union.
Charles Costa, Aguilar Union leader.
Frank Snyder, aged 12.

An unconfirmed report was that two small children perished in the blaze that razed the colony at 9 o'clock last night, and the bodies of other strikers are said to be still lying on the field of battle.

DESOLATE SCENE PRESENTED.

The Ludlow colony presented a scene of death and desolation to-day, only four or five of the tents remaining standing. Soldiers declare that quantities of ammunition were exploded by the blaze that swept the colony during the night.

An unidentified man driving a horse attached to a light buggy dashed from the tents waving a white flag just after the fire started. When ordered to halt, he is said to have opened fire with a revolver and was killed by a return volley from the militia.

Yesterday's battle centered about the big trestle of the Colorado & Southeastern Railroad, and several dead were said to be lying along the tracks, behind which the strikers took refuge.

Throughout the day and intermittently during the night the fighting raged over an area of approximately 3 square miles, bounded on the west by Berwind and Hastings, on the east by Barnes Station, on the north by the Ludlow tent colony, and on the south by Rameyville. The battle field was completely isolated by the cutting of telegraph and telephone wires.

The fighting began early yesterday, when a militia detachment under Lieut. Linderfelt started to investigate the cause of firing near Cedar Hill. As the day progressed word of the clash reached officials, and a relief expedition consisting of 50 members of the newly organized Trinidad militia company was sent on a special train manned by J. H. Abrams, superintendent of the Colorado & Southeastern, with Master Mechanic Roach as engineer and Dispatcher Willis as fireman.

FOUND STRIKERS BARRICADED.

They detrained south of Ludlow and found the strikers barricaded in the pumping station. At dusk the strikers retreated along a gully back of the blazing tent colony, followed by the militia, who swept the valley with machine guns.

Maj. P. J. Hamrock spent the night strengthening the position of his men. A request was sent to Denver for additional supplies of ammunition.

With the arrival of Walsenburg and Lamar militia to-day Maj. Hamrock had approximately 175 men opposed to strikers variously estimated at from 400 to 800.

—

DENVER, COLO., April 21, 1914.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Striking miners and families shot and burned to death at Ludlow, Colo. Mine guards with machine guns riddled tents of striking miners and set fire to tent colony. Four men, three women, and seven children murdered. State not only failed to protect, but allows uniforms and ammunition of the Commonwealth to destroy the lives of the workers and their families. We shall be compelled to call on volunteers in the name of humanity to defend these helpless people unless something is done.

E. L. DOYLE, Secretary-Treasurer.

—

DENVER, COLO., April 21, 1914.

Hon. M. D. FOSTER, M. C.,
The Driscoll Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

We believe that yesterday's occurrences at Ludlow warrant further rigid congressional investigation here. We are informed that yesterday's battle occurred at Ludlow Station and tent colony, where many children, women, and union leaders, without warning, were mowed down by machine guns operating under orders of Linderfelt. If reports to us are confirmed, the facts, more than anything else which has preceded, should result in immediate Federal action and remedial legislation. The situation justifies a special presidential message to Congress.

E. P. COSTIGAN,
JAMES M. BREWSTER,
Counsel for Striking Miners before Congressional Committee.

—

TRINIDAD, COLO., April 21, 1914.

Congressman M. D. FOSTER,
Washington, D. C.:

Gunmen employed by mine owners caught helpless, unarmed, striking miners of Ludlow in trap yesterday morning. Burned tented city and shot down men, women, and children. No mercy was shown to either sex. Red Cross Society and society women of Trinidad doing all they can to relieve suffering and aid us, but situation is critical. Men, women, and children still in trap, and mine guards wearing uniforms of State are raking their ranks with eight machine guns.

JOHN MCLENNAN,
President District 15, United Mine Workers of America.

—

Telegram to Alva A. Swain, connected with the Chieftain, of Pueblo:

PUEBLO, COLO., April 21, 1914.

Latest and what seems to be reliable reports confirm story that Louie Greek started fight. Maj. Hamlock received letter from woman saying her husband was being held in camp and wanted to go back work. Said her husband wanted Louie Greek to see Maj. Hamlock; went to depot to see Louie, as Louie would not come to camp. Louie said no such man in camp. While talking, body of armed Greeks left tent colony in full view of Louie and Hamlock and marched off to one side. Hamlock said to Louie that did not look good. Louie said he would go over tell them to disarm and march back. Instead, went over and took charge of men; first firing came from Greeks directed at small squad men watering horses. Martin fell at first shot. This started whole fight. Seems to be no question about ammunition in tent of Lawson. Have had no denial of this yet from union officials. Said by some militia started fire; this they stoutly deny, and from what we gather of the fierceness of the fight they did not get close enough to do so. Some reports are fire was started by explosion of ammunition in Lawson tent. Others are that the inhabitants in hurry to get out upset stoves or lamps. This seems most likely, as firing on tent colony until after exit of most people not enough to explode stored ammunition. Lives lost in tent colony due to women and children hiding in caves that had been dug for protection, and hence could not be found by militia to be rescued. Two privates did rescue some women and children. Stories of this work proves them to be heroes. Naturally all blame is placed on militia, but this does not seem reasonable, for there were but small number of militia and large number of strikers. Reported to-night strikers from Fremont would march to Ludlow to aid those there. Also strikers from northern territory would come down to help. Militiaman wounded was refused admission to sisters' hospital, Trinidad, because they feared to have soldiers in building. All quiet at this hour—Trinidad, also Ludlow. Machine guns were not taken to Ludlow until afternoon, when Linderfelt continued call for reenforcements; caused number men to leave Trinidad, taking number of field arms with them. Rumors of all kinds are coming in, but statements herein are as near correct as we can gather and by carefully checking up each rumor. Trinidad just informs me things quiet there to-night. Meeting of citizens was held in Trinidad Commerce Club this evening and the men pledged their support to sheriff to maintain order. Situation, I am advised, more intense than when strike first called. If further information wanted to-morrow advise. Use Postal wires when possible. Report, which is neither confirmed or denied, is that Lawson is now camped with strikers in the hills.

FRED MARVIN,
Editor Pueblo Chieftain, Pueblo, Colo.

—

DENVER, COLO., April 21, 1914.

Ludlow tent colony, which housed 1,200 Colorado striking coal miners, burned to ground after four men, three women, and seven children were murdered. One hundred and fifty gunmen in militiamen's uniform and with State equipment have, with six machine guns, kept up constant attack on men, women, and children since daybreak Monday morning. Indications are that mine guards intend to murder all strikers who refuse to go to work at company's terms. One boy, 11, murdered when he ran to get drink of water for mother, who had lain in cellar. Four other children, 7 to 11, driven back by bullets of uniformed gunmen into blazing tents, burned to death. Gunmen guard all roads. Passengers on trains say 15 to 20 men and women are lying on prairies in ruins of tent colony. Society women offer to nurse injured men, women, and babes, but are refused. Score more women and children probably smothered or murdered in most terrible massacre in American industrial history. Water supply cut off early Monday. Women and babes forced to lie in ditches and cellars 24 hours without food or water. Murderous guards are keeping up attack on men and all may be slaughtered. Will you, for God's sake and in the name of humanity, call upon all your citizenship to demand of the President of the United States and both Houses of Congress that they leave Mexico alone and come into Colorado to relieve these miners, their wives and children, who are being slaughtered by the dozen by murderous mine guards.

(Signed) E. L. DOYLE,
Secretary-Treasurer,
District 15, United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on this same subject.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I would like unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put these one at a time. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request, to follow the gentleman from Colorado.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to print in the RECORD telegrams from one of the officials of the United Mine Workers and the Trinidad Advertiser in reference to the sad and deplorable affair in Colorado on last Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print certain telegrams in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegrams are as follows:

DENVER, COLO., April 21, 1914.

Hon. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Striking miners and families shot and burned to death at Ludlow, Colo. Mine guards with machine guns riddled tents of striking miners and set fire to tent colony. Four men, three women, and seven children murdered. State not only fails to protect but allows uniforms and ammunition of the Commonwealth to destroy the lives of the workers and their families. We shall be compelled to call on volunteers in the name of humanity to defend these helpless people unless something is done.

E. L. DOYLE,
Secretary-Treasurer United Mine Workers of America.

—

TRINIDAD, COLO., April 21, 1914.

R. W. AUSTIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Reports as sent out by United Mine Workers' officials as to battle Monday absolutely without foundation of fact. The death of 11 children, 2 women, and others was the fault of John R. Lawson. These women and children were held in tent colony and used as a defense, and fire was started in colony by the strikers themselves. In Lawson's tent was more than 20,000 rounds of cartridges and quantity of dynamite, which was the direct cause of burning of colony. Fight caused by attack on militia by Louie the Greek and followers. Lawson had prevailed on governor to take troops from district, and as soon as movement was complete battle was begun. Trinidad is victim of betrayal, and strikers trying to make capital out of defeat. Strikers numbered 400 in battle, while only 79 militia were engaged. We deplore the result, but it was inevitable, as it was planned by the leaders of the United Mine Workers of America, and in their defeat they are now trying to make capital out of the fact that they sacrificed the lives of women and children.

TRINIDAD ADVERTISER.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the country has been shocked by the atrocious conditions that exist in the coal-mining districts of Colorado. During the period the unfortunate conditions have existed there I have been in receipt almost daily of appeals for the protection of the constitutional rights of citizens in that State. I had hoped when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], chairman of the investigating committee, took the floor this morning that he would make some suggestion that might be pursued by the Federal authorities to guarantee the constitutional rights of the miners. I now ask the gentleman from Illinois, as chairman of that committee, who is familiar with the conditions there, if he will not offer a resolution in this House directing the President of the United States to take such steps as may be necessary to protect citizens in the State of Colorado within that mining district, who are now without protection? If State authority is powerless, and it appears to be, the Federal authority should act through the Executive. I am fearing the attorneys for the miners are perhaps overlooking the constitutional rights of their clients.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Kansas think the State authorities are unequal to the occasion?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It seems so. In any event, the lives and liberties of people, the right to the protection of the tents which they call their homes, have been ignored. They have not had the protection that we have boasted surrounds every man in the Republic, and, being denied this protection, it seems to me that some steps should now be taken, not by the way of investigation, for we have had investigation enough, but by proper Executive action that will result in giving the people affected all the guaranties of the Constitution.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr FORDNEY. Has the gentleman any information as to whether the militia or the miners are responsible for this riot? I would like to know which side is responsible.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know who is primarily responsible for the trouble.

Mr. FORDNEY. Until the information is given, does not the gentleman think it wise that some one should get definite information before ordering the Federal Government to take action?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We have had complaints of these conditions for months. We authorized an investigation by a committee of this House. That committee has made its investigation, and so far we are not informed as to who is in the right or who is in the wrong with regard to each particular incident that results seriously.

Mr. FORDNEY. They have not investigated this incident.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They have not investigated this particular one, but they have investigated the conditions there, made up of other incidents similar to this, running through a long period of time, but have not reported.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman ought not to complain of the Executive, when the committee of the House of Representatives has not made its report. If the committee has not made its report and we think they are negligent, it is our business to instruct them to make the report.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I am asking the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], chairman of the committee, if he will not, with the information that he has, if it is justified, appeal to the executive authorities to take such steps as are necessary to protect the constitutional rights of these citizens.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I will say this to the gentleman: That, so far as I am concerned, I have endeavored as best I could to get this matter before the House at as early a date as it is possible to do, but the gentleman realizes that the printing of a large amount of testimony and the filing of briefs take some little time. The committee has done the very best that it could. I want to say to the gentleman that, so far as I am individually concerned, I expect to urge such action to be taken, if necessary, by the Federal authorities as will give protection, in so far as we are able to do it, to these unfortunate, innocent, and helpless people.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], as chairman of that committee, and that the committee itself have been doing everything within their power, and I made the suggestion I have now made in the hope that the gentleman from Illinois and his committee might feel justified in offering the sort of resolution to which I have referred, even before the report is made. Will the gentleman under the circumstances make the request to the Executive I have suggested?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that I appreciate his position just as much as anyone in this House, and I want to assure him that, so far as I am concerned, I shall do everything that is possible, and I believe the committee feel the same way about it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. With the gentleman's permission, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois one question. Until the gentleman's committee submits a report to this House, does the gentleman from Illinois doubt the committee's authority to continue its investigation?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the committee has that authority.

Mr. COOPER. Very well. Then, is not this killing of 11 women and 2 children, the killing of miners and the killing of militiamen in what was a serious battle, worthy of the immediate and searching attention of the committee?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that that is true.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative from the State of Colorado, I deeply deplore the recital which has been made to the House this morning by the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining concerning the riot which took place in the southern Colorado coal fields last Monday. It is the outgrowth of a condition which has been growing more acute and difficult for the past six months. Our State, unfortunately, has passed through several periods of industrial disturbance, and we have a record of controversies between the forces of capital and labor which has made a deep and lasting impression upon the minds of our citizens. There does not seem to be any power resident in the legislative bodies of this country, either Federal or State, to bring about the settlement of these disputes through process of law without resort to bloodshed and riot. During the time of the great Cripple Creek strike there were conditions unparalleled in the history of industrial warfare in this country. The constitutional rights of citizens were usurped and invaded. Many citizens were taken from their homes, placed in railroad cars, and deported from the State by action of the military authorities. The delays and intricacies of legal procedure were invoked against them, and there seemed to be an absolute paralysis of every form of judicial process that is ordinarily available to the individual to secure his rights. Our State has been left with a legacy of debt and an experience which has made her recognized in the Nation as having been the theater of most cruel and deplorable industrial disputes.

One of the difficulties confronting the State when her military power is invoked is that which arises from the condition of the State treasury. The militia can not be put into the field until the governor is provided with means necessary to support and equip it. He is therefore obliged to make some arrangement with the banking and moneyed interests of the State to secure funds in order to meet these expenses.

The result is that while the armed forces of the State are called out to preserve law and order, and to see that individual rights and property are respected, they are looked upon indirectly as the employed agents and allies of one of the parties to the dispute. This trouble all arises, in my judgment, from the fact that when you employ an armed force to preserve law and order in an industrial dispute you immediately provoke conditions such as have arisen in Colorado and elsewhere, especially where such a force is maintained through agencies more or less in sympathy with one of the parties to the controversy. I am not so much concerned for the present, although I deeply deplore and regret the occurrence of last Monday, as I am for the future, because this dispute, which in the beginning only affected a limited number of corporations and their employees, is spreading out and reaching into every community and hamlet in the State; men's passions are being aroused, and there is an alignment throughout the State on one side or the other of this controversy. I am informed by telegraphic messages to-day that armed men are being sent into the region where rioting has occurred, and that serious trouble involving a further loss of life is threatened. I hope that the committee authorized by the House will not merely devote itself to a recital of facts in this controversy, but that it will present to Congress some legislative remedy that will give to the people of this country relief from strike conditions, which rest most heavily and severely upon those who are disinterested and have no direct connection with these unfortunate controversies.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has made a very startling statement. Does the gentleman want to leave the impression on the House and the country that the governor of the State of Colorado sends the militia with the end in view of taking either one side or the other of the controversy, instead of the preservation of the law?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I do not, Mr. Speaker; and I want to say this——

Mr. MADDEN. That is the only deduction that can be made from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE (continuing). That the governor of the State, when appealed to by the citizens of the State whose property is in danger or whose lives are in jeopardy, must recognize the power that rests with himself and call out the militia. When the civil authorities say that they can not control the situation and that they must have the militia, the governor is bound to recognize the plea. When he looks into the treasury of the State and finds himself unable to secure funds there to pay the militia, feed, clothe, and equip it, and when he is obliged to intercede with the clearing houses of the State to find the money to pay these expenses, does the gentleman believe that men sent into the field under those conditions would be able to exercise that same independence of action that they could if the obligation on the part of the State to private moneyed interests did not exist?

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not the governor call the legislature in special session and make an appropriation to cover the needs of the case?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have his time extended for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may have his time extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I do not desire any further time, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, in order to answer a question.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I will be glad to answer any questions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated a very extraordinary situation as existing in Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado why it is that the governor of the State does not call the legislature in special session, when an extraordinary situation like this exists, for the purpose of making appropriations that will enable him to perform his duty?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I presume, Mr. Speaker, that the committee of investigation, having had the governor before it, would have asked him that question. I am not in any position to answer for him. I am simply stating to the House the condition which exists in Colorado and giving my conclusions from the facts as I know them in reference to the resources available for the pay and compensation of the militia.

Mr. GORMAN. Does the gentleman happen to know what security the governor pledges for these loans he makes?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. The auditor of state issues certificates of indebtedness upon vouchers approved by the military board, of which the governor is an ex officio member. The governor is charged by the constitution which he is sworn to support to maintain and enforce the laws of the State and to protect the lives and property of her citizens. He is authorized to call out the militia when a state of insurrection exists, and the constitution provides for the issuance of these certificates of indebtedness, which are not a lien on the State treasury until the legislature has provided for their payment, either by direct appropriation, if there be money available, or through the sale of bonds. It will thus be evident that they are not securities of a class that will find ready sale in financial markets and are only evidences of indebtedness constituting no legal claim against the State government until the legislature has recognized them as above indicated. It will thus be understood why the governor is obliged, if he acts under constitutional authority, to look to private sources for means whereby he can hypothecate these certificates. It is true that he could call the legislature together and request it to assume the responsibility of providing funds for immediate use. But conditions develop very suddenly, and the executive is confronted sometimes with situations which will not permit of delay, and the constitution of the State has recognized the probability of sudden emergencies requiring executive action by providing the means above indicated for meeting these extraordinary conditions.

Mr. MADDEN. That is due to the fact that they have had a very bad government in Colorado and an extravagant expenditure of public funds which made it necessary to overtax the people of Colorado until they are overloaded with indebtedness so nobody wants to buy their paper. Is not that true?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. The people of Colorado, Mr. Speaker, are suffering, in my judgment, from the fact that the representatives of the people, both in the State and the Federal branches of the Government, have not given the people some remedy by which these disputes may be settled without bloodshed and riot. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in closing let me say that Colorado is not alone in her suffering. The same conditions that exist in her borders to-day may arise in other States to-morrow. We can not build up our industrial system or enlarge our commercial activities on lines which recognize physical force as the only effective remedy in the settlement of disputes between the employer and the employee. There must be found some peaceful and accepted agency which will operate to adjust these controversies. With all our boasted civilization, with all the advantages of free government, and with our recognized adherence to the religion of Jesus Christ, with the Golden Rule as its greatest principle controlling the relation of man with man, must we confess that we are unable to find any means available either in society or government that will provide for a just and equitable settlement of industrial disputes or must we still leave these controversies to be fought out on lines of selfishness and cruelty? Colorado is a magnificent State. Her natural resources are unlimited in value and variety; her people are patriotic and intelligent. They are devoted to building up communities of culture and good order. They have overcome many obstacles in the way of material development, and they have reached out to secure for themselves every advantage of free and popular government. May the day soon come when the clouds of industrial conflict which now darken and obscure her sky and which have brought so much of havoc and devastation in their course will pass away and allow the light and blessing of industrial peace and contentment to abide in every portion of our beloved Commonwealth.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I arise to pay tribute to the heroism of George Poinsett, of Philadelphia, a seaman on the Florida, who went to his death yesterday under orders to take the customhouse at Vera Cruz, Mexico. [Applause.] The bulletin just issued by the Navy Department announcing the death of Poinsett and three others is meager as to details, but we are led to believe that they were fired upon by the Mexican troops while defending their position. I shall attach to these remarks the full statement authorized this morning by the Navy Department with respect to the deaths and casualties resulting from this first clash of arms between the forces of the United States and Mexico. It is not my purpose now to dwell upon the causes leading up to this unfortunate condition presaging war. That matter was disposed of by the President of the United States, and Congress has voted to sustain this action.

Whether we have entered upon this war wisely or unwisely we have at least demonstrated our wisdom as a nation in being prepared for war. In such a crisis we must look to our Army and to our Navy; to our battleships and to our guns; to our navy yards and to our recruiting stations. These we must have and maintain in times of peace as in times of war.

Deploring war, as we do, we must yet find the men to go to war when our safety, our dignity, or our honor as a people are at stake. We must have a Dewey for Manila, a Sampson, a Schley, and a Hobson for Santiago [applause], but in addition to these, farther along in the ranks, we must have a Worth Bagley, the ensign—first to fall in the Spanish-American war—and a George Poinsett, the seaman, to sacrifice his life for us if need be.

This, Mr. Speaker, is my reason for paying tribute to the young Philadelphian who was of the first four to fall yesterday in the service of his country in a war the consequences of which we can not see.

Mr. Speaker, what manner of man was this George Poinsett? He had not yet reached the age of maturity; he had gone but 10 days beyond his twentieth birthday. This was the American seaman, the American patriot, who, when this great Congress of the United States was deliberating upon a message of the President and every nation of the world was watching the outcome of that deliberation with the keenest interest, went forward, under orders, representative of our country, and in defense of our flag, to lay down his promising young life.

George Poinsett, Philadelphian, enlisted as an apprentice seaman at the age of 17 years, thus responded to the call of duty. It was a manifestation, Mr. Speaker, of that spirit of patriotism and loyalty which has always typified the youth of this country when honor is at stake and duty calls. George Poinsett would have been entitled to an honorable discharge after faithful service in the Navy in June of next year.

The discharge has come prematurely, but with higher honor than any formal certificate. It involves alike the pain and the glory of martial life.

A father, who nearly three years ago yielded to his boy's desire to serve his country, has been bereft of a loved one, but the Nation has added the name of that son to its roll of heroes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, of John F. Schumacher, coxswain, of Brooklyn; of George Poinsett, seaman, of Philadelphia; of Daniel Aloysius Haggerty, private in the Marine Corps, of Cambridge, Mass.; and of another hero killed in the service whose name has not yet been ascertained; and of those who were with them in this first letting of the blood of war, may we not say as Tennyson said of the Light Brigade—

Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die.

[Long applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the Navy Department Bulletin No. 9, to which I referred, is as follows:

BULLETIN No. 9.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The news dispatches give the following as among those killed and injured at Vera Cruz:

KILLED.

Coxswain John F. Schumacher, of the Florida; home address, 161 Harmon Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.; born December 5, 1880; next of kin, Isabella McKinnon, mother, same address; enlisted November, 1907; reenlisted 1910; recently transferred from the Wheeling to the Florida.

George Poinsett, seaman; next of kin, William Poinsett, father, 5321 North Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.; enlisted, Philadelphia, 1911; attached to Florida.

Daniel Aloysius Haggerty, private, Marine Corps, Eighth Company, Second Regiment, advance base; next of kin, Michael Haggerty, 16 Harding Street, Cambridge, Mass.; enlisted July 4, 1906; last recorded as attached to the Utah.

WOUNDED.

Charles J. Leahy, ordinary seaman, assigned to the Florida; home address, 332 East Ninetieth Street, New York City; next of kin, Nellie Leahy, mother, same address; enlisted 1912.

Nathan Schwartz, ordinary seaman; home address, 223 East Fourth Street, New York City; next of kin, Harry Schwartz, brother, same address; enlisted September, 1912, and serving his first duty at sea.

C. D. Cameron, ordinary seaman; home address, 108 Doscher Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.; next of kin, Donald Cameron, father, same address. Cameron was assigned to the Florida; enlisted June 3, 1913.

John F. Place, seaman; home address, 134 Wakeman Avenue, Newark, N. J.; next of kin, Anna Place, same address; enlisted 1911; assigned to the Florida.

Edward A. Gisburne, electrician, third class; home address, 54 Summer Street, Quincy, Mass.; next of kin, John R. Gisburne, grandfather, 1932 Seventeenth Street, Washington, D. C.; enlisted 1910.

No information has been received at the Navy Department to verify this list, and the department has no knowledge at 11.30 of its accuracy.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the deplorable occurrences in southern Colorado to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has called our attention present a situation which appeals very strongly to our sympathies and to our sense of justice. The newspaper reports and dispatches vary in their statement of what occurrred at Ludlow and as to the number of persons killed or injured; but this, at least, is certain, that a considerable number of defenseless women and children lost their lives under circumstances most frightful and appalling. It is important that we shall know, and know quickly, who is responsible for this frightful occurrence, to the end that justice may be done and such heart-rending occurrences may be prevented in the future. Our hearts go out in sympathy to those who have lost wives and children, and our duty is to do everything within our power to remedy conditions which make such awful tragedies possible. I hope that the committee presided over by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], which recently investigated matters in this district, may give prompt consideration to this awful tragedy and promptly take or recommend to the House such action as may be proper. I shall place in the RECORD four telegrams I have received in regard to this lamentable occurrence:

CHEYENNE, WYO., April 21, 1914.

Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL,
2011 Park Road, Washington, D. C.:

Six men and 6 women and more than 15 children murdered by coal-company gunmen at Ludlow, Colo., strike field yesterday. Thugs uniformed as State militiamen. Union labor of Wyoming demands Federal protection of the defenseless strikers and families of Colorado. Please urge this protection at once.

WYOMING WEEKLY LABOR JOURNAL,
By H. R. SCHNEIDER.

CHEYENNE, WYO., April 21, 1914.

Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL,
2011 Park Road, Washington, D. C.:

Following telegram received from Colorado striking miners: "Wives and children murdered by coal-company guards at Ludlow, Colo. Tent colony burned to ground. Five men, four women, and at least five children killed."

In the name of humanity we demand that the Federal Government protect the miners of Colorado and their wives and children.

JAMES MORGAN,
Secretary Wyoming Union Miners.

CAMBRIA, WYO., April 21, 1914.

Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL,
Washington, D. C.:

We demand protection for the miners, their wives, and families in Colorado. Fourteen miners, women, and children killed by mine guards at Ludlow, Colo., yesterday.

This by order of Local Union No. 2532, United Mine Workers of America.

JOHN R. JONES,
Financial Secretary.

KIRBY, WYO., April 21, 1914.

Hon. F. W. MONDELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

The miners of subdistrict No. 1 of district No. 22 request you to use your influence to afford protection for the striking miners and their families in Colorado against the mine guards and hired thugs there.

GEO. FRISKEL,
Board Member of Subdistrict No. 1, District 22.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker [applause], I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes apropos of the death of these privates.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes after Mr. KINDEL has his five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to include a request for three minutes on a similar subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] addressing the House for five minutes after the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] concludes?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object to these requests, and yet it seems to me in course of time we ought to reach the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Speaker, I am grieved to learn what has happened in Colorado and to have to come up here before you to launder our linen, so to speak. I have been a resident of the State of Colorado since 1877. I have been in the manufacturing business since 1878. I know much of the industrial conditions prevailing in our State. We brought about woman suffrage in 1893; we have acquired the initiative and referendum and recall; we have a Democratic governor, State, city, and county officers, and we have a Democratic set of Congressmen and Senators, a Democratic Congress, and a Democratic President.

Mr. MANN. That will soon be over. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINDEL. That will soon be over if we do not improve conditions.

The question at issue in Colorado is not the question of wage, because the mine owners are paying higher wages than anywhere east of the one hundred and fifth meridian. There is only one State—the State of Wyoming—that is paying higher wages than we are.

Now, I am not here to defend the mine owners. They have done many things in the past that they should be ashamed of. But since we have a Democratic governor and have a Democratic force in control the question with me is why we do not make them enforce the law and get things right? Our State is practically bankrupt. And why? First, I contend that the labor condition is one of the serious things, inasmuch as the labor unions will make you employ a union force, and to-day if you want to operate a mine you have got to have every man join a union, pay $10 initiation and $1 per month at the end of the month to the treasurer of the union, or you can not operate. It is not a question of wage, but a question of unionism.

I heard the interrogations that were put to Mr. Rockefeller, jr., the other day before the congressional investigating committee. I never met him before, but I was much impressed by what he had to say, namely, that he was for organization of both employers and employees, but he objected to outsiders—the Western Federation of Miners—controlling the people working within his mines.

This killing of men and destruction of property has been going on for the past six months, and our Colorado governor has very reluctantly sent the militia down in the southern coal fields of Colorado to restore order. I asked the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the congressional investigating committee [Mr. FOSTER], when making his statement a few minutes ago, how he got his information on the killing of women and children on Monday last in Colorado, because I had not heard anything beyond what I saw in the newspapers, of which the following is an account:

[From the New York Times, Wednesday, April 22, 1914.]

45 DEAD, 20 HURT, SCORE MISSING, IN STRIKE WAR—WOMEN AND CHILDREN ROASTED IN PITS OF TENT COLONY AS FLAMES DESTROY IT—HID FROM HAIL OF BULLETS—MINERS' STORE OF AMMUNITION AND DYNAMITE EXPLODED. SCATTERING DEATH AND RUIN—TO RESUME BATTLE TO-DAY—MEN FROM OTHER UNION CAMPS JOIN FIGHTERS IN HILLS TO AVENGE THEIR SLAIN—MILITIA TROOP HEMMED IN—DECISIVE ENGAGEMENT PLANNED BY THE SOLDIERS, WHO ARE PREPARING A MACHINE-GUN SORTIE.

TRINIDAD, COLO., April 21.

Forty-five dead, more than two-thirds of them women and children, a score missing, and more than a score wounded is the result known to-night of the 14-hour battle which raged with uninterrupted fury yesterday between State troops and striking coal miners in the Ludlow district on the property of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., the Rockefeller holdings.

The Ludlow camp is a mass of charred débris, and buried beneath it is a story of horror unparalleled in the history of industrial warfare. In the holes which had been dug for their protection against the rifles' fire the women and children died like trapped rats when the flames swept over them. One pit, uncovered this afternoon, disclosed the bodies of 10 children and 2 women. Further exploration was forbidden by the position of the camp, which lies directly between the militia and the strikers' positions.

TO RESUME BATTLE AT DAWN.

With arms ready, both sides after a day of ominous quiet, now await the coming of dawn, when, it is predicted, the battle will be resumed with greater bloodshed than that which has occurred. The militia, which yesterday drove the strikers from their tent colony and, it is charged, fired it, involving thereby the greatest loss of lives, are preparing for a machine-gun sortie at daybreak from their position along the Colorado & Southern Railroad tracks at each side of the Ludlow Station.

On the surrounding hills, sheltered by rocks and bowlders, 400 strikers await their coming, while their ranks are being swelled by grim-faced men who tramped overland in the dark, carrying guns and ammunition from the neighboring union camps.

Italian, Greek, and Austrian miners have appealed to their consular representatives for protection, and John McLennan, president of the local union district, wired the Red Cross in Denver to-day to be prepared to render aid.

On the outcome of the engagement to-morrow may depend the fate of the strike. Both sides face it as a battle to the death, with no thought of quarter asked or received. At a late hour it was said here that the battle could only be averted by the arrival of overwhelming reenforcements for the troops of Denver.

No train service through the war zone is permitted. A command of the troops is hemmed in on all sides by the strikers' lines, which extend back 3 miles. Through this cordon only the dead wagon is allowed to pass.

In Trinidad the situation is no less acute. Men throng the streets about the union headquarters and demand guns with which to work vengeance upon the militia, whom they hold responsible for the destruction of their homes and the death of their women and children.

BATTLE OVER 3-MILE AREA.

Throughout the day yesterday and intermittently during the night the fighting raged over an area of approximately 3 square miles, bounded on the west by Berwind and Hastings, on the east by Barnes Station, on the north by the Ludlow tent colony, and on the south by Rameyville. The battle field was completely isolated by the cutting of telegraph and telephone wires.

Within the doomed camp last night explosions of cartridges which had been stored there by the miners added to the horror of the flames which swept over it amid a hail of lead with which the soldiers raked the tents.

An unidentified man driving a horse attached to a light buggy dashed from the tents waving a white flag, just after the fire started. When ordered to halt he opened fire with a revolver and was killed by a return volley from the militia.

Terrified by the bullets which whistled through the blazing canvases above their heads, the women and children apparently more afraid of the lead than the flames, remained huddled in their pits until the smoke and heat carried death to them.

Some braver than the rest ran into the open and dashed aimlessly among the 200 tents, which by that time had become so many torches which swirled their fire and sparks and lighted the scene with ghastly brilliancy.

STORE OF DYNAMITE BLOWS UP.

Two women dashed toward the militia position.

"Dynamite," they screamed.

An instant later the ammunition remaining in the camp exploded, sending a shower of lead in all directions.

A 7-year-old girl dashed from under a blazing tent and heard the scream of bullets about her ears. Insane from fright, she ran into a tent again and fell into the hole with the remainder of her family to die with them. The child is said to have been a daughter of Charles Costa, a union leader at Aguilar, who perished with his wife and another child.

Instances of individual heroism were numerous. James Fyler, financial secretary of the Trinidad local union and a witness in the recent congressional investigation, died with a bullet in his forehead, as he was attempting to rescue his wife from the flames.

A bystander, Premo Larsie, 18, son of Louis Larsie, a Trinidad brewery worker, was among the first to fall. On his way from Ludlow to Hastings to visit a friend he paused to witness the encounter, which had just started. A bullet struck him in the head.

Lewis Tikas, leader of the Greek colony and one of the most prominent organizers in the district, was shot as he attempted to lead a group of women away from the camp in the direction of an arroyo which offered shelter. According to witnesses of his death, Tikas threw up his arms to show that he carried no weapons. The troopers yelled at him to run, and shot him as he fled.

In an effort to rescue his sister from danger, Frank Snyder, 10 years old, son of William Snyder, a striker, met death in the colony later in the afternoon. The girl ventured from the pit where the family had taken refuge. The boy jumped out to draw her back and a bullet struck him in the back of the head, killing him instantly.

When it appeared that no more men remained in the colony, the militia ceased its fire and went to the work of rescue. Women ran from the burning tents, some with their clothing afire, carrying their babies in their arms. Many, in order to save the babies at their breasts, were forced to abandon their older children to their fate. Among these was Mrs. Marcelina Pedragon. With her light skirt ablaze in several places she carried her youngest child to the open, but left two others behind. Hope for them has been abandoned.

Trembling, hysterical, some apparently dazed, the women were escorted by the troops to the Ludlow, where they were held until this morning, when a Colorado & Southern train brought them into Trinidad. In the haste of departure families became separated. Efforts to unite them by the United Mine Workers in many instances proved in vain.

The camp was abandoned to its fate following the departure of the women, and for hours the light of the fire lit the sky a bright red. By its light the strikers retreated to the arroyas back of the colony and to the surrounding hills. The camp fell at 8.30, just 14 hours after the fight commenced.

DENIES SOLDIERS FIRED THE CAMP.

Maj. Harock denied to-night that his men had started the conflagration.

"It started spontaneously, apparently, from the west end of the camp and spread through the flimsy structures like wildfire. When that occurred, my men were at quite a distance and could have had nothing whatsoever to do with it."

He placed the responsibility for the opening of the engagement upon the strikers, who, he said, fired first upon the militia encampment from the hills. This was denied at union headquarters, where it was said the militia opened hostilities with the machine guns.

The first wagonload of five bodies was brought in late this afternoon and a second wagonload is expected to-night. Among the bodies is that of Private Martin, of Company A. Officers of the militia charge that, though merely wounded in the neck, Martin, who lay where the strikers subsequently passed by him, was shot in the side of the head and through the mouth as he lay wounded on the ground. The charge is denied by officials of the union.

Trinidad is horror-stricken by reports of the number of women, children, and noncombatants who lost their lives in the fight and in the fire that followed.

"It is horrible," said John McLennan, president of District No. 15 of the United Mine Workers of America, who is in charge at local headquarters. "They were trapped without a chance of escape. The bodies of 2 women and 10 children were seen in one trench, it was announced at the Ludlow military camp to-night. God only knows how many yet will be found."

More than 200 women and children refugees from the burned colony are being cared for in Trinidad. The hall of the Trinidad Trades Assembly has been turned into a temporary dormitory and hospital. Many are suffering from burns and injuries. Food and bedding is being provided by the union.

—

TWENTY-SIX BODIES RECOVERED.

DENVER, April 21.

Representatives of the American Red Cross in Trinidad reported to Dr. S. P. Morris, director of the Red Cross, in Denver to-night that 26 bodies of strikers already had been recovered by the Red Cross at Ludlow.

Three hundred strikers fully armed to-night marched from Fremont County tent colonies to Ludlow to aid their fellows in their fight against the militia, according to a statement given out at union headquarters here. Men of the Leyden colony near Denver are making ready to go to Trinidad, it is reported.

E. F. Doyle, secretary and treasurer of District 15, United Mine Workers of America, sent the following telegram to-day to President Wilson, Colorado's Senators and Representatives, and members of the House committee which investigated the Colorado strike:

"Striking miners and families shot and burned to death at Ludlow, Colo. Mine guards with machine guns riddled tents of striking miners and set fire to tent colony. Four men, three women and seven children murdered. State not only fails to protest, but uses uniforms and ammunition of the Commonwealth to destroy the lives of the workers and their families. We shall be compelled to call on volunteers in the name of humanity to defend these helpless persons unless something is done. Tent colony burned to the ground."

A message also was sent to John P. White, international president of the union, asking him to urge President Wilson "to use his power to protect helpless men, women, and children from being slaughtered in southern Colorado."

In addition, messages were sent to 500 editors throughout the country and to the local unions in Colorado.

There will have to be some relief somehow. The people of Colorado are in an awful strait. The situation not only affects all the mines but every business of every kind. And on top of all this we have been cursed with railroad discrimination of every kind and character as no other State in the Union has. We have had woolen mills, cotton mills, and all other manner of mills fall by the wayside, and now dismantled, all because of the discriminations in transportation rates and arbitrary and unjust demands of labor unions. And not only suffered by discrimination by the railroads but by our governmental parcels post as well. [Laughter.] To-day if you want to ship a 20-pound package from Washington to Colorado you find that you can not do it by parcel post because of the prohibitory rate of $2.01, as against $1.25 by express. It is a great question to go into, and I do not want to do so now, in the limited time allotted me, except to touch on the influences that are hurting my State and section. The people of Colorado, as a rule, are praying for peace and a square deal, and if the miners or the labor "skates" will keep away it will improve matters in Colorado. I understand, by the way, that Mother Jones is going to be here to-morrow. She is the woman who in open meeting in Denver said she was going to hang me [laughter] because I, forsooth, had the courage to say what I thought of her and her kind. If the good people of Colorado would but assert themselves, you will find our State is the equal of any in the Union in the matter of sunshine, scenery, and resources. What is wanted most is men. Therefore I conclude with Holland's famous lines:

God give us men. The time demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and willing hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office can not buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And dam his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Speaker, may I have the same permission?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to add my word of tribute to the memory of the men, the plain privates, who fell yesterday—the first bloodshed in this trouble.

I had the honor of serving with the plain private for 18 years. I remember well how I was first impressed as to the character and spirit of the plain private. It was on a cruise. A gale had been blowing for 48 hours and the sea was running high. The midshipmen on deck were sent over the masthead. They were all seasick, and it was thought that it would help them out to give them a little exercise, so the officer of the deck ordered them over the masthead. He did not think to warn them not to come down on the lee side, which you should never do in a gale of wind. You ought to go up on the weather side and come down on the weather side. But the order was given for the midshipmen to go over the masthead. They promptly did so, and half of them had not gotten over the crosstrees when, as the ship lurched, one of them—a nephew of Admiral Schley, a classmate of mine—lost his hold and fell. He struck the topsail yard and went overboard. A heavy sea was running. Promptly the lifeboat was called away. The crew responded. They were scarcely half lowered when the sea, which was running very heavy, threw the boat keel up and down, hurling the crew into the sea.

There was but little chance of launching a boat and but little chance of a boat living in such a sea. But the second lifeboat was called away. I never forgot the promptness, the agility, even the light-hearted way in which the second boat crew manned their boat and put off into the sea to try to save their comrades, knowing full well how meager were their own chances of ever getting back.

I have seen seamen, plain seamen, jump overboard to save a comrade, so many of them that the officer of the deck had to order that no more should go overboard—a superfluity exposing their own lives to try to save a comrade.

That was my first introduction to the spirit of this plain private. And remember, gentlemen, they are really nothing but boys. The average age in the fleet that is off the coast of Mexico to-day is 21 years.

Perhaps I ought to give another, a personal tribute to this plain private. A matter came up—a little incident; a little expedition—in my day. Being a naval constructor, knowing how to build ships, I naturally knew how to sink ships. The question of sinking a ship came up, and naturally I wanted to be associated with it. Seven men were wanted, and Admiral Sampson issued a call for seven men. The call was issued by signal from the flagship, and more than a thousand responded. [Applause.]

The main trouble I had from that time to the time we started in was in refusing the appeals of men—some who had been my old shipmates, pleading with me on personal grounds, others on other grounds, all begging me to let them go in. Yes, young Poinsett and his comrades, who so gladly gave up their young lives yesterday, make me think of those seven men as they lay with me on the deck as the ship was slowly sinking. Only two torpedoes went off. We had 10, but the wiring and the batteries connected with the others had been broken and cut away and crushed before the time came to fire them. Only two went off. So we went down slowly right under the muzzles of their cannon. The original plan was that after firing the torpedoes we would quickly get away from the ship in the lifeboat and thus try to escape; but the lifeboat was shot away, and I changed my plan entirely, but did not explain it to them.

Well do I remember those seven men there. Shell followed shell, tearing everything to pieces above us, below us, on both sides of us. My men would say, "Now, can we be off?" I would say, "No; no man move until further orders." When the boiler went up they said, "Can we go?" I said, "No man will move until further orders." At last the ship gave a lurch, just before she was going down, and heaved as though she would turn over on us, and we heard the gurgling and the rushing sound of the whirlpool approaching, and they said, "Can we get off now?" And I said, "No; stay with me." And they stayed with me, gentlemen, every last one of them, and went down with me, no man knowing whether he would ever come up again. [Applause.]

Now, I have another little memory—an aftermath thought that comes up. By 11 o'clock that day we were in the Morro. All the men were in one cell—seven men in one dark cell. I knew it was a question of their health, and I called upon the commandant to let one of them come to me for instructions about taking care of their health. They sent Charette. After he got his instructions he put his heels together and saluted and said, "Sir, the men asked me to bring you a message." It looked as though they were getting ready to execute us. Everything looked that way. There was that one chance to send me a message. What do you suppose that message was?

I will not describe how we had stayed in the water after we came up, clinging to the edges of an old raft, with our bodies submerged, hiding as the Spaniards in launches closed in around us. My men knew they would kill us if they discovered us. For hours we remained. Again and again the men wanted to dive and swim away, each one for himself, but I would not consent, but just told them to stand by me, and they stayed. Now, you would think that a man once going through an experience like that would never want to go into it again. The message they sent to me was this—I can see Charette, with his heels together, as he said: "Sir, the men asked me to tell you that they would go in with you again to-night." [Applause.]

Gentlemen, we have just taken great responsibility upon us here in this Congress. I know the responsibility weighs heavily upon each one of you; but I want to tell you from my own personal knowledge that the confidence you have placed in the plain private, who represents the plain, average American citizen, out there at the front, where the drum is beating, the flag is flying, and the thunder is in the air—the confidence, however great, you have placed in them and in the officers that command them, will not be misplaced. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on the eve of this great crisis, and following the eloquent tributes that have been paid here by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] to the men who must bear the burden of war, I think it is only right that they should be followed in the RECORD by a tribute from Edgar A. Guest, Michigan's "Poet of Sentiment," to another class who must likewise bear its burdens—the mothers and wives. I read:

MOTHERS AND WIVES.

[By Edgar A. Guest.]

Mothers and wives, 'tis the call to arms
That the bugler yonder prepares to sound;
We stand on the brink of war's alarms,
And your men may lie on a blood-stained ground.
The drums may play and the flags may fly,
And our boys may don the brown and blue,
And the call that summons brave men to die
Is the call for glorious women, too.

Mothers and wives, if the summons comes,
You, as ever since war has been,
Must hear with courage the rolling drums
And dry your tears when the flags are seen.

For never has hero fought and died
Who has braver been than the mother who Buckled his saber at his side
And sent him forward to dare and do.

Mothers and wives, should the call ring out,
It is you must answer your country's cry;
You must furnish brave hearts and stout
For the firing line where the heroes die.

And never a corpse on the field of strife
Should be honored more in his country's sight
Than the noble mother or noble wife
Who sent him forth in the cause of right.

Mothers and wives, 'tis the call for men
To give their strength and to give their lives;
But well we know such a summons then
Is the call for mothers and loyal wives.

For you must give us the strength we need;
You must give us the boys in blue;
For never a boy or a man shall bleed
But a mother or wife shall suffer, too.

LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, with Mr. RUSSELL in the chair.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill and read to the end of line 15, page 51.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reserving the right to object for a moment, I desire to ask if the further reading of the bill is dispensed with the gentleman from Louisiana intends to proceed with general debate, and after general debate is finished to proceed with the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule for amendment?

Mr. MANN. If the first reading is dispensed with, I shall raise the question of consideration in committee. If the bill should be considered in committee, there would be general debate, and after that the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the committee votes to consider the bill, I will ask the gentleman from Louisiana if he proposes to proceed with the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WATKINS. If the gentleman from Illinois will give his reasons for not considering the bill, I may be able to answer.

Mr. MANN. I do not expect to give any reasons.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as so much of the bill has been read, would not the easiest way be to proceed with it?

Mr. MANN. You are no further along after you finish the first reading than when you began. It has to be read again for amendment, and following the first reading is general debate.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then it will be read again under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the bill is read the first time for the information of the committee, and any member of the Committee of the Whole is within his rights in calling for the first reading of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. And any member of the committee is within the exercise of his rights if he calls for the enforcement of any rule of the House.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; and I have no criticism to make of the gentleman. I only raised the question to see whether the committee was willing to dispense with the further reading.

